Why, Mr. Chairman, there is no dictum of the courts better established than this: That the courts will seek, and seek earnestly, in discovering the purpose and object of a measure under discussion before them, the probable and reasonable consequences and effects of the measure under consideration. Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, certainly an undoubted authority, says this in regard to a similar proposition:

> It is of the first importance that the end which Congress has in view in enacting any law must be one for which the power was bestowed.

He says further:

> Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are proper, which are plainly adapted to that end, and which are not prohibited, but consistent with the spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

"Let the end be legitimate," says Chief Justice Marshall, laying that down as the primal requisite in this attempt to discover the object of any proposed legislation or of established legislation. What is the object of this measure now under discussion? If it be anything it is not only to restrict, but by vicious processes to absolutely prohibit a trade established by long custom, and which is and for years has been recognized by the laws of many of the sovereign States of this Union.

And further, on this constitutional point, I quote from Mr. Justice Miller in rendering the opinion of the court in the case of Morgan against Louisiana, 118 United States Reports, page 462:

> In all cases of this kind it has been repeatedly held that when the question was raised whether the State statute was a just exercise of State power or is intended as a roundabout means of invading the domain of Federal authority this court will look to the operation and effect of the act to discover its purpose.

If this bill now before the House is anything, it is a roundabout and unjustifiable effort to accomplish a result which under the Constitution could not be reached by direct means; and I, for one, can not avoid the conclusion that it was with this knowledge and with this purpose that this bill was framed by its supporters, and in this spirit the passage of the measure is being urged through the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, upon the remote supposition that this bill should be enacted into law; upon the remote supposition that it should receive Executive approval and be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States for a determination upon the question of its constitutionalty, and assuming that the court, looking into the object and purpose of this act, should say, "We are satisfied that the primary purpose of the bill was not to raise revenue; but we sustain it upon the theory that the trade of buying and selling options has been declared by Congress to have a tendency to keep down prices, and is therefore an obstruction to commerce; we sustain it under the power given to Congress by the Federal Constitution to enact laws for the regulation of commerce."

Upon the remote assumption that all these things may occur, and that that might be the solemn judgment of that august tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States, I beg to submit that the duty devolving upon us now is all the more onerous, all the more difficult, all the more delicate; because in that event we are sitting here not only as representatives in Congress but we are here in the capacity of sworn jurors, to pass, by our verdict, upon a stated question of fact. Each man is upon his oath in this matter, not alone as a member of Congress but as a juror, to try a disputed question of fact which has been presented to us through the medium of this bill.

Is it true—has it been proven, Mr. Chairman, by anything like a preponderance of testimony, that this business of buying and selling options lessens the prices of the products covered by this bill? Is the testimony sufficient to convince us as jurors, upon our oaths, that this practice of buying and selling options and futures is an interruption of or any unjust or improper interference with the interstate commerce of this country? I, for one, fail to be convinced by the proof that has been adduced before us. Have all my fellow-jurors heard or even read the testimony in this regard as adduced before the committee? Have you whom I address analyzed that testimony and separated the small grain of fact testified to from the mere opinions furnished by witnesses who have been summoned before that committee?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. That testimony has not been published.

Mr. COVERT. As is suggested by my friend from Missouri, this testimony has not even been presented to this jury, who upon their oaths are to determine this question of fact. And yet upon this lack of testimony we are called upon to declare on oath that this business is a detriment to the agricultural interests of the country, and therefore an unjust and improper interference with our interstate commerce.

In the absence of specific proof in this regard, I submit, sir, that it may be well for us to consider what may be regarded as fixed laws and established principles.

To my own mind this plain business rule seems certain and unalterable: That active trading in any article, I care not what it is, enhances rather than decreases the price of the article; that when restrictions are imposed upon trade, the risk to the purchaser will be greater and the profit to the producer will be decreased. Witnesses may be examined before committees, and committees may adopt more opinions as having the force of established facts, but this plain, absolute law of business can not, I submit, be modified or altered.

This system of dealing is one of the results of the growth of the country, and has become a necessary and important part of the business methods of our day and generation.

To fetter it with the restrictions sought to be imposed here, restrictions which amount to absolute prohibition, would in my judgment result in infinite wrong to producers and purchasers alike, and would strike a deadly blow at our interstate commercial interests.

But, sir, I must go on rapidly, because by a usurpation of authority, if I may so call it, to which I have in no sense agreed, my time has been limited.

I must pass on to the consideration of other features of the measure.

My friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] in opening the discussion on this bill, said that there were only a half dozen sections that this House needed to consider, because an inspection of those half dozen sections would reveal the whole spirit and scope of the bill, and that the other sections were merely added to carry the primary provisions of the measure into operation and effect.

Mr. Chairman, I invite the consideration of the members of this committee to these other sections of this bill. To my mind, sir, they are more important than any of the others, because these sections thus glossed over are the penal provisions of this measure. They provide the means and machinery by and through which any disobedience of this law may be met and punished by the courts of the land.

I shall not stop in this connection to criticise some of the intermediate sections of the measure, sections infinitely worse, in my humble judgment, than any provision of the income-tax feature of the tariff bill, no matter how vexatious or inquisitorial that act may be.

I refer to the sections requiring a special application and license fee, and the giving of a bond as prerequisites for engaging in this business; the affixing of revenue stamps at every stage of the most trivial transaction in the course of ordinary trade; the making of an entry in the books of the dealer, of the most trifling incident or transaction; the making of reports to the collector of internal revenue; the supervision by the collector and his underlings over the private books and papers of the citizen, and the inspection of those private books and papers at the office of the internal-revenue collector; and their subjection to the examination of any inquisitive person, whoever he may be. I denounce these provisions of this bill as undemocratic, Mr. Chairman. I denounce them as infamous in this age and in this land. I deplore the fact that a bill loaded down with iniquities like these could emanate from a Democratic source, under a Democratic Administration, in this year of grace 1894. I stand with liberty-loving citizens everywhere when I regret that a measure such as this should have even decent consideration in the halls of legislation in free America.

But as to the penalty clauses of this bill, Mr. Chairman. There is to-day pending in this House a measure introduced by my esteemed colleague [Mr. CUMMINGS], looking to the protection of native authors of dramatic compositions. Our native dramatic authors have added luster to our civilization by the production of some of the most finished and admired plays known to the stage of the civilized world.

They have vainly sought under the copyright law as it stands on the statute book for any adequate protection to their literary property. They have found by sad experience that the law as it stands is entirely inadequate to afford them relief. Their plays are pirated, and the pirates laugh at court injunctions and successfully evade the service of judicial papers forbidding their larcenous acts.

The offenders can not be punished through any method of civil procedure. They are irresponsible: they have no fixed habitat; they can not respond in money damages which may be obtained against them in a suit at law. These authors have come to the doors of this Congress asking that the work of their brains, literary property which in its own right ought to be hedged in and surrounded by all the provisions that can be made to guard and protect it, shall be shielded from bald and open larceny. They have asked us to make the unlawful piracy of their plays a misdemeanor, subjecting the offender to the possibility at the utmost, of one year's imprisonment or the payment of a moderate fine. What they ask, I submit, is only reasonable and proper. It is absolutely necessary for the protection of their property; it is but a measure of simple justice.

Mr. Chairman, that bill has been fought; it has been resisted, and will be fought to the end, upon the expressed declaration of its opponents that they do not want to add to the catalogue of crimes; they do not want to establish a new criminal offense; they do not want to have any addition made to the penal powers of the Federal courts. Think of it! Owners of literary property denied the protection that is accorded to the owner of a woodpile or the possessor of a yellow dog, for the reason that the list of offenses under the Federal law must not be increased! I ask the attention of these gentlemen who have opposed the American dramatists' copyright bill, I ask the attention of this House, to the penalties imposed by a section of the pending measure, which my friend from Missouri has intimated need not necessarily occupy the consideration of this body.

Mr. Chairman, for the slightest misdirection, for the slightest inadvertence on the part of a dealer in futures or options, for a single omission to make one single trifling entry pertaining to a trivial business transaction in his books, a man may be arrested and taken before the court, tried, convicted, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years or to a fine not exceeding $2,000, or both such fine and imprisonment. Surely the punishment more than fits the crime. What do you say to this, opponents of the measure seeking to afford some means of protection to the brain workers of this land? Shall you let the piracy of literary property go unpunished, and yet condemn the defendants in proceedings under this bill in advance? For what defense has the business man here? None that I can see. Suppose he shall stand before his accuser and shall say: "I am guilty of no crime. I have not unjustly or in any way obstructed commerce; I have rather added to it by the conduct of my business; and I ask to prove that fact by witnesses. My proof is here, and I offer to present it." The court will say, "No; we can not receive your proof. A jury made up of the Federal Congress has already tried your case and has already found you guilty." And we are the jurors to-day. We are asked to convict this man in advance upon the flimsy, upon the absolute lack of proof which has been presented in support of this bill. I, as one of these jurors, will not join in this verdict of conviction. There is no sufficient evidence to warrant or sustain so vicious a verdict, so unjust a judgment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I ask the members of this committee and of this House to rise above mere local clamor. I ask them to vote upon this matter and to determine it, not only as legislators, but as sworn jurors. I ask them not by any act of theirs, in this century, in this age of civilization, to tear down, to cripple, or to jeopardize the commercial prosperity of this land. I ask them to join with us in what we are seeking to do to-day. This is no time for dangerous experiment in any other direction. Let us give vitality rather than weakness. Let us build up rather than destroy. Let us take no backward step so far as the commercial interests of this country are concerned. Above all and beyond all, let us have no "ringing out" of the reserved rights of the States or of the individual citizen, as pledged to us and provided for us under the Federal Constitution. [Loud applause.]

[Mr. STOCKDALE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STOCKDALE. How does that rule apply to me when it does not apply to anybody else?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, after the House went into Committee of the Whole, speakers were limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I did not hear that unanimous consent. It was not unanimous.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I have just seen the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and he said that was his understanding.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I should like to see the Reporter's notes on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement was made that there were sixteen gentlemen on the list to speak, and I asked if there could not be an agreement made by which the time could be limited to twenty minutes. Some gentleman on the floor moved to limit the time to thirty minutes, and by unanimous consent it was so ordered.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I made that motion.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I was asked by the present chairman, at the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for his convenience, to change with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I did so to accommodate the situation, and this is the result.

Mr. WAUGH. Under the circumstances, I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] be allowed twenty minutes more. He did not understand the proposition, or there would have been objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] have twenty minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Who makes the objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. STOCKDALE. Since my friend is so patriotic, I will ask permission to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Mississippi will be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, on Monday last I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the father and author of this antifuture or antioption bill, and since that day I have read very carefully his remarks as printed in the RECORD; but I am sorry to say that I have been unable to find in his speech any statement of fact or any logical argument going to show that the system of dealing in contracts for future delivery or for forward delivery in reality tends to depreciate prices to the producer. We have simply the assertion of the gentleman from Missouri that the dealing in these enormous masses of pretended commodities tends to depreciate and does depreciate prices to the planter and to the farmer. But we have no facts whatever given to show that such is the case. We have merely the gentleman's assertion. I trust that in his closing argument he will be able to give us some facts and some logical arguments based on those facts.

It seems to me it is a new proposition to be advanced by a Democrat, or by any part of the Democratic party, that it is for the interest of the Democracy that the cost of commodities, that the cost of living should be enhanced to the consumer. I have heard it said repeatedly by the leaders of my party, that we must regard the consumer, that we have nothing to do with the manufacturer or with the producer, but that the consumer is the great person to be cared for in all our legislation. That is advanced as one of the tenets of my party, and yet we have this measure proposed by a leading Democrat, avowedly designed for the protection of two classes in the community, the planter and the farmer. We have a measure proposed, the alleged purpose of which is to enhance the cost of bread to every person in the United States, to every man, woman, and child; to advance the cost of cotton shirts, to enhance the price of every glass of beer and every pound of pork. We have a measure designed to tax, for the benefit of the producer only and against the interests of 60 per cent of the population of the United States, according to their own estimate. Is that Democracy? Is that consistent with any principle of any Democratic platform?

I do not intend to weary you, gentlemen, in the limited time which is assigned to me, with estimates of the wheat acreage in the United States, or in the Argentine Republic, or in India, or with calculations as to the cotton crop and its variations in different years. But before proceeding to discuss the law question, the great question of the constitutionality of this measure, I shall allude to three or four facts which I think are undoubtedly susceptible of proof, and which I think have been proven to the satisfaction of every intelligent man.

I have read with great care the testimony taken in 1892 in regard to other antioption and antifuture measures, the testimony taken in the Senate by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, also the testimony which was taken before the Committee on Agriculture of this House; and I say that this testimony, and the evidence then adduced, and other familiar facts which we have for our guidance, show three or four salient facts. One is that this system of dealing in futures, of dealing in articles for forward delivery or future delivery, this system of short selling, instead of tending to lower prices actually tends to enhance prices. Where a man sells an article to be delivered at a future time, and he is not in possession of the article contracted to be sold, necessarily, when the time of delivery comes, he will have to become a buyer of the article; and that fact tends to enhance the price of the commodity, be it wheat, cotton, rye, corn, or any other article.

Another fact is this, and it is shown by the records, that since the adoption of this system of selling for future or forward delivery, the fluctuation in price is much less than in the antifuture period. Take thirty-five years before the adoption of that system in New Orleans and New York, and there was an average fluctuation of 4.16 cents; whereas the average fluctuation since, as shown by the records of the cotton exchanges at New Orleans and at New York, is only 1.28 cents. Now, it is a familiar fact that the stability of value and the absence of fluctuation is for the best interests of the producer and of everyone throughout the country. Another fact which has been shown by the evidence is that the cost to the producer is lessened by this system of sales for future delivery. Middlemen are enabled to do their work for a very small charge, a fractional charge, say half of 1 per cent, far less than that which obtained in former times, when it was something like 5 per cent.

What is the grand truth? It is this, that you can not legislate in any way to control the law of supply and demand. The price corresponds to the supply. That is an undoubted axiom and undoubted truth. I cite Mr. David A. Wells, the great student and political economist, on that point. Mr. Wells, after drawing attention to the fact that this phenomenal decline in the price of wheat has obtained for many years past, concludes by saying:

During all the years in which the decline in wheat has been phenomenal the law of supply and demand has not been violated, and the price in the world's market has conformed strictly to the supply of the world.

This is the reason. It is overproduction which has reduced the price of cotton, and overproduction which has lowered the market price of wheat. With cotton at 7½ cents a pound and wheat at 61 or 62 cents a bushel, it is impossible by any legislation to enhance the price. The truth is that the immense acreage devoted to cotton and devoted to wheat and the improvements of machinery have tended to lower the price, and I cite the tariff speech of the distinguished Senator from Texas, the Hon. ROGER Q. MILLS, delivered on April 25. In that speech and in the tariff discussion it was always assumed by the members of my party that low prices are good things—that it is for the benefit of the citizen and for the whole country to have the staples of life cheap; but when we discuss this antioption bill, we say to the planter and to the farmer that it is a principle of our party to advocate this measure on the ground that the commodity should be enhanced in price.

Now, when the Senator from Texas delivered his speech he was in favor of reducing the price, and he submitted a table of thirty articles showing how from the year 1873 to the year 1891 there had been a decline in a free-trade country like Great Britain in the price of those commodities. One of these articles is wheat and another is cotton yarn; and he addresses these words to the Senate of the United States:

Sir, prices have been brought down by improved production, by machinery, by invention, increasing the amount of product in a given time, and lowering the cost of the product.

He said nothing about dealing in futures. It never occurred at that time to the Senator from Texas to say anything about dealing in futures. It never occurred at that time to the Senator from Texas that it would be alleged that dealing in futures or contracts for forward delivery had caused the reduction of the cost of commodities.

Now, as to the law. This antifuture and antioption law is unconstitutional. It is unconstitutional because it is a perversion and violation of the taxing power; and it is no answer to say that Congress can enact it with the approval of the Executive.

It is no answer to say that the courts can not go behind the statute and inquire into the motives of the lawmakers. I say that is no answer either in constitutional law or in ethics. Are we to take the position that because our action can not be inquired into we are going to perpetrate that which we know to be wrong? We admit that any abuse of the taxing power is wrong. That is one of the fundamental principles of the Democratic party. That principle was laid down in that favorite case which has been so often cited on the stump in election campaigns in this country, the case of the Loan Association against Topeka, which will be found in 20 Wallace, and which we cite day after day and week after week to show that the doctrine of protection is a perversion of the taxing power.

Now, if the Democratic party relies on that case, if that case is sound law, what you are asked to do to-day is a grosser perversion of the taxing power than any which has ever yet been perpetrated by the Federal Legislature. What does the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] say? He says that this proposed law is not anarchistic, because anarchy means the absence of law. The gentleman is right. This proposed law is not anarchistic, but it is socialistic; it is the extension of the system of paternalism or centralization in its worst form; the extension of that direful and dangerous doctrine of socialism; the extension of that principle which would have the claws and the hands of government laid on every citizen; which would invade the home of every man and force him to do that which a majority in the Legislature may dictate, whether it be right or whether it be wrong. The real purpose of this act is shown by the remark of the gentleman from Missouri:

When this species of gambling goes on—

Gambling he terms it, although it is legitimate business speculation, sanctioned by the laws of every State of the Federal Union. The gentleman says:

When this species of gambling goes on it is time for Congress to step in and protect the people.

Protect the people by an act ostensibly—only ostensibly, not plausibly or speciously—framed to obtain revenue! You have listened for days, gentlemen, to this debate, and have you heard one argument advanced by the advocates of this bill as to the amount of revenue which will be derived if it shall become a law? The revenue feature is not, as the gentleman from Missouri terms it, a secondary effect, or as he says in another part of his speech, "the primary basis of this bill." The revenue feature has nothing to do with it. The object of this act is to suppress, to prohibit, to kill, to annihilate the legitimate business vocation of large classes in this country; to deceive the planter and the farmer and make them imagine that such legislation is for their benefit.

The question of the constitutionality of this law was brushed aside by the gentleman from Missouri. He cited two cases, the case of the State bank tax, Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, reported in 8 Wallace, and the oleomargarine cases of Powell against Pennsylvania, reported in 127 United States Reports.

Those are his two cases. Let me dispose of the last case first. The case of Powell against Pennsylvania was an oleomargarine case, and the only question before the Supreme Court of the United States, as is clearly shown by the report, was whether the oleomargarine statute of the State of Pennsylvania was a valid exercise of the police power or not. In that decision there is not a word going to uphold the passage of any such bill as that which is under consideration.

Let us take the other case, the State bank tax case. The question there was whether the State bank tax imposed by the act of 1866, amendatory of the act of 1864, was constitutional or not. Is this tax a direct tax or not? For if a direct tax it should be apportioned. That was the first question before the court. The other question was: Is this a tax on property, or a tax on the faculties and the powers of a State to incorporate banks? Those were the two questions argued, and it is stated by Chief Justice Chase, in his opinion, that those are the two great questions in the case. The other important question was as to the power of the United States to pass measures restraining the States from interfering with the currency of the United States. The only question argued or considered in the minority opinion, which was rendered by Mr. Justice Nelson, and concurred in by Mr. Justice Miller, was: Is the State bank tax a tax on property, or a tax on the faculties and powers of a State to grant a charter or incorporate a bank? And the minority judges held that it was not a tax on property, but was a tax on the faculties and powers of a State, and was therefore unconstitutional.

Chief Justice Chase in his opinion states that it had been argued that the State bank tax in question was so excessive as to divulge the legislative intention to prohibit banking; and he says we will not inquire into that, but he goes on to argue elaborately that for another and a stronger reason the tax could be levied, because it was a tax levied for a lawful purpose, which lawful purpose was to restrain a State from interfering with the Federal control of the currency and the right of the National Government to emit bills of credit, and it was upon that point that the decision of the Supreme Court was in fact rendered. Now, here we have a marked distinction. It is conceded that there is no power in Congress to directly prohibit dealing in futures; that there exists no right in the Federal Legislature to prohibit these transactions or "short" selling.

So we have the taxing power here perverted, or sought to be perverted, to carry out a purpose illegal and unconstitutional in itself, instead of the power being exerted in furtherance of an undoubted constitutional right of the Federal Legislature.

Now, let us see as to the cases on the other side. We have first that great case of the Bank of Maryland vs. McCulloch, reported in 4 Wheaton, where as far back as 1819 the decision was rendered by Chief Justice Marshall, who uses this remarkable language:

Should Congress under the pretext of executing its power, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not intrusted to the Government, it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land.

I submit, gentlemen, that ever since 1819 there has always existed that power in the Supreme Court of the United States to go behind a statute and pronounce it unconstitutional where it is clearly on its face a perversion of the taxing power and an attempt to destroy certain classes in the community for the benefit of other classes.

You are all familiar with the passenger cases reported in 7th Howard and with those cases in 118 and 136 United States Reports, where the passenger cases are cited and approved, where the principle is laid down that if a State seeks to invade by roundabout means the domain of Federal legislation, the Supreme Court of the United States will not hesitate to declare that act of the State Legislature unconstitutional, invalid, and void. I say that the converse of the proposition also applies—that the Supreme Court will not hesitate in a proper case to pronounce an act of Congress unconstitutional when it seeks under the guise of the taxing power, or in any other manner, to invade the domain of State rights, to interfere with the control of those matters which belong only to the State government.

I call your attention to the language of the Supreme Court in the case reported in 118 United States Reports—Morgan vs. The State Board of Health of Louisiana. There it was sought to have an act of the Legislature of Louisiana declared unconstitutional on the ground that it invaded the right of the Federal Government to impose a tonnage tax; and the Supreme Court of the United States held that quarantine fee, if exacted, was really a compensation for the examination of the vessel, and was not in its character a tonnage tax. But there the Supreme Court in its opinion expressed its view as to this roundabout legislation—an effort to do something other than that which appears in the title of the act. What does Mr. Justice Miller say?

In all cases of this kind it has been repeatedly held that when the question is raised whether the State statute is a just exercise of State power or is intended as a roundabout means to invade the domain of Federal authority, this court will look into the operation and effect of the act to discern its purpose.

Now, to show further that this view of the law is absolutely correct, I call the attention of the committee to this famous case of the Loan Association vs. Topeka, where it is held that all the functions of government, be it State or national, are limited; that there is no such thing as unlimited power, and that the taxing power is not unlimited. This great Democratic case lays down the law on this subject. What is said there?

The theory of our governments, State and national, is opposed to the deposit of unlimited power anywhere.

The theory of government thus announced by the Supreme Court does not agree with the theory of government advanced by the gentleman from Missouri, who says:

Do wrong, pass this act, pervert the taxing power, because no one can check us, because we are omnipotent; we, the Congress of the United States, when we receive the Executive approval have the power to pervert the right of taxation and to do that which is inherently wrong.

The executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of these governments are all of limited and defined powers.

Then, going on to cite the instance of the effect and operation of the State bank tax, Mr. Justice Miller uses this language:

The power to tax is therefore the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised.

And the court holds that where the power is perverted the law is unconstitutional. In the first part of the opinion it is declared:

The proposition is that the act authorizes towns and other municipalities to take the property of the citizen under the guise of taxation to pay these bonds, and use it in aid of the enterprises of others, thus perverting the right of taxation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. PENCE. I ask that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. In the limited time allowed me I shall not be able to call attention to many of the lesser faults of this bill. But I wish to call attention to one or two provisions—one for instance which shifts the burden of proof of innocence upon the criminal, changing the whole criminal law in this respect. The presumption is in this country that a man is innocent until he be found guilty. This act provides that—

If any person shall knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused) have in his possession any washed, restored, or altered stamps.

That is, the burden of proof is thrown in that case on the man to show that he has some lawful excuse; and further, it provides that having a stamp in one's possession is prima facie evidence of the fact that the stamp has been used once by the man in whose possession it has been found. Could there be a more monstrous provision of law than that?

But in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the right to make a contract to sell wheat, or cotton, or lard, or pork, or any of the commodities referred to in this bill, in the future; should be just as free as the right which every citizen has in reference to every other executory contract. He should have the right to sell wheat and cotton just as much as you have the right to sell the leather before it is tanned or to sell the wood before it is hewn. You can not take that right, thus held under the Constitution, from any citizen. You may as well pass an act providing that no man shall make a promise to pay money unless he has the money in the bank at the time he makes the promise; and if he makes a note which matures in three months he shall not be permitted to have power to make a settlement with his creditor. You may as well deprive him of that right, and deprive all citizens of their rights, just as well as to undertake to prevent any citizen from trading in these great commodities as he pleases.

What has the court of last resort in my State said?

The right to liberty embraces the right of man to exercise his faculties and to follow a lawful avocation for the support of life.

Liberty means also the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, or to pursue any lawful trade or avocation.

If you pass this measure you will prevent many citizens from following avocations which are permissible by the laws of the various States, and which are held by all the States to be entirely legal. What will be the effect of the passage of such an act? The great exchanges of cotton in New Orleans and New York, the produce exchanges of New York and Chicago, will be closed, and your cotton market will be ruled by Bremen, Havre, and Liverpool, and the farmers will have the prices of their grain regulated at will by the big millers of the great Northwest.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, it is not strange that in the discussion of this bill (the antioption bill) the question of silver coinage should cut a very important figure. It was inevitable that the chief matter of concern should be that of rising and falling prices. In the nature of things that brought on the discussion of the supply of money in the country, and that, in the nature of things, in turn brought on a review of the question of silver coinage.

The question of silver coinage has been discussed quite as fully as any other question since Congress met in August of last year. About as many opportunities as we could ask have been given us to make our record on that question; but some of us still linger in the hope that before the dog-days come and final adjournment is taken, at least one more opportunity will be given to Congress and to the members thereof to make a record upon which finally they can go before the people this fall.

There have been some striking conversions since the discussion of last fall and the votes of last August, October, and November. The most striking conversion has been that of the Republican leader of this House, the eminent gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. In behalf of the silver forces, so far as I may be permitted to speak, I want to welcome him to the silver ranks. I am sorry he declines to take but one degree. Still, one degree is better than none.

Mr. GEAR. How many degrees are there?

Mr. PENCE. There are many, but there is but one entire and perfect degree that makes a man a master, and that is the degree of 16 to 1. [Applause.]

We are glad, Mr. Chairman, to welcome one like the leader from Maine. What cause would not be glad to welcome him, big as he is in every way, generous in physical proportions, big of intellect, and big of heart, a fit leader for a great party! And it is because, Mr. Chairman, throughout the country many entertain a belief, because of his last utterances, that he stands really and honestly for the coinage of silver, that a renewed hope and courage has been taken on by the masses of the people.

What troubles me is a lingering doubt as to just exactly how far he is willing to go and where he stands to-day. I secured this morning a publication that came in by the last mail, the Fortnightly Review, published in London, the number for June, which contains an article on silver and the tariff at Washington, which I find is the full report of the interview of the representative of this magazine with the eminent leader from Maine [Mr. REED] held in this city during the last month, or at a late date. The time of the interview is not stated. While the first report of that interview as published in the Republican papers of the West led me, with others, to believe that after all the mistakes of last August were recognized by the Republican leader, yet after reading the article I can hardly accept that conclusion as the proper one. The article says:

The Republican party in the United States, the party of protection, has hitherto been regarded as the party unfriendly to silver.

That is true.

During the conflict last autumn in Congress over the repeal of the Sherman act, Mr. REED of Maine, the Speaker of the House during President Harrison's Administration, was the leader of the repeal party on his side of the Chamber.

Of course, we all know that is true.

The recent great gains of the Republican party point strongly to the probability that the next Administration will be Republican, and Mr. REED'S popularity, great services, and strong individuality distinguish him as the candidate of his party for the Presidency.

I do not know but that is true.

Mr. REED'S views, as outlined only a fortnight since in the following conversation with an English visitor to Washington, are of such interest and indicate such an important development in the economic policy of his party that we publish them in a manner so unusual as an "interview."

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two pages of this interview, but as I understand the limitation of time is now thirty minutes instead of an hour, although I dislike to quote a part of the utterances of the gentleman from Maine, because I can not forget the fact that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], who at one time quoted but a fraction of the utterances of the gentleman from Maine, was called to account for it, yet I will hazard the risk this time, and, skipping that portion which refers to the tariff, will call attention to some of his most pointed utterances applicable to this discussion:

"Mr. REED," said the visitor, "I want you, if you will, to give me a glimpse of the future policy of the Republican party. Your party, with the flowing tide behind you, is likely to control the House after the next election, and probably the country three years hence. We, in England, are infinitely concerned by the two great issues here—silver and the tariff; what are we to expect of your party when you return to power?"

Let me quote his answer. Says Mr. REED, among other things:

* * * * * * *

One thing at least I have learned since the cessation of silver purchases last year.

I hope my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] will give his attention to this. I see him present in the Hall. Says the leader on your side:

"One thing at least I have learned since the cessation of silver purchases last year, that cheap silver is an effective stimulus to Asiatic exports. * * *
"But," asked the Englishman—

I quote again—

"what do you propose to do? If cheap silver assists Asiatic exports, and no doubt this is the case, then by no tariff corrective here can you help your agriculturists. The stimulus of cheapening silver must continue to reduce the prices at which Asia can afford to sell wheat and cotton in the markets of Europe?"
"Yes, I agree," said Mr. REED; "that is the aspect of the silver question which I am frank to confess has only since last year attracted our notice in the Eastern States. The fall in silver, its value to pay wages and to buy products in India and China being as great as ever—

I hope again the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] hears the quotation as I read it.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. PENCE. Let me continue the quotation from Mr. REED—

this it is that makes of the silver issue an issue we are forced to face. You recognize, of course, that the position has entirely changed in the past six months. Before that time the enormous compulsory monthly purchase of silver—a most vicious proceeding—had gone far to confuse men's minds and to disguise the fact that there really is in the background a serious currency problem to be solved."
"And do you regard it as soluble?" asked the Englishman.

Mr. REED replied:

"Certainly I do. I understand that England is the only difficulty. * * * We recognize that falling silver, by lowering the Eastern exchanges, favors our competitors in Asia who sell similar produce—wheat, cotton, and other staples—in the markets of Europe; it is evidently important for debtor nations, on which list we stand first, to raise the price of silver, and thereby reduce that bounty on exports which Asia now enjoys."

To this he now adds:

"This can be best done by a monetary agreement with other nations favorable to silver."

Mr. Chairman, this is the utterance of the gentleman who gave the interview, and who is altogether the bright and shining light of the Republican party, and I do not wonder at the acclaim and praise you accord every utterance delivered by him here. The Democratic party would be in great luck if it had a man here like him, or his equal in ability. In the Western country these utterances have been quoted as indicating that the Republican party intends to stand for the remonetization of silver.

This interview is a step in advance of Harrison. Harrison wants an international agreement with all nations. Mr. REED'S last language, which I quoted, indicates that he might be willing to act upon an agreement with those nations which are using silver.

Mr. Chairman, the important question now to our minds and in the minds of the voters of the country is, What is to be the performance by vote in Congress of men who talk this way? I have no doubt that the Republican party will some day come to the support of silver coinage, but not until they are driven to it, in my humble judgment

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] in his argument here on yesterday gave some figures as to the number of Republicans who had voted for and against silver at different dates in this House and in the Senate. I have a table of figures, Mr. Chairman, covering other dates than those covered by him. I have not time to read them now, but I desire to state to the House that I have here a carefully prepared and revised table showing the number of Republicans, Democrats, and Populists who have voted for and against silver upon the various votes since 1878. At this time, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent, without reading these figures, to incorporate them, as well as the figures given by Mr. WALKER yesterday, in my remarks. There are two columns of them in the paper. I would like to have that request submitted now, so that if it be not granted I may read the figures.

There was no objection.

Mr. PENCE. These figures are correct. They first appeared in the Rocky Mountain News, and were prepared, I think, by Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, the editor of that paper. They have been carefully compared with the record by Mr. N. A. Dunning, editor of the National Watchman, and I now, by your consent just granted, incorporate them as published in the Watchman.

The table is as follows:

The first vote we will give was on the Bland bill of 1878. These several votes are taken from the records and verified by Edward McPherson's Hand-book.

BLAND ACT OF 1878.

On June 27, 1879, Senator VEST offered the following resolution: "That the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States, are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship."

On motion of Senator ALLISON to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, the following vote was taken.

Those voting in the affirmative were against silver, those voting in the negative being in favor:

February 3, 1880, this bill was reported from the Senate Finance Committee adversely by Senator Bayard. No further attention was paid to it during that session.

April 8, 1886, the following vote was taken on a bill for the free coinage of silver, being House bill 5690. It was defeated by the following vote:

HOUSE.

There was no action taken by the Senate from which a statement could be made of the friends and foes of silver that would be satisfactory.

What is known as the Sherman law of 1890, by which 4,500,000 ounces of silver were bought each month and paid for in United States notes, passed the Senate July 10, 1890, by the following vote:

We will let the reader make the comparison as regards the love for silver, as shown by the two old parties.

The slight discrepancy appearing between these figures and those given by Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts in his speech in the House yesterday arises, I think, from his having included in his figures some Members and Senators who were paired and did not vote, but whose positions were known. In my tables only the actual vote is stated.

On yesterday the Republican convention was held in California. No man doubts the position of the Republicans of California upon the question of the coinage of silver any more than he doubts the position of my friend from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], or his Republicans at home, or the Republicans of Colorado. They are all for the free coinage of silver, and for its coinage at a ratio of 16 to 1. The Republicans of California on yesterday, I see by to-day's paper, have copied the national platform of the People's party and made an unequivocal declaration for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. Let me read the platform:

We favor the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and the making of silver, as well as gold, a legal tender in payment of all debts, both public and private, and we pledge our Congressional nominees to the support of principles contained in this resolution.

Mr. Chairman, if the interview of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] meant that the Republicans of this House—not a handful of them, but all of them—were ready to act now and upon every occasion, upon that pledge made in California yesterday, they would have no difficulty in sweeping the Western country; but in my judgment they do not mean that. That speaks for California only. When Montana shall say the same thing, it will speak for Montana only; and when Colorado says the same thing, it will speak for Senator TELLER'S position and Colorado Republicans only. I honestly and sincerely wish it were otherwise.

I wish the calendar could be moved forward and the inevitable day of silver restoration be hastened. If the Republican party is indeed ready and willing to give sincere and honest support to the free coinage of silver, it could be reached this week. Why can not it be reached this week? Why can not it be reached to-morrow, if the claim of the Western Republicans be true, that now, under the new departure, under Mr. REED'S leadership, that party is to vote candidly, openly, and honestly for the free coinage of silver—why can we not do so to-morrow and give the proof of it. On to-morrow amendments will be in order to this bill. The Democrat who sits in the chair of this House at this moment has before him an opportunity to rise to a higher measure in the esteem of his people at home and throughout the country than has been presented to any man in this present Congress.

I do not know whether a free coinage amendment is in order in a parliamentary sense to the antioption bill or not. I do know that the doubt might be solved by a true friend of silver coinage in that way, and that on to-morrow, on the offering of such an amendment, an opportunity would be given to the Republicans in this House to prove their genuine and sincere friendship for silver by withholding any point of order, and voting for the amendment. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose originally——

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PENCE. I can hardly yield for a question, having only five minutes to go upon.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. PENCE. Go on with your question, then.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman what he thinks of the free coinage of gold and silver at their commercial ratio?

Mr. PENCE. What is to be regarded as their commercial ratio? I am willing to accept coinage at the commercial value after silver has been restored to the position it occupied prior to 1873. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Why not take paper also at its commercial value?

Mr. PENCE. It has not any. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that my time is for thirty minutes instead of an hour, for I do not think I have voice enough to occupy even the thirty minutes. If my present hoarseness, however, will permit I want in the few minutes left to call attention to some of the promises that were made to the country and to Congress last fall when the silver repeal bill was passed.

Mr. BOATNER [alluding to Mr. PENCE'S hoarseness]. Perhaps the proposition of the gentleman from Maine was too much for the gentleman from Colorado. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENCE. Well, maybe that is true; but I did not think it would go to my larynx. [Laughter.] It was my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to the language of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], the chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate, in his speech in the Senate last August, and also to his utterances when he stated to the country and to Congress that the passage of the repeal bill meant merely the clearing of the deck for action; that his party would stand ready then to take some steps toward the recoinage of silver. His utterances at that time were familiar to us all and familiar to the country, but it is worth while to call attention to them again. In his speech on the 22d of August, 1893, he used this language:

> Must we not at once and without delay get back of all makeshifts, subterfuges, insincere compromises, to place ourselves, after the financial decks have been cleared, on the plain constitutional right to coin gold and silver into money?

In his later speech, on the 9th day of October, 1893, as we understood his language then and understand it now, many pledges were made and repeated that in the immediate future the Democratic party, under this Administration and in this Congress, would take some steps looking toward the remonetization of silver. I read from page 8 of the pamphlet edition of his speech of October 9, where he says:

> I say that we have offered something better. We have offered the high pledge of the Government for the continued use and the continued coinage of the two metals. It is well known, the Senator from Colorado is not in doubt about my position, that when the pending measure is out of the way, when the Sherman law no longer disgraces the statute books of the nation, I am ready to act promptly and with all the energy and force that I can bring to bear to carry out the pledge which the bill contains.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention also to the utterance of one man who is known to be one of the strongest and ablest champions of silver coinage in the world. Probably if anyone conversant with the facts were called upon to name to-day the three strongest advocates of silver coinage in the world, he would name JOHN P. JONES of Nevada, HENRY M. TELLER of Colorado, and Senator MORGAN of Alabama. In contrast with the utterances of others, of different political parties, who claim that we can not go to silver coinage without an international agreement, I want to quote a few words from one of these three gentlemen, the one who in my judgment is the strongest, clearest, and ablest of them all—Senator TELLER of Colorado. He was interviewed a few days ago respecting the late Berlin silver commission meeting, and with respect to its failure to take action. Passing over his comment as to what had taken place in the commission, I quote from him this sentence:

> I don't think the work of the commission will have any effect, unless it be to increase the conviction, which is already growing in this country, that the United States will have to take this question in hand and act independently of other nations.

Mr. Chairman, this is the position of the People's party. It sees no reason for waiting for the consent of Great Britain or any other nation on the globe. Silver coinage is going to be accomplished, Mr. Chairman, and without any great delay. It may be under this Administration. I confess that it will take two-thirds of each House, or a change of Presidents—a radical change.

The President is in excellent good health I am informed by this morning's paper, and I have no doubt that he will live out his term. I fear the chance for silver coinage is indeed small under this Administration, but I have no doubt in the world of its being accomplished under the next. It is going to be accomplished, not by those men who tarry and wait upon the consent of any other nation. It is going to be accomplished by the American voters of the different political parties who stand favorable to an American policy for America upon this question of greatest importance to all the people, men of all parties who stand ready to restore silver to its coinage at 16 to 1 as it was before 1873. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it makes no difference what party shall be most active in accomplishing it. The People's party stands ready to assist in that effort. It stands ready to deliver 100 per cent of its membership to coinage at that ratio. In every section of the country its members stand for that. It hopes to be able in the near future to find allies enough to accomplish it. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, if the ruling that I hope for can be had to-morrow, I hope to see 100 per cent of the membership of the People's party here, with a majority of the Republicans and a majority of the Democrats (the latter of which is sure, as their votes in all the years have proved), carry free coinage through this House to-morrow. I will reserve my time, if I have any, for the purpose of offering an amendment to-morrow. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

Mr. PENCE. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] is one of the bold, candid leaders amongst those Republicans who oppose the passage by Congress of a free-coinage law. He sincerely believes, and never fails to claim, that his party—the Republican party—is entitled to praise for having repeatedly defeated the efforts to remonetize silver.

In his speech yesterday he gave the following figures:

> Mr. WALKER. On March 24, 1892, this House, by a vote, 130 Democrats voting for and 81 against, voted for the Bland free-coinage bill, and the Republicans voted 11 for it and 67 against it, or a Republican majority of 56 against it. We saved the country from it by 7 majority.
> Mr. PENCE. What vote was that?
> Mr. WALKER. That was the vote of the Democratic party in this House on a Bland bill for the free coinage of silver. On July 13, 1892, on the Stewart free-coinage amendment, there were 23 Democratic majority voted for it and 51 Republican majority against it—28 majority against it.
> Mr. PENCE. As I understand you, on the vote on the Stewart free-coinage amendment, you are accrediting the Republicans with having defeated it.
> Mr. WALKER. By 51 majority, the Democrats having voted for it by 23 majority.
> Mr. PENCE. Well, that is right.
> Mr. WALKER. On July 1, 1892, in the Senate, on the Stewart free-coinage amendment, there were 31 Democrats for it and 10 against it; majority for, 21. Fourteen Republicans voted for and 31 against; majority against, 17. On August 28, 1893, in this House, on the amendment to the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman act of July 14, 1890, to substitute the Bland law of 1878, there were 112 Democrats for it and 103 against it, a Democratic majority of 9 to reinstate that bill. Fifteen Republicans voted for it and 110 against, a majority of 95 Republicans against, making the majority against it 86.
> On October 28, 1893, in the Senate, on the free-coinage amendment, 23 Democrats voted for it and 21 against it, a majority of 2. Ten Republicans voted for it and 27 against it, a majority of 17 Republicans against it, making the total majority against it 15.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I should certainly think that the amendment which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] says he is going to propose to the House to-morrow would be ruled to be in order; for I can conceive of no proposition which any gentleman could possibly advance on any subject of legislation whatever that would not be germane to the bill now being considered in this committee.

The observations that have been addressed to the committee by the clever and interesting gentleman from Colorado on the subject of the free coinage of silver lead me to recur to the suggestion which I ventured to make to the responsible party in power here when the State bank tax was being considered, that in view of the record which they have already made with regard to values, and in view of the numerous records they are proposing to make, it would be a good thing for them to get together in caucus or elsewhere and come to a decision as to what kind of values the country is suffering from.

They have passed a bill here, the bill presented by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], which is based upon the theory that values are too high and ought to be lowered; for there can be no possible excuse for turning thousands of people out of employment and making war on the industries of the country, unless they think that prices should be reduced.

But the Wilson bill had scarcely got out of the House before the gentleman from Missouri—and of course I mean the gentleman from Missouri; that gentleman from Missouri beside whom all other gentlemen from Missouri on the other side of the House since the last Democratic State convention of Missouri was held must consider themselves stars of lesser magnitude—the gentleman from Missouri came here with a bill based on the theory that values were too low and ought to be raised; and he committed the entire Democratic party to that proposition.

He knew not only what was the matter with us, but, fortunately for his peace of mind, if not for anybody else's, he knew just how to cure it. "Here," he said, "is a dollar; that is to say, it is not really a dollar, but let us all pretend to agree that it is a dollar and we shall be just as happy as if it were. And somehow or other, if we all pretend together, values will rise and dollars will multiply, and thus we shall all be prosperous and content."

The scheme of that gentleman from Missouri was interesting and fascinating, and it might have been worth while to consider but for the fact that his colleague from Missouri, who is also something of a star, comes forward with another explanation of the cause of low values and another plan to raise them. He says that we are suffering, not from lack of money, but because of a nefarious system of trading by means of which a man is permitted to sell what he has not got in the hope of being able to get it before he has to deliver it, at a lower price than the price for which he has sold it.

There is an idea running through that gentleman's mind that it takes only one to make a bargain; that you can sell something without anybody ever buying it; and he calls sales for future delivery fictitious sales, sales of wind, and claims that if they can be abolished an era of high values will straightway arise.

Now, I confess my total inability, Mr. Chairman, to follow any of these gentlemen from any of their premises to any of their conclusions. I do not believe that you will make the people prosperous and happy by taking away their means of employment and by reducing their wages.

I do not believe that you will contribute to the welfare of society in any considerable degree by compelling a man to accept 50 cents' worth of money for 100 cents' worth of labor; nor do I believe it will be of any great advantage to human society if you interfere with a system of trading which has existed in this world ever since—well, since Jacob "sold short" for the future delivery of the well-favored daughters of Laban—a system which is going to exist in despite of this bill, in despite of any bill that anybody could possibly propose or that any Legislature could possibly enact to the end of time.

But these are not the questions yet—or at least they ought not to be. The first question you ought to settle is as to values, and whether they are too high or too low.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. QUIGG. Well, I will; but I do not want to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You do not propose to indorse here on this floor the conduct of old Jacob in his cattle-dealing performances, do you?

Mr. QUIGG. Well, I think that Jacob's performance in this particular instance—which I do not regard as a "cattle-dealing performance," for I do not think the well-favored daughters of Laban can be suitably described——

Mr. GROSVENOR. But then he was trading in cattle after getting the daughters.

Mr. QUIGG. No, he served seven years for the young women. Before my friend interrupts to question me he needs to refresh his recollection of the Scriptures.

The question is not yet what you are going to do about values, but whether they are too high and ought to be lowered or are too low and ought to be raised; because if they are too low we do not want a tariff bill to lower them still further, and if they are too high we do not want currency inflation and schemes of interference with trading to raise them.

Mr. Chairman, I share with the gentleman from Missouri his regret at the fact, if it be a fact, that his bill is so imperfectly understood by this House. I do not think, for my own part, that this charge is true. It may possibly be found when the vote is taken on the bill that the gentleman will have occasion to regret, not that it is understood so little, but that it is understood so well.

He says that it is a "simple bill;" and it is. The bill itself is a simple proposition to tax certain people who trade in certain things, in a certain way, under certain conditions. That is, on the face of it, a simple proposition. But in order to understand the bill it is necessary first to understand the system of trade with which the bill proposes to interfere.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to remark, in view of all that has been said in this debate with regard to the "robber barons" and "gamblers" and "monopolists" and things, that denunciation is not argument, and that to call people hard names does not greatly inform the House nor benefit the country; nor do I believe that the distress which gentlemen suffer so acutely here on behalf of the farmer is by him much appreciated; for believe me, gentlemen, the farmer and the Wall street man have one gift in common—they both understand the demagogue.

This bill is said to be a bill directed against gambling, and gentlemen have told me that although they did not think very much of the bill in itself, yet that they were going to vote for it because they were opposed to gambling. Now, I do not intend to be forced into a defense of gambling by reason of the pretense, and a mere pretense it is, that this bill in some way or another interferes with it.

If anybody wants to prevent gambling, he will vote for the proposition, for which I shall certainly vote, that my friend from Illinois proposes to introduce to-morrow, in the shape of an amendment, striking out of this bill the word "futures" wherever it occurs. Because there is no doubt at all—it is admitted by all of us—that the first section of this bill, namely, the section defining options, does describe a gambling contract and nothing else.

There is no pretense that in an options contract the seller is called upon to produce any goods or the buyer to produce the money for the goods. The options contract is forbidden by the rules of all of the exchanges; it is forbidden by the laws of all the States, and in so far as it ever can be reached, in my judgment, it is now being reached by State law.

Nevertheless, if gentlemen believe that the exercise of police powers is a function of Federal Government, if gentlemen believe that it is any part of the duty of the Federal Government to exercise supervision over the morals of the people, they may strike out of this bill all reference to the word "futures," and leave this bill operative against options contracts, and they will have a bill which does undertake, to some extent, to deal with gambling.

I am free to say that I do not think much of the bill even in that form, because I do not believe that the great Government of the United States, like the Tammany police of New York City, ought to go into partnership with gamblers. That is not, in my judgment, admirable. But if gentlemen differ with me as to that by voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to strike from the bill all reference to the word "futures," they can make this a gambling or antigambling bill, as they choose to look at it.

Now, gentlemen, I hope you will understand what the word "futures" means as used in this bill. It is not a gambling contract at all that is described by the word "futures." I shall indulge in no subterfuges; I shall acknowledge at the very outset that gambling is possible under the futures contract; and if there were any means by which gambling alone could be reached, without interfering with the system of legitimate trade by which the produce of the country is marketed and which certainly is in the interest of the farmer; if ever a good scheme of marketing his crops could be devised, other than the old scheme of selling by samples; if there were a way of reaching gambling without reaching trade, we might consider it. Understand that under a "futures" contract the man who sells is bound to produce the goods; the man who buys, on the other hand, is bound to produce the money for the goods, and neither can escape his necessity except by the consent of the other.

If the two agree, the one that he does not want to produce the goods, the other that he does not want to produce the money for the goods, they can settle by the one giving to the other the difference between the value of the goods to-day and the value when the contract was made. Now, of course, that may be gambling. But the gamble is not the fault of the contract, nor of the law.

It is the fault of human nature. It happens because away from the contract, away from the law, deep seated in the human heart, where the constable can not see it and the taxgatherer can not reach it, is a perverse disposition. You can not prevent that. If you think you can, you go against the experience of centuries. People are going to gamble whether this bill passes or not, and they are going to gamble the old way and in the same shop where they are gambling now. There is nothing in this bill that prevents it.

If you are voting for it on the idea that it does, you are mistaken. Why, in the very same bucket shops where deals in grain go on, they go on in stocks. In every broker's office where deals in grain go on, they go on in stocks, and it will be just as easy as can be to conduct these gambling trades and tricks under the operation of this law as it is now. This law is the easiest thing in the world to get around.

Mr. DANIELS. I should like to make a suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. QUIGG. Certainly.

Mr. DANIELS. If this bill becomes a law, does it not then legalize all these gambling transactions that the gentleman refers to, and supersede all the State laws forbidding that kind of gambling?

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman asks me whether, if this bill is passed, it does not legalize the gambling proceedings that now go on without law, and undertake to supersede the State laws forbidding them. Everybody knows that it will have that effect. Everybody knows that just as soon as the Government of the United States says, "Gentlemen, you can gamble if you consent to share the profits with us," it legalizes gambling.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], in introducing this bill, said that the present form in which it appeared obviated all the old objections, because the taxes were no longer prohibitive, but were revenue taxes. If that is true, if the dealer can afford to pay the taxes and at the same time make money, the United States Government has gone into partnership with him on all these gambling contracts, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] accomplishes nothing whatever towards the prevention of gambling. He dose nothing whatever to affect values.

All these trades go on if this is a revenue bill. Is not that as plain as day? All the volume of this business, all the millions on millions of sales which he says occur on wind, will go right along. There will be no stoppage of them, if this is really a revenue bill. And if it is a revenue bill, who is going to pay the taxes? You know very well that in no business does the middleman pay the taxes.

You know perfectly well that the importer does not pay the tariff taxes. He only hands them in to the custom-house, but he collects them either out of the producer or out of the consumer, or out of them both, according to the character of the tax. And you know very well that if this bill passes, and if it is, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] says it is, a revenue bill, then either one of two persons, or both, will pay the revenue. Either the farmer who produces these articles has got to pay it, or the consumer who buys them has got to pay it, and these are agricultural products that the gentleman is thus going to tax. Now, is there anybody in this House who wants to do a thing of that kind? Is there anybody in this House who wants to make the burdens of the farmers greater than they are? My friend from Alabama jumped up the other day in a very excited, or apparently excited humor, and demanded to know whether it was not time that something was done for the poor farmer?

I think it is, and the thing to do for him is to defeat this bill. For if you pass this bill, and it is, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] says it is, a revenue bill, then the farmer has got to pay the tax or the consumer has got to pay it. That point can not be too often made. Either the farmer must pay it or the man who eats the bread and beef has got to pay it. The middleman does not pay it and you know it. You can freeze out the middleman, but you can not make him pay taxes.

The gentleman from Missouri knows that. When he presented a prohibitive bill, when he made this tax a thousand dollars, when he made a man pay $10 or $50 or $100, I do not know which and it does not matter which, for every transaction that went on in the exchange, when he made him give a bond of $20,000 to pay the penalties, then he presented a prohibitive bill; and that prohibitive bill would undoubtedly have broken up this system of trading. If it had passed there would have been no produce exchanges, and the system of selling for future delivery would have been abolished.

There is no doubt about that. But he has been converted. He says to-day that he would not do anything like that, that he does not believe in prohibitive taxes, if I understood him correctly. At all events he says he would not exercise the taxing power in an unconstitutional way, and whatever his views on the Constitution may be, he knows that Senator MILLS, and a great many other authorities on the Constitution at the other end of the Capitol, stand ready to knock out this bill just as soon as it comes over there, if it is a prohibitive bill.

And so, in order to meet their objections, he has taken out the prohibitive features, and he comes here and tells us that he is converted, and that he has found out that the thing to do is to make it a real revenue bill. I confess I do not believe that it is a revenue tax. I do not believe that in the present state of trade the exchanges of the country can afford to pay even the tax that is levied in this bill; but if they can, there is no getting away from the fact—and you have got to explain it to your constituents—there is no getting away from the simple proposition that the farmers are going to pay this tax, or that the consumers are going to pay it, and I want to get that clear, if it must be said over a hundred times.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has told us that at a convenient season he will say some hard things about those of us who have ventured to say hard things about his bill. And as he has an hour to-morrow in which to close debate we can all of us look out for him. I shall myself be duly expectant.

Now, I say to the gentleman from Missouri that, instead of saying hard things of those of us who have ventured to express our opinions of this bill, which he thinks altogether unsuitable, he would better spare himself and save his breath for that occasion when he must go back to his constituents in Missouri and explain why he has put a tax on farm products; why he has endeavored to render it more difficult for them to sell their goods than it was before; why he endeavored unnecessarily to increase their burdens and diminish their opportunities.

He says it is a tax on gambling. He says that a few years ago, in the exercise of his rights as a Representative here and in the performance of his duties, he looked about him for something to tax, and he discovered oleomargarine. Elated at his success in taxing oleomargarine, delighted at what he had accomplished, he looked about him again, and he discovered gambling. Such was the origin of his bill.

Now, gentlemen, I submit to your rational intelligence—and there are two kinds of intelligence, rational and irrational—I submit to your rational intelligence that it is not a suitable thing for the United States of America to tax gambling. I suggest that if we have any function to perform in regard to gambling it is to extirpate it and not to share its proceeds, not to go into a partnership with gamblers. But it is not a tax upon gamblers; and mark it, it is a tax on farm products; and there I think we can all afford to leave the gentleman from Missouri and his bill. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, under the rule we have adopted there is only an hour and a half left for debate, and as my time is too limited for me to deliver all I have prepared, including the reading of the tables which form a part of my speech, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD that portion of my remarks I shall fail to deliver.

The request was submitted, and there was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] who preceded his colleague [Mr. QUIGG], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] who spoke yesterday, argued that the States' rights principles of the people of the South should prevent any Southern Representative from advocating this bill. That argument could have been well put to our friends of the North during the recent discussion of the bill to repeal the unconstitutional law which taxed out of existence the circulation of all banks chartered by States, a law more odious to the Constitution, more destructive to the rights of the people, and more directly opposed to the fundamental rights of the States than any other law upon the statute books of our country.

We of the South made that argument to our Northern friends, and when the roll was called the solid votes of the Representatives from the South were recorded in favor of the people, the Constitution, and the explicit and positive pledge of the Chicago platform under which we won the victory of 1892 [applause], and were opposed by an almost solid phalanx of the people's Representatives from the North, the Northeast, and Northwest.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], who has just taken his seat, alluded to my championship of the rights of the farmers, and on yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GOLDZIER] devoted much of his time to a criticism of my suggestion that it was about time for the rights of farmers to be considered in Congressional legislation.

FARMERS ONLY ASK THAT UNJUST LAWS BE REPEALED.

I did not mean that farmers should have laws passed specially for their benefit and protection; they only ask for the repeal of the vicious class legislation by which during the last thirty years the Republican party have enriched bankers, manufacturers, and monopolists of all kinds at the expense of farmers, and which is rapidly dividing American citizens into two classes, a few millionaires and multimillionaires on the one side and the great mass of the people, including all the farmers, who are struggling for existence, on the other.

The farmer only asks that the laws of our country be equal and just, and that the burdens and the bounties incident thereto, like the dews of heaven, fall equally upon all people and all vocations. [Applause.] The farmer is the creator of nearly all the wealth of our land, and the welfare of all other vocations is largely dependent upon his prosperity. When the farmer is prosperous the manufacturer has the best market for his wares, the merchant collects his debts, the educator, the minister, the lawyer, the physician, and the followers of all other vocations are well paid.

The farmers only ask a repeal of Republican laws which have reduced them from the position of lordly independence which they enjoyed under Democratic rule; laws which have reduced the price of farm products to less than the cost of production. They ask a repeal of the bank legislation, which for thirty years has denied to farmers the right to use their lands as a basis of credit, and which, together with other adverse laws, has reduced farm lands to one-tenth their value when the laws were equal, just, and Democratic.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will yield to one question.

Mr. BOATNER. I want to know of the gentleman, considering that he has recently so zealously supported the repeal of a law which abused the taxing power to accomplish a purpose not within the purview of the Federal Constitution, how he gets his consent to vote for a measure of exactly the same character?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It is not of the same character. The law I voted for was demanded by the platform of 1892. It was a measure for the repeal of a law which, when brought up in Congress on April 18, 1864, was voted against by every Democrat in Congress. The law we voted on two weeks ago was a law to restore to sovereign States their sovereign God-given rights. We then sought to repeal a law which took from the people of sovereign States all authority to manage their own financial affairs, and deprived them of a most valued and cherished constitutional right.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, you propose to vote for a bill that takes another away?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The law we seek now to enact will not take away any legitimate right from the people. Gentlemen who oppose the bill have insisted that the law can not be enforced and can not have any effect whatever. The friends of the bill think it will add to our revenues and help to fill our depleted Treasury, and all admit that the revenue which will be realized from the law will be paid by those who are most able to bear the tax.

Others who oppose the bill insist that its purpose is to crush out gambling operations. If this should happily be one of the incidental results, and I trust it will be, it will certainly be a very strong argument in favor of the bill. The report which accompanies the bill tells us "that thousands of representative men in the United States urge its passage," and it also tells us that—

Not a protest has ever been filed with the committee against this legislation except from that class of persons who are interested in "speculative gambling" or in upholding the system of evading actual delivery upon contracts made as members of the different boards of trade in the United States.

It is my hope that one effect will be to crush out the gambling operations which for the last fifteen years have done so much to detrimentally affect the price of farm products.

Mr. WARNER. Is the gentleman aware that under the express provision of this bill actual proof that a transaction is a gambling transaction will exempt it from the operation and the penalties of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I admit that difficulties will be encountered in enforcing the law, but that is one good reason why we should commence this character of legislation. After a little experience with the law we can amend it so as to make it effective. It is very possible that at first it will be difficult to obtain evidence sufficient to collect the tax in many of the transactions referred to in the bill, and it is therefore possible that at first the law will not have any very special effect.

Mr. WARNER. No special effect upon the gambling transaction—that is correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, sir, I was very glad to hear the brilliant young gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] express his devotion to silver and his devotion to the farmers of our country, because it was only ten months ago that he and his Populist brethren voted against the coinage of silver at the ratio of 17 to 1, at the ratio of 18 to 1, at the ratio of 19 to 1, and at the ratio of 20 to 1, and voted for it only at a ratio which he knew and they knew would not be adopted by this House. And the gentleman's brethren who preceded him in the Fifty-second Congress by their votes did that which they knew would make the coinage of silver impossible in that Congress.

When we brought the bill before the House to reduce the tariff tax burdens under which the 30,000,000 of people dependent upon farming were suffering, I felt confident that my young friend from Colorado would be found fighting in the front rank in this great effort of the Democracy to emancipate the people of our land from the wrongs inflicted upon them by the odious tax laws which were condemned at the polls in the great victory of 1892; but what was my surprise, regret, and pain to see him lead his entire party, bag and baggage, into the camp of our enemies and place himself under the leadership of the gentlemen from Maine, Mr. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and use his best efforts to prevent Democrats from even considering a bill to lift burdens from the farmers and other oppressed people of our land.

The history of our country shows that the Democratic party has always been the farmer's friend, and is the only party which has not done the farmer the grossest wrong and injustice. To sustain this assertion I will read from the records of Congress, which show that not only has the Republican party legislated against the farmer, but they have been joined and aided in inflicting this great wrong by the Greenbackers, Populists, or Third-party men, no matter under what name they appear, and notwithstanding the pretended devotion of these parties to the farming interests of the country.

BUT TWO POLITICAL PARTIES IN THIS COUNTRY.

I think no one will question but that there never was, and in the nature of things there never can be, but two political parties in this country—the one contending for laws which give the greatest power possible to the central Government, and the other demanding laws which give the greatest power possible to the people.

From the earliest history of man there has been an almost irresistible struggle for power by the few and a never-ending strife for liberty by the great body of the people.

Our forefathers fled from the intolerance and oppression of the centralized powers of the Old World, and after overcoming dangers and privations, established a democratic republic in this land.

Democracy has its origin from the two Greek words, demos, the people, and cratea, to possess, to govern. The essence of democracy is to seek in its utmost purity the voice of the people—to have laws to express the wishes of the people, and which are enacted solely for the people's good.

Such a government attains the most prosperity, the purest virtue, the highest culture, and the noblest manhood.

JACKSON AND THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY DENOUNCED NATIONAL BANKS.

Under the guidance of such men as Jefferson and Jackson we had a happy and prosperous land. There were no laws to rob the many and enrich the few; poverty and want were hardly known, and plutocracy and monopoly were unheard-of words to free American people. Jackson's great mind saw that a national bank, which virtually makes a favored few the financial partners of the Government Treasury, would become a nursery of evil. He said that such a bank would concentrate the moneyed power of the Union, make the rich richer, and the potent more powerful, while the humbler members of society, the farmers, mechanics, and laborers, would be the victims of the injustice.

The Democratic platforms of 1840, 1844, 1848, 1852, 1856, and 1860 denounced such an institution as—of deadly hostility to the best interest of the country, dangerous to our republican institutions and the liberties of the people, and calculated to place the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power and above the laws and will of the people.

The Republican party came into power in 1861, the avowed champion of a strong centralized Government.

And no one will deny but that the laws enacted by that party have all tended to benefit the few at the expense of the many.

The laws enacted by this party have favored banks and bondholders. They have given privileges to the rich and powerful at the expense of the humbler people of our land. Financial laws, tariff laws, and tax laws have all tended in the same way and have all attained the same purpose, but it is gratifying to see the evidence that the Democratic party had always opposed every encroachment upon the rights and liberties of the great mass of the people.

REPUBLICANS CREATE NATIONAL BANKS.

On February 13, 1863 (Globe, page 897), the Senate voted upon the bill to charter national banks, called the national currency bill. Twenty-one Republicans and 2 Democrats voted for the bill, and 16 Democrats and 5 Republicans voted against it. This bill was voted upon in the House on February 20, 1863 (Globe, pages 1147 and 1148). On the vote for the previous question 73 Republicans voted for it and 51 Democrats voted against it. On the vote to lay the bill on the table 49 Democrats voted for the resolution and 79 Republicans against it.

On the vote ordering the bill to a third reading 79 Republicans voted for it and 53 Democrats voted against it. On the final passage of the bill 76 Republicans voted for it and 47 Democrats voted against it. This law has already cost the people more than $400,000,000. All these votes were practically upon strict party lines. Of the 78 affirmative votes by which the national-bank bill was finally passed 76 were Republicans and 2 were Democrats.

The negative vote was composed of Democrats and a few Republicans, some of whom were interested in banks chartered by States.

The law was approved February 25, 1863, and is found in Statutes at Large, volume 12, pages 665 to 682.

In April, 1864, the law which sought to perpetuate national banks was before Congress. Every Democrat in both Houses voted against the bill, while the radicals and independents, with the exception of one in the lower House and two in the Senate, voted for it.

On April 6, 1864 (Globe, page 1451), upon an amendment favorable to national banks, 75 Republicans voted for the amendment and 54 Democrats voted against.

On April 16, 1864 (Globe, page 1682), on Mr. Felton's amendment to greatly relieve national banks from taxation, 70 Republicans voted for the amendment and 59 Democrats voted against it.

On April 18, 1864 (Globe, page 1695), a vote was had upon a resolution—

That the expansion of the bank circulation of the country, producing general and ruinous speculation, should be repressed by taxing the issues of the State banks.

A solid phalanx of Democrats, including such men as Francis Kernan, George H. Pendleton, J. V. L. Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, and Fernando Wood, voted against the resolution, and it was passed by a solid vote of Republicans.

Upon the final passage of the bill there were three yea-and-nay votes in the House; a motion to reconsider, a motion to lay on the table, and a vote on the passage of the bill.

On April 18, 1864 (Globe, page 1697), on Mr. Rollins's motion to lay Mr. Brooks' motion on the table to reconsider the vote by which the national currency or national bank bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, 75 Republicans voted for the motion and 57 Democrats voted against it.

On April 18, 1864 (Globe, page 1697), on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion to lay the national-bank bill on the table, 56 Democrats voted for the motion and 75 Republicans voted against it.

On April 18, 1864 (Globe, page 1697), on passage of the national-bank or currency bill, 77 Republicans voted for the bill and 63 Democrats voted against it.

On May 24, 1864 (Globe, page 2448), on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion to table objectionable amendments to the bank bill, 56 Democrats voted for the motion and 78 Republicans voted against it. The various amendments to the bill were voted on in the Senate April 28, 1864 (Globe, pages 1957 and 1959), May 5 (page 2123), May 6 (pages 2142, 2143, and 2145), May 9 (pages 2174, 2180, and 2183), and May 10 (pages 2200, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, and 2206), and the bill was passed on May 10 (page 2207). In nearly all the numerous votes the Democrats voted almost solidly against the establishment of the system, and the Republicans voted almost solidly in favor of the system.

The bill was approved June 3, 1864. (See Statutes at Large volume 13, pages 99 to 118.) It will therefore be seen that the objectionable national-bank law was solidly and untiringly opposed from first to last by the Democrats in Congress, and was passed by the votes, speeches, and efforts of the Republicans.

REPUBLICANS LEGISLATE FOR THE BOND-HOLDER AND AGAINST THE PEOPLE.

On February 28, 1865, the House passed the bill to provide ways and means for the support of the Government. The bill provided that all bonds or other obligations issued under this act should be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority. The vote was taken viva voce and Mr. Hooper moved to reconsider and to lay the motion on the table. Upon this 85 Republicans voted affirmatively, and 43 Democrats voted in the negative.

The original contract was to pay the principal of the United States bonds in currency, and the obligation to so pay them was recited upon the face of every bond.

In March, 1869, a Congress largely composed and under the entire control of bank officers and bondholders enacted a law that these bonds should be paid in coin, and thus embezzled $1,000,000,000 of the hard earnings of an honest people. Every Democrat but 1 voted against this iniquity, and all the Republicans but 12 voted for it. In the Senate 42 Republicans voted for it and nearly every Democratic Senator voted against it.

The bill declaring that currency bonds should be paid in coin was voted on in the Senate March 11, 1869. (See pages 46, 53, and 56 of the Globe), and on March 15, 1869 (page 70).

In the House it was voted upon on March 12, 1869 (pages 60-61).

In March, 1869, a resolution was offered to lighten the burdens of the people by placing a tax on the bonds, and exempting from taxation such necessaries as salt, tea, coffee, sugar, matches, and tobacco. The Democrats voted solid for and the Radicals solid against it.

In 1870 a funding law was passed by which $500,000,000 was taken from the people and given to the bondholders. The Democrats in both the House and Senate voted solid against it, and all but two Republicans voted for it.

The funding bill of July, 1870, was voted for, upon pages 5026, 5059, 5064, and 5070.

The Senate bill was voted upon, page 5467, and was finally passed on July 13, 1870 (page 5523).

In July, 1870, Congress passed the Sherman bill to increase the national-bank circulation $54,000,000. All but four Democrats voted against the bill, and it was passed by the almost solid vote of the Republicans.

REPUBLICANS ADVOCATE CURRENCY CONTRACTION AND OPPOSE SILVER COINAGE.

On June 14, 1870 (Globe, page 4434), Mr. Randall's bill to substitute $300,000,000 United States currency for national-bank notes was defeated; all the Republicans but 10 voted against it, and every Democrat but 6 voted for it. The failure of this measure has already cost us $260,000,000.

Soon after, Mr. MORGAN'S bill (Globe, page 4435), which sought the same relief, but extended the substitution to $400,000,000, was defeated by 116 Radicals, while it was supported by the almost solid vote of the Democracy.

On June 15, 1870 (Globe, page 4471), Mr. Ingersoll moved to authorize additional legal tender notes; 35 Democrats voted for it and 88 Republicans voted against it.

In 1872 a resolution was introduced indorsing and approving the ruinous Radical financial policy. Every Democrat voted against and every Republican voted for the resolution.

This system was a flagrant robbery of the people for the purpose of further increasing the wealth of bankers and bondholders. In 1872 the Secretary of the Treasury adopted a ruling which recognized the 5-20 currency bonds as coin bonds, which robbed the people of hundreds of millions of dollars. This was denounced by the people; but the Republican House of Representatives, in order to sustain the Secretary in this robbery, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the Secretary of the Treasury, in negotiating the loan authorized by the act of July 14, 1870, has neither increased the bonded debt nor incurred an expenditure contrary to law.

The vote stood 110 Republicans for the resolution and 86 Democrats against it. It was a strict party vote, every Republican voting to rob the people and every Democrat voting in their defense.

The bondholders and bankers, not satisfied with stealing $1,000,000,000 by the law of March, 1869, which made the bonds payable in coin, now finding an increase in the production of silver, they in 1873 demonetized that metal, and thus required the taxed people to pay them gold for their untaxed bonds.

This law of necessity increased the purchasing power of gold, which still further added to the wealth of the rich and to the distress of the mass of the people.

This bill was rushed through under a suspension of the rules by a strict party vote.

In 1875, by the same rule, the resumption act, "that great king of destroyers," was passed by Republican dishonesty. In the House every Democrat voted against it, and nine-tenths of the Republicans sustained and voted for this law, which has already caused so much bankruptcy, ruin, and distress.

This, Mr. Speaker, was the record of the financial legislation of the Republican party, which I portrayed in a speech on July 10, 1878. I only included the record up to the end of the Forty-third Congress, which ended its existence on March 3, 1875.

STRUGGLES OF DEMOCRATS FOR THE PEOPLE.

The beginning of the year 1876 found the Forty-fourth Congress in working order and determined to do something for our oppressed people.

This was the first Democratic House of Representatives which had been elected since 1860. The resumption act was bankrupting and destroying the people. This Democratic House passed a law repealing the "resumption act," although resisted in every possible way by the Republicans.

On August 5, 1876 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 5232), Mr. Cox's bill to repeal the resumption act was voted upon; 96 Democrats voted for it and 59 Republicans against it.

On December 13, 1876 (RECORD, page 172), the House voted upon a bill for the free coinage of silver; 124 Democrats voted for it and 36 Republicans voted against it.

On November 5, 1877 (RECORD, page 241), another bill for free coinage of silver was brought before the House; 97 Democrats voted for the bill and 24 Republicans voted against it.

On November 23, 1877 (RECORD, page 632), another bill was considered and voted upon to repeal the resumption act; 109 Democrats voted for the measure and 92 Republicans voted against it.

On February 28, 1878 (RECORD, page 1420), the House passed the silver bill over the President's veto; 122 Democrats voted for it and 52 Republicans voted against it.

On May 31, 1878, the bill was considered and passed to forbid any further retirement of legal-tender notes; 106 Democrats voted for it and 28 Republicans voted against it.

June 6, 1878 (RECORD, page 4204), upon Mr. Tucker's amendment to reduce taxes, in the interest of the people, 133 Democrats voted for the amendment and 101 Republicans voted against it.

On January 15, 1879 (RECORD, page 473), Mr. Fernando Wood, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill to make United States notes receivable for duties on imports. This was a measure clearly in the interest of the people and against banks and monopolies. The bill passed the House, 108 Democrats voting for it and 31 Republicans voting against it.

Pending its passage, Mr. Garfield, in the interest of banks, sought to amend the bill and limit its operation. Mr. Garfield's amendment provided that the bill should only hold good "so long as said notes shall be exchangeable at par with coin." Garfield's amendment was voted for by 67 Republicans, and was voted against by 94 Democrats, and was defeated. On April 5, 1880 (RECORD, pages 27, 42), the following resolution was voted upon:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House, that portion of the interest-bearing debt of the United States which shall become redeemable in the year 1881, or prior thereto, being in amount $782,000,000, should not be refunded beyond the power of the Government to call in said obligations and pay them at any time, but should be paid as rapidly as possible, and according to contract. To enable the Government to meet these obligations, the mints of the United States should be operated to their full capacity in the coinage of standard silver dollars, and such other coinage as the business interests of the country may require.

Seventy-three Democrats voted for the resolution and 90 Republicans voted against it.

GREENBACKERS FALSE TO THEIR PLEDGES AND TO THE PEOPLE.

In January, 1881, the bill was under consideration to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. It was a blow at the national-bank system, and was bitterly opposed by bankers and moneyed men. On January 19 (RECORD, page 769) the vote was taken; 125 Democrats voted for the bill, and 109 Republicans and 8 Greenbackers voted with the Republicans against the bill. These Greenbackers were elected to Congress with a pledge of undying hostility to national banks. The bill passed the Senate on February 18. Every Democrat, 38 in number, voted for the bill, and it was opposed by Republicans, not a single Democrat voting against it. On March 3 President Hayes vetoed the bill, and in his veto measure used these words:

I should not deem it my duty to interpose my constitutional objection to the passage of the present bill if it did not contain in its fifth section provisions which, in my judgment, seriously impair the value and tend to the destruction of the present national banking system of the country.

It should be observed that 8 Greenbacks voted with 109 Republicans against the bill which President Hayes vetoed solely because it tended to the destruction of the national-bank system.

On February 17, 1882 (RECORD, page 1246), upon a vote favorable to Republicans and against Democrats and against Democratic principles, 5 Greenbackers voted with 120 Republicans against 95 Democrats.

REPUBLICANS AND GREENBACKERS EXTEND CHARTERS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

On April 3, 1882 (RECORD, page 2536), the bill was voted upon to extend the charter of national banks; 103 Republicans voted for it, and not a single Republican voted against it. The bill was opposed by 69 Democrats. On May 18 (RECORD, page 4076), Mr. BLAND moved to amend the bill to extend charters of national banks by providing for the retirement of national-bank currency and substituting United States Treasury notes. This would have saved the people $20,000,000 a year. Sixty-five Democrats, 2 Republicans, 2 Readjusters, and 2 Greenbackers voted for this just and proper bill, while it was opposed by 114 Republicans and 5 Greenbackers, and I repeat that every one of these 5 Greenbackers was elected by pledging extreme and unrelenting hostility to national banks.

It is astounding to the last degree that these Greenbackers elected to the 46th and 47th Congresses so utterly violated their pledges to their people and voted with the Republican enemies of the people and against such beneficent Democratic measures. It tends to show that these Greenbackers were controlled by Republican leaders and voted with the Republicans when required to do so by the leaders of the Republican party.

On the same day Mr. Randall and Mr. CULBERSON moved to amend the bill by provisions which restricted the contraction of the currency; 76 Democrats voted for the amendment, while 105 Republicans voted solid against it.

On May 19, 1882 (RECORD, page 4121), Mr. JONES of Arkansas made another motion to prevent contraction of the currency; 76 Democrats voted for the measure, and 94 Republicans voted solid against it.

On May 19, 1882, a bill was voted upon in the Senate to extend national-bank charters; 26 Republicans voted for it and 12 Democrats voted against it.

On June 21, 1882 (RECORD, page 5177), Senator Beck's measure against national banks was voted on in the Senate; 20 Democrats voted for it and 29 Republicans voted against it. In the House, upon the final passage of the bill which extended national-bank charters, 103 Republicans voted for the bill and but 2 voted against it, while 57 Democrats voted against and opposed the bill.

On June 21, 1882, while the bill was before the Senate, Senator Beck offered an amendment which was in the line of free coinage of silver and expansion of the currency; 20 Democrats voted for Senator Beck's amendment, while 26 Republicans voted against the amendment and not a single one voted for it.

On June 22 (RECORD, page 5224) the bill to extend the charters of the national banks passed the Senate; 26 Republicans voted for the bill, and 12 Democrats and 1 Republican voted against it.

On July 10, 1882 (RECORD, page 5852) the conference report extending the charters of national banks was voted upon in the House; 99 Republicans voted for the report and 69 Democrats voted against it.

On June 27, 1882 (RECORD, page 5415), on Mr. SPRINGER'S amendment to recommit pending bill, with instructions to abolish many of the most oppressive internal-revenue taxes, the Democrats all voted for it; the Republicans and 1 Greenbacker voted against it, and 10 Greenbackers refrained from voting.

On June 27, 1882, upon passage of the internal-revenue bill, the Republicans and 1 Greenbacker voted for it; the Democrats voted against it, and 7 Greenbackers refrained from voting. (See RECORD, page 5422.)

On April 15, 1884, the Morrison tariff bill was voted upon in the House; 151 Democrats voted for it and 124 Republicans voted against it.

On June 17, 1886 (RECORD, page 5830), the Morrison tariff bill was voted upon in the House; 135 Democrats voted for it and 121 Republicans voted against it.

On July 21, 1888 (RECORD, page 6660), a vote was had in the House on the Mills tariff bill; 161 Democrats voted for it and 146 Republicans voted against it.

On January 22, 1889, a vote was had in the Senate on the Republican substitute for the Mills tariff bill; 32 Republicans voted for it and 30 Democrats voted against it.

DEMOCRATS VOTE FOR FREE COINAGE OF SILVER.

On April 8, 1886 (RECORD, page 3300), a bill was voted upon in the House for the free coinage of silver; 96 Democrats voted for the bill in the interests of the people and 93 Republicans voted against the bill and against the interests of the people.

On the same day (RECORD, page 3300) an amendment was offered to suspend the coinage of silver; 51 Republicans voted for this amendment and 130 Democrats voted against it.

On June 7, 1890 (RECORD, page 5813) a motion was made to recommit the bullion bill and report back a bill for the free coinage of silver; 101 Democrats voted for the motion and 27 Republicans voted against it.

On the same day (RECORD, page 5814) the bullion bill passed the House; 134 Republicans voted for it and 112 Democrats voted against it. Mr. Featherstone, a Farmers' Alliance man from Arkansas, voted with the 134 Republicans in favor of this bill, which was in favor of banks and monopolies and against the people.

On June 25, 1890 (RECORD, page 6510) Mr. BLAND offered an amendment in favor of free coinage of silver; 112 Democrats voted for it and 130 Republicans voted against it.

On July 12, 1890 (RECORD, page 7218), the conference report on the bullion bill was voted upon in the House; 121 Republicans voted for it and 90 Democrats voted against it. Mr. Featherstone, a Farmers' Alliance man, voted with the 121 Republicans and against the 90 Democrats.

It will be seen that this Farmers' Alliance man was so anxious to aid the Republicans in their vicious legislation, that he even voted with them for the pernicious Sherman bullion law which stopped the coinage of silver.

On July 12, 1890 (RECORD, page 7188), the conference report on the bullion bill was voted upon in the Senate; 39 Republicans voted for the bill and 26 Democrats voted against it.

On May 21, 1890 (RECORD, page 5112), a vote was had on the passage of the McKinley tariff bill in the House; 164 Republicans voted for it and 142 Democrats voted against it. On September 10, 1890 (RECORD, page 9943), the McKinley tariff bill passed the Senate; 40 Republicans voted for it and 29 Democrats voted against it. On September 27, 1890 (RECORD, page 10641), the vote was had in the House on the conference report on the McKinley tariff bill; 151 Republicans voted for it and 80 Democrats voted against it.

On September 30, 1890 (RECORD, page 10740), a vote was had in the Senate on the conference report on the McKinley tariff bill; 33 Republicans voted for it and 27 Democrats voted against it. On July 1, 1892 (RECORD, page 5719), a bill for the free coinage of silver passed the Senate; 19 Democrats voted for it and 18 Republicans voted against it.

On October 28, 1893 (RECORD, page 2920), the Senate voted upon the amendment to require the coinage of not less than 2,000,000 ounces of silver per month. Twenty-three Democrats, including Mr. ALLEN of Nebraska and Mr. KYLE of South Dakota, voted for it and 20 Republicans voted against it.

On October 30, 1893 (RECORD, page 2958), the Senate voted upon the House bill for unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause in the Sherman act; 24 Republicans voted for the bill and in favor of money contraction and 21 Democrats voted against the bill and in favor of an increase of circulation.

On February 1, 1894 (RECORD, page 2041), on the passage of the Wilson tariff bill in the House, which greatly reduced the tariff on clothing and other articles used by the laboring people and taxed the incomes of people of wealth, 196 Democrats voted for the bill and 122 Republicans voted against it, and not even one single Republican voted for this beneficent measure.

In order to show at a glance that Democrats have voted upon all financial measures in the interests of the people, I have prepared four tables showing how Democrats and Republicans have voted on these questions during the last thirty years.

First. Table No. 1, showing votes in the House of Representatives upon Republican measures in the interests of banks and monopolies and against the people.

Second. Table No. 2, showing the same character of votes in the Senate.

Third. Table No. 3, showing votes in the House of Representatives upon Democratic measures against banks and monopolies and in the interest of the people.

Fourth. Table No. 4, showing the same character of votes in the Senate.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that all Democrats who examine these tables will hesitate a long time before deserting a party which has always been true to the best interests of the people and which through years of oppression voted in a solid phalanx against the enactment of the oppressive laws which have created the great moneyed monopolies and gone so far towards dividing our country into two great classes, a few millionaires on one side and the struggling mass of the people on the other.

July 1, 1892	On passage of bill in the Senate for free coinage of silver.	19	18
Oct. 28, 1893	On vote to require the coinage of not less than 2,000,000 ounces of silver per month.	23	20
Oct. 30, 1893	On vote for unconditional repeal of purchasing clause in Sherman act.*	21	24

*This vote was not regarded as partisan or political.

Having given some facts regarding the financial record of the Republican party, I will now proceed to make some further allusions to the financial history of that period, and will make some reference to the political organizations called the Greenback party, Populist party, or third party.

The elections of 1874 and 1876 were very favorable to the Democrats, and the Republican party clearly saw that unless the Democracy could be divided the Republicans would be overwhelmingly defeated. The Greenback party sprung into existence, and elected some dozen Greenback members to the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses. In some cases it was contended that these Greenback members were aided in their elections by money furnished by the Republican executive committee. By artful and deceptive promises many men who had been good Democrats were deceived and enticed into casting their votes for Greenback candidates, thus detracting from the power and strength of the Democratic party.

Many of the Greenback candidates in part won their elections by denouncing Democrats whom they were trying to defeat as not sufficiently Democratic, but after securing their elections they voted in Congress with the Republicans and against the Democrats upon many matters of vital importance to the interests of the people. To such an extent was this carried that it was openly charged that these Greenbackers were pledged to vote with Republicans at all times when their votes were demanded by Republican leaders and managers. If there was no bargain or pledge of this sort, then these Greenbackers voted from choice against the people and in favor of monopoly.

GREENBACKERS VOTE AGAINST THE PEOPLE.

Most of these votes against the people and in favor of monopoly were viva voce, or upon division, or upon votes by tellers, of which of course there is no record; and sometimes, when the yeas and nays were demanded, they voted with the Republicans, but frequently, when votes were taken by yeas and nays, they refrained from voting. But notwithstanding this, a glance at the Journal and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the Greenbackers were often recorded as opposed to Democratic measures, and to measures which they had promised their constituents to support. To illustrate:

On April 5, 1879, RECORD, page 257, a Greenbacker, who was elected protesting that he was a better Democrat than his opponent, moved to strike out the sixth section of the army bill, viz, that part of the bill which prohibited the use of soldiers and marshals at the polls. The same Greenbacker on June 26, 1879, RECORD, page 2365, sought by amendment to defeat the bill which required nonpartisan jurors in Federal courts. He also made a speech for the amendment, which is on page 2365, Forty-sixth Congress.

On June 10, 1879 (RECORD, page 1908), on the vote in the House to prevent marshals and soldiers from controlling elections in the South, when the yeas and nays were called 102 Democrats voted for the bill, 84 Republicans voted against it, and 13 Greenbackers refrained from voting.

The Greenbackers therefore showed they were clearly in favor of having elections controlled by soldiers and marshals.

On another vote on the same bill 13 Greenbackers refrained from voting upon the call of the yeas and nays.

On June 27, 1879 (RECORD, page 2397), the House voted upon a bill which prohibited the use of marshals and soldiers at the polls; 13 Greenbackers refrained from voting.

June 30, 1879 (RECORD, page 2443), the bill was vetoed, and the same day it was voted upon in the House 14 Greenbackers refrained from voting.

In December, a bill was voted upon to prevent officers of the Government from intermeddling in elections by threats or menaces, or contributions of money, or the use of official patronage. The Republicans voted against this, and when the yeas and nays were ordered 13 Greenbackers refrained from voting.

On January 12, 1880 (RECORD, page 289), 4 Greenbackers voted with 99 Republicans against free trade on salt, and 6 Greenbackers refused to vote, and thus aided the Republicans in defeating this effort of the Democrats to give the people free salt; and on March 8, 1880, upon the same subject, 7 Greenbackers voted with 97 Republicans.

March 8, 1880 (RECORD, page 1385), on Mr. Samford's bill to reduce the tariff on articles used by the poor 50 per cent, 8 Greenbackers voted with 102 Republicans against the measure.

March 23, 1880, on Mr. Townshend's bill to put salt and many other articles on the free list, 5 Greenbackers voted with 100 Republicans. On a second vote regarding the subject 8 Greenbackers voted with 108 Republicans, and on a third vote on this subject 7 Greenbackers voted with 105 Republicans.

In the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses there was a great struggle on the part of the Republicans to obtain an unfair apportionment of representation in Congress, which was unduly favorable to Republicans and did great injustice to Democrats.

March 3, 1881 (RECORD, page 2434), on this question 6 Greenbackers voted with the 110 Republicans on the bill favorable to Republicans.

On the same day, on another vote favorable to Republicans, 11 Greenbackers voted with 116 Republicans, and on the passage of the bill, which was favorable to Republicans, 12 Greenbackers voted with 114 Republicans, and on the passage of the bill in the Forty-seventh Congress 6 Greenbackers voted with 136 Republicans. On Mr. BELTZHOOVER'S amendment, which was favorable to Democrats, 3 Greenbackers voted against it with 129 Republicans.

June 27, 1882 (RECORD, page 5415), on Mr. SPRINGER'S amendment to repeal all internal revenue taxes except taxes on whisky, Democrats all voted for it, Republicans all voted against it, and the Greenbackers refrained from voting.

March, 1882, upon the vote to increase the powers and privileges of national banks, which was favorable to monopoly, 2 Greenbackers voted with 99 Republicans, and against the people.

On motion to reconsider the vote, 4 Greenbackers voted with 105 Republicans.

On Bayne's amendment in favor of monopoly, 7 Greenbackers voted with 95 Republicans.

On Buckner's amendment favorable to the people, 8 Greenbackers joined 105 Republicans in voting against the people.

February 17, 1882 (RECORD, page 1251), on Mr. Colerick's amendment favorable to Democrats, 6 Greenbackers voted against it with 128 Republicans. On Mr. Colerick's motion to reconsider, 4 Greenbackers voted with 124 Republicans.

GREENBACKERS VOTE IN FAVOR OF NATIONAL BANKS.

In 1881 Mr. Wood reported a bill to refund the debt in 3 per cent bonds, payable at the pleasure of the United States after five years and payable in ten years. The bill also authorized the issuance of $300,000,000 of small certificates to be used as currency, which issues could be redeemed after one year. The bill also provided that these bonds and certificates should be used for the redemption of bonds bearing a higher rate of interest, and that after May 1, 1881, these bonds alone should be received from national banks as security for circulation. This would have made 3 per cent bonds sell for at least 115. On this measure, which was very favorable to the people and against the banks, the Greenbackers arrayed themselves side by side with the Republicans in favor of banks and against the people.

On January 19, 1881 (RECORD, page 783), the vote was taken upon the passage of the bill; 8 Greenbackers together with 109 Republicans voted against the bill and 125 Democrats voted for the bill. Upon another vote 10 Greenbackers voted against it together with 104 Republicans. Upon the return of the bill from the Senate 7 Greenbackers voted against it together with 86 Republicans.

The Greenbackers who voted against this bill were De La Matyr, Ford, Forsythe, Gillette, Jones, Lowe, Murch, Weaver, Wright, Yocum.

To show that this bill was favorable to the people and against national banks, and that the Greenbackers voted against the bill with the full knowledge of this, I will read from a speech delivered by Gen. Weaver January 19, 1881 (RECORD, page 766). In speaking of this bill he says:

> First. By the law as it now stands national banks may use any and all kinds of Government bonds to secure their circulation.
> Second. They may deposit in pledge bonds upon which all interest has ceased.
> Third. These banks may, whenever and as often as they see proper, retire and in turn increase their circulation by depositing lawful money with the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, all three of these privileges are taken away by the provisions of this bill.

It showed that President Hayes fully understood the bill was against national banks when he vetoed it on March 3, 1881 (RECORD, page 2433). The veto message says:

> I should not deem it my duty to interpose my constitutional objection to the passage of the present bill if it did not contain, in its fifth section, provisions which in my judgment seriously impair the value and tend to the destruction of the present national banking system of the country. This system has now been in operation almost twenty years. No safer or more beneficial banking system was ever established.

Now, the bill passed the House by only 10 majority, and the Democrats saw clearly they could not pass the bill over the President's veto by a two-thirds vote. Therefore, Mr. TUCKER (RECORD, page 2434) moved that the veto message lie on the table, to be called up hereafter, and on this 5 Greenbackers voted with the Republicans and against about 125 Democrats, including such men as Carlisle, BLACKBURN, Blount, CULBERSON, Forney, HATCH, HOOKER, Kenna, MCMILLIN, MILLS, Morrison, Reagan, SPRINGER, and Stevenson. It seemed very strange to see Greenbackers, who were elected on a pledge to oppose national banks, vote against this measure. In reply to an inquiry asking why they voted with the Republicans against the bill, a prominent politician said that if the Democrats should succeed in enacting such a bill into law it would so increase the popularity of the Democratic party as to enable it to overcome the combined efforts of the Republicans and Greenbackers.

March 26, 1882, on the Chinese question, 3 Greenbackers voted with 94 Republicans.

GREENBACKERS AID REPUBLICANS TO VIOLATE THE CONSTITUTION.

March 29, 1882, on the vote to violate the Constitution and destroy time-honored rules of the House of Representatives and give unbridled authority to the Republicans, all the Greenbackers present voted with 144 Republicans.

This vote is recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4329. Had these Greenbackers refrained from voting, the Republicans would not have been able to commit this outrage upon the Constitution.

In their efforts to prevent this outrage the Democrats exhausted every effort possible, and they would have succeeded had not the Greenbackers joined hands with the Republicans.

On the morning of May 29, 1882, before the Republicans were able to reach the vote to which I have referred, the Democrats succeeded in forcing four yea-and-nay votes. The first is recorded on page 4305 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and every Greenbacker present and voting is recorded as voting with the Republicans.

The second is on page 4325, the third is on page 4327, and the fourth is on page 4328, and in each case the RECORD shows that every Greenbacker present and voting cast his vote with the Republicans.

On a vote in the House to seat a negro, Lynch, in place of a white Democrat 5 Greenbackers voted with 120 Republicans.

On vote to unseat a Democrat, Dibble, and seat Mackey, a Republican, 7 Greenbackers voted with 140 Republicans.

On vote to unseat Tillman, a Democrat, and seat a negro, Smalls, 4 Greenbackers voted with 140 Republicans.

On vote on the previous question of unseating Gen. Shelly, a Democrat, 5 Greenbackers voted with 138 Republicans.

On vote to unseat Gen. Shelly, 5 Greenbackers voted with 140 Republicans.

The Greenbackers commenced their career of joining their votes to the votes of Republicans and against Democrats at the beginning of the Forty-sixth Congress. On March 19, 1879, page 27 of the RECORD, and before that Congress had been in session two hours, Mr. FRYE, a Republican from Maine, made a motion to prevent Mr. Hull, a Democrat, from being sworn in as a member, the purpose being, if possible, to seat Mr. Hull's opponent, who was an extreme radical Republican. This was an insult to a sovereign State, the governor and secretary of state of said Commonwealth having certified to the member's election. Eleven Greenbackers voted with 126 Republicans for this outrage, and 140 Democrats voted against it. Mr. Harris, a Democrat from Virginia, then moved that Mr. Hull be sworn in as a member. Mr. Garfield called for the yeas and nays, and 12 Greenbackers and 124 Republicans voted against it, and 140 Democrats voted for the motion.

The 12 Greenbackers who voted against seating Mr. Hull were: Messrs. Barlow, De La Martyr, Ford, Forsythe, Gillette, Jones, Kelley, Lowe, Murch, Daniel L. Russell, Weaver, and Yocum. This vote is recorded in the RECORD, March 19, 1879, page 28.

The Greenbackers continued their support of the Republican party during their entire career of four years in the House of Representatives, and including the last night of the session, March 3, 1882, when they repeatedly voted with Republicans to unseat Governor Richardson, of South Carolina, and seat a negro named Samuel Lee, said negro Lee having no claim to the seat whatever, even a Republican election committee having made a report that he was not elected. On this vote 4 Greenbackers voted with 119 Republicans to seat the negro and 114 Democrats voted against it. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session Forty-seventh Congress, page 3752.) The Republicans, assisted more or less by the Greenbackers, continued their efforts to unseat Governor Richardson and seat the negro Samuel Lee. Several yea-and- nay votes were had. They are recorded in the RECORD, pages 3753, 3754, 3855, 3759, 3760, 3764, 3772, second session Forty-seventh Congress. The Democrats broke a quorum twice during the contest, and on both occasions the Republicans demanded a call of the House.

March 2, 1883, in the case of Sessinghaus vs. Frost, 7 Greenbackers voted with 119 Republicans and against 110 Democrats to unseat a Democrat, R. Graham Frost, and seat a Republican, Sessinghaus. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session Forty-seventh Congress, page 3631.)

GREENBACKERS VOTE WITH REPUBLICANS FOR HIGH-TARIFF TAX.

But worse than all that, in the great struggle made by Democrats to defeat the iniquitous tariff act of March 3, 1883, many of the Greenbackers voted with the Republicans and against the people. On the vote to establish the Tariff Commission, 6 Greenbackers voted with the 117 Republicans and against 58 Democrats, and on the vote on the bill 4 Greenbackers voted with 136 Republicans against 112 Democrats.

On vote to reduce the tariff tax the Greenbackers very generally voted with the Republicans against the Democrats, and on vote to increase the tariff tax the Greenbackers again voted with the Republicans and against the Democrats.

June 6, 1882, on bill to more than double tariff tax upon woolen goods all the Greenbackers who voted, cast their vote with the Republicans for this iniquity.

March 30, 1882, on Tariff Commission, 4 Greenbackers voted with 113 Republicans. On second vote, 6 Greenbackers voted with 124 Republicans. When the bill passed, 7 Greenbackers voted with 116 Republicans.

On June 6, 1882, 5 Greenbackers voted with 99 Republicans against abolishing the tariff tax on trace chains.

On December 16, 1881, on the election of officers of the House of Representatives, upon the vote whether the officers of the House should be Democratic or Republican, 8 Greenbackers voted with 147 Republicans for the Republican officers and against Democratic officers.

DEMOCRATS SOLIDLY FOR—REPUBLICANS SOLIDLY AGAINST FARMERS.

On April 7, 1892, RECORD, page 3057, on a vote "to place wool on the free list and to reduce the duties on woolen goods," such as are worn by farmers and laboring people, 187 Democrats voted for it, and 57 Republicans and 1 Populist [Mr. OTIS of Kansas] voted against it.

On April 9, 1892, RECORD, page 3141, upon a vote to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton ties, cotton gins, and parts thereof, 159 Democrats voted for it, and 44 Republicans voted against it.

On May 2, 1892, RECORD, page 3842, on a vote to put binding-twine for farmers on the free list, 176 Democrats voted for it, and 44 Republicans voted against it.

On July 8, 1892, RECORD, page 5906, on vote to reduce duty on tin plate and make it free after October 1, 1894, all for the benefit of farmers and laboring men, 199 Democrats voted for it, and 61 Republicans voted against it.

All these measures were specially in favor of farmers. With one or two exceptions the Democrats voted solidly for these bills, and the Republicans voted solidly against them.

POPULISTS AID REPUBLICANS TO DEFEAT FREE COINAGE OF SILVER IN 1892.

On March 24, 1892, the House voted upon a bill for free silver coinage. Upon Mr. BURROWS'S motion to lay the bill on the table the vote (RECORD, page 2544) was 148 yeas and 148 nays. The Speaker then added his name to the negative vote. Every Democrat south of the Ohio River except two voted in favor of silver.

Mr. Johnson, a gold-standard man, moved to reconsider the above vote, which motion Mr. BLAND moved to lay on the table. The motion was lost by one vote, page 2545. Mr. Johnson's motion was then voted on and was carried by two votes, page 2546.

The Southern Democrats immediately commenced a struggle to get the one additional vote necessary to secure free silver coinage, and the gold-standard Democrats combined with the Republican party to get one vote to defeat free silver coinage. Hon. Hosea H. Rockwell was the only man from New York or New England who voted with the Democrats for free silver coinage.

He had been a brave soldier in a white regiment during the war and had been regularly and fairly elected to Congress, but notwithstanding this the Republicans and gold-standard Democrats combined to drive him from Congress and put in his place Henry F. Noyes, who was not elected and who was a colonel of a negro regiment during the war, but was an extreme gold-standard Republican. After a long struggle they succeeded in getting a vote on this contest on April 22, 1892, less than a month from the date of the vote for free coinage of silver.

This was the supreme struggle for silver and for the people, and every member of Congress fully realized that a vote against Mr. Rockwell was a vote for the gold standard and against the people, and yet with that knowledge every People's party man or third party man in this supreme moment deserted their pretended principles and the people and voted with the Republicans against silver and in favor of a gold standard Republican.

The Populists or third party men who thus voted against the coinage of silver were Messrs. BAKER, Clover, DAVIS, Halvorson, KEM, Otis, SIMPSON, Watson and Winn. They all voted with the gold-standard Republicans and gold-standard Democrats in the numerous votes, by viva voce, by divisions, and by tellers, and also in three separate yea-and-nay votes. The first of these yea-and-nay votes is recorded on page 3539; the second, page 3540, and the third, page 3541, of the RECORD, all on April 22, 1892. Mr. MCKEIGHAN withheld his vote twice but otherwise voted with the gold-standard men.

POPULISTS VOTED AGAINST AND OPPOSED SILVER COINAGE IN 1893.

On a vote for a free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 17 to 1 (RECORD, August 28, 1893, page 1004), Mr. HARRIS, Mr. MCKEIGHAN, and Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina, Populists, Farmers' Alliance, or third party men, voted against 88 Democrats and voted with 111 Republicans against silver coinage at 17 to 1, and Mr. BAKER, Mr. BOEN, Mr. CANNON of California, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. HUDSON, Mr. KEM, Mr. PENCE, and Mr. SIMPSON sat in their seats and declined to vote.

On the vote for free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 18 to 1 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 28, 1893, pages 1005 and 1006), Messrs. HARRIS, KEM, MCKEIGHAN, and TALBERT of South Carolina voted against 88 Democrats and voted with 110 Republicans against silver coinage, and Messrs. BAKER, BOEN, DAVIS, HUDSON, PENCE, and SIMPSON sat in their seats and declined to vote.

On the vote for free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 19 to 1 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 28, 1893, pages 1005 and 1006), the vote and action of the Populists, or Third Party men, with the exception of Mr. CANNON of California, was the same as it was upon the vote for free unlimited coinage at the ratio of 17 to 1.

On the vote for free and unlimited coinage of silver at 20 to 1 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 28, 1893, page 1006) the vote and action of the Populists or third-party men was the same as the vote for free and unlimited coinage of silver at 18 to 1.

On a vote for the coinage of silver at 16 to 1, under the Bland-Allison act, Mr. NEWLANDS declined to vote. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 28, 1893, page 1007.)

POPULISTS AIDED REPUBLICANS UNDER MR. REED IN OPPOSING REDUCTION OF TARIFF TAXATION.

On a vote January 5, 1894 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 537), for taking up a bill for reducing tariff taxation and lightening the burdens upon the people, Messrs. BAKER, BOEN, DAVIS, HARRIS, HUDSON, KEM, NEWLANDS, PENCE, and SIMPSON, Populists, or third-party men, joined the solid Republican party under the leadership of the arch protectionists, Mr. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and refused to vote upon the bill, and in this manner made seven less than a quorum, and thus aided the Republican party in continuing oppressions upon the people.

On another vote, January 5, 1894 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 538), by which the Democrats again sought to take up and consider the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lighten the burdens upon the people, the same 9 Populists or third-party men again placed themselves under the leadership of those arch-protectionists, THOMAS B. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated action upon the bill.

Again on January 5, 1894 (RECORD, page 538), on another vote and third effort by which the Democrats again sought to take up and consider the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lessen the burdens of the people, the same 9 Populists or third-party men again placed themselves under the leadership of the arch protectionists, THOMAS B. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated action upon the bill.

Again, on January 5, 1894 (RECORD, page 539), on another vote and fourth effort by which the Democrats again sought to take up and consider the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lessen the burdens upon the people, the same 9 Populists or third party men again placed themselves under the leadership of the arch protectionists, THOMAS B. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated action upon the bill.

Again, on January 6, 1894 (RECORD, page 544), on another vote and fifth effort by which the Democrats again sought to take up and consider the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lessen the burdens upon the people, the same 9 Populists or third party men again placed themselves under the leadership of the arch protectionists, THOMAS B. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated action on the bill.

Again, on January 6, 1894 (RECORD, page 545), when the vote was had by which the Democrats again for the sixth time sought to take up and consider the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lighten the burdens upon the people, the same 9 third party men or Populists again placed themselves under the leadership of the arch protectionists, Messrs. REED and BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated action on the bill.

Again, on January 6, 1894 (RECORD, page 546), when the vote was had by which the Democrats again and for the seventh time sought to take up and consider the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lighten the burdens upon the people, the same 9 Populists or third party men again placed themselves under the leadership of the arch protectionists, Messrs. REED and BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated the action upon the bill.

On January 8, 1894 (RECORD, page 565), when the eighth vote was had to take up the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lighten the burdens upon the people, every one of the Populists or third party men again placed themselves under the leadership of the arch protectionists, THOMAS B. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and joined the solid Republican party, and thus defeated action upon the bill.

On January 8, 1894 (RECORD, page 570), on Mr. REED'S motion to recommit the order for the consideration of the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lessen the burdens upon the people, Messrs. BAKER, BOEN, DAVIS, HARRIS, KEM, NEWLANDS, PENCE, and SIMPSON refused to vote, and thus for the ninth time joined the solid Republican party under the leadership of Mr. REED and Mr. BOUTELLE, and thus sought to prevent legislation for reducing tariff taxation and lessening the burdens upon the people.

On January 8, 1894 (RECORD, page 571), on the order for the consideration of the bill to reduce tariff taxation and lighten the burdens upon the people, Messrs. BAKER, BOEN, DAVIS, HARRIS, KEM, NEWLANDS, PENCE, and SIMPSON refused to vote, and thus joined the solid Republican party under the leadership of Mr. REED and BOUTELLE, and thus sought to prevent legislation for reducing tariff taxation and lessening the burdens upon the people.

The RECORD shows that none of these gentlemen were paired upon any of these votes; and the RECORD shows that Mr. BAKER, Mr. BOEN, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. HUDSON, Mr. KEM, Mr. PENCE, and Mr. SIMPSON were present at other roll calls during days that these votes were had.

Mr. HARRIS was absent with leave, but was not paired; but the RECORD does not show that Mr. NEWLANDS had any leave of absence. If Mr. HARRIS would have voted, I hope that he will make that statement to the House.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS VOTED SOLIDLY FOR SILVER COINAGE.

On March 1, 1894, the House voted on the bill to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury. Upon the vote offered by a gold-standard man to strike out the second section of the bill, so as only to permit the coinage of $55,156,681, 120 Democrats voted against the amendment and 59 Republicans backed by gold-standard Democrats voted for the amendment.

Upon Mr. BLAND'S substitute 172, nearly all Democrats, voted for it, and only 94, mostly Republicans, voted against it, and only two members of Congress south of the banks of the Ohio voted against it.

On the vote to recommit, nearly all the Republicans and the Northeastern Democrats, in all 132 in number, voted to recommit the bill, and only 1 Democrat from south of the banks of the Ohio voted with them. The vote against the recommittal was 168, including every Democrat but one from the South.

Upon the passage of the bill 168 votes were cast in its favor, including every Democrat but one from the South. There were 129 votes cast against the bill, including nearly every Republican and all the gold-standard Democrats from the Northeast.

Upon the vote to pass the bill over the President's veto on April 4, 1894, 119 Democrats, 7 Populists, and 18 Republicans from the silver and Western States voted in favor of its passage. The vote against its passage was 114, including almost the solid Republican party aided by gold-standard Democrats, mostly from the North and East. Only two members of Congress from south of the banks of the Ohio River voted against the bill.

POPULISTS VOTED WITH THE REPUBLICANS TO PREVENT AN INCREASE OF CURRENCY.

On June 6, 1894, the Populists in a body joined the Republicans and voted against the Democrats on the measure to repeal the 10 per cent tax on State bank issues. There were 102 votes for the bill, all of them by Democrats and including every Democrat south of the Ohio River. The vote against the bill was 88 Republicans, 9 Populists, and 75 Democrats from the Northeast and North. The votes against the bill included every Republican and every Populist.

Courtesy to the Senate only allows me to state without criticism that Senator PEFFER, who claims to be a friend of the people, was the only Senator or Representative of any party who had the heart to offer an amendment to the tariff bill placing a tariff tax of over 60 per cent upon salt, an article which is used more extensively by farmers than by any other class of people. This amendment was offered by him June 18, page 7667 of RECORD, and again on the same day, page 7668, and again on June 20, page 7752, at which time he made a labored argument all in behalf of a salt monopoly against the interests of the people of the United States. On page 7758, the Senate voted upon this effort of Senator PEFFER to take salt from the free list and put on it a tax equal to 60 per cent. Senator PEFFER and 23 Republicans voted for the amendment, and 31 Democrats voted against it.

I will also mention that Senator PEFFER advocated taxing the people of the United States some $14,000,000 a year to pay a bounty to sugar-raisers. He even insisted, April 12, page 4597, that the McKinley bill bound the United States to continue this bounty. He continued this argument April 13, page 4603, in favor of making the people pay a

POPULISTS VOTE TO TAX SALT AND PAY BOUNTIES.

On June 5, 1894, the Senate voted upon the proposition to abolish paying bounty on sugar. Senator PEFFER and 30 Republicans voted against this amendment, and 38 Democrats voted for it. Upon another amendment, page 6835, to extend the bounty eleven years Mr. PEFFER and 31 Republicans voted for the amendment and 38 Democrats voted against it.

Senator PEFFER'S method of remedying evils was expressed by him June 18, page 7648, when he said:

Let the National Legislature take charge of this subject; let it take pose session of all the coal beds and all the coal mines in the country, and let th coal be given to the people freely. Senators smile.

Of course Senators smile. They all know that ninety-nine out of a hundred farmers burn wood and have nothing to do with coal, and they smile to see a Populist, who professes to be a friend of the farmers, proposing that these farmers shall be taxed some $300,000,000 a year to donate 150,000,000 tons of coal to persons who are not farmers.

Upon another amendment to retain graduated bounty until July 1, 1905, Senators PEFFER, ALLEN, and KYLE, all Populists, and 31 Republicans voted for it, and 37 Democrats voted against it. Senator ALLEN, as an excuse for advocating a tax on sugar, said, June 5, 1894, page 6841:

If the $100,000,000 that were found in the Treasury when Mr. Harrison came into the Presidential office had been judiciously used there would be no necessity to-day for the levying of a tax upon sugar.

Over $26,000,000 of that surplus was taken out of the Treasury and paid as a premium upon bonds, and through that and other means equally vicious the Treasury was rendered bankrupt on the 4th day of March, 1893. The country was bankrupt. The $100,000,000 had disappeared; the national debt increased; the expenses of the Government were pressing upon us.

I will now present a table showing the recorded vote on thirty-three measures introduced by Republicans, in which Greenbackers, Populists, or third party men voted with Republicans in favor of these measures, all of which were to benefit banks and monopoly, and against the interests of the people. I also present a table which shows the recorded vote upon thirty-five measures introduced by Democrats, in which Greenbackers, Populists, or third party men voted with Republicans and against these measures, and in favor of banks and monopoly, and against the people.

In these tables I have included some votes which are purely political in which Greenbackers, Populists, or Third party men voted with Republicans.

I say these votes were political, because they were efforts to unseat Democrats and seat Republicans in their places, so as to give increased strength to the Republican party.

*In votes thus marked a portion and sometimes all of the Populists and Republicans refused to vote; I therefore classify the Populists as joining the Republicans against the measures.

DEMOCRATS THE ONLY TRUE FRIENDS OF THE PEOPLE.

This record gives abundant proof that Populists, Greenbackers, or third-party men, under whatever name they may appear, have repeatedly aided the Republicans in thwarting the efforts of Democrats to legislate in the interests of the people. It shows clearly they have aided the Republicans in perpetuating the national-bank system, in perpetuating the gold standard, in maintaining high tariffs, in force bills, and in controlling elections by soldiers and marshals, and all other obnoxious and pernicious legislation by which the Republicans have added wealth to the rich and increased the poverty and suffering of the great mass of people, and the evidence is clear beyond question that the leaders of the Greenback, Populist, and other third-party movements in the South seek and receive financial aid from the Republican party, and the proof is also abundant that their leaders promise in return to support tariff and other legislation which they must know is destructive to the farmers and other laboring people of the Southern States.

We all remember how Mr. HENDERSON, a Republican member of Congress from Iowa, showed that in 1880 Gen. Weaver ran for President to aid Gen. Garfield, or, as Gen. HENDERSON expressed it, as the tail of the Republican kite.

The proof is unquestioned that Chris Magee, of the Republican committee, came to Alabama, and that the Weaver electors were pledged to vote for Harrison, provided by so doing they could defeat the Democratic party and reëlect Harrison President of the United States; and now comes the exposure that the leaders of the opposition to the Democratic party in Alabama are secretly in conference with such leaders in the cause of high-tariff Republican protection as Senators HOAR and LODGE, and Congressmen WALKER and COGSWELL, and several other Republican members of the House and Senate and the Home Market Club of Boston, and that these Republicans are now engaged in raising money to aid in the defeat of the Democratic party of Alabama.

Senator HOAR, in speaking for himself and Republican associates of Capt. Kolb, says:

We all believe that this movement is of the utmost importance; that it is the most promising fact that has taken place in the history of the South for many years.

Senator HOAR also says:

That if he succeeds the solid South is broken and that the success of the cause of protection is assured.

Senator HOAR also says to his Republican associates:

I have no doubt that the forces that he leads will be found acting with us in all great essentials in the future.

The New York Sun says:

The Home Market Club has sent out circulars marked "In confidence," seeking to raise this money.

The circular closes in these words:

Prudence requires that strict privacy should be observed in raising the money. There is so much prejudice in the South that it might be fatal to the cause to have it become known the Kolb party receives any aid from New England. We pray you therefore to avoid seeing any but discreet men and to impress upon them the importance of secrecy.

This exposure is only corroborative of the evidence furnished by the records of Congress which I have given in this speech. Here we have positive proof that the leaders of the opposition to the Democratic party in Alabama have convinced the authors of the force bill and arch protectionists, Senators HOAR and LODGE, that they and their followers will be found acting with these Republican leaders in the future.

This record should admonish every true lover of his country that there is but one way on earth to restore our country to peace and prosperity; that there is but one way to reëstablish the South and the rural sections upon the principles which governed when we were happy and prosperous, and that one way is to place every Department of the Government under the control of true and unquestioned Democrats.

POPULISTS BILLS INJURIOUS TO THE SOUTH.

I have before me four bills, introduced in this Congress by Populists, which I respectfully submit would, if enacted into law, do more harm to the people of the South than any measures ever proposed in Congress, unless we except the force bill and confiscation bills which were introduced soon after the close of the war.

House bill 3186 by Representative HUDSON, a Populist, provided—

That all pensioners for service in the Federal Army and Navy during the war may receive in one payment ten times the annual amount of the pension.

This would cost the Government this year $1,500,000,000.

House bill 3436, introduced by Representative DAVIS, Populist from Kansas, provides—

That the mortgage debt of any mortgagor of real estate used as a home or for support, shall be paid by the United States where an appraisement board finds the estate to be worth the full amount of the mortgage, and the debtor shall be allowed to redeem his property from the United States within twenty years by paying an interest of 1 per cent per annum.

It is estimated that this would enable persons to get money of the United States for twenty years at 1 per cent interest to an amount exceeding $12,000,000,000.

The rich and influential owners of real estate in cities would be the first beneficiaries, and the Government would become bankrupt before the farmers could get any benefit from the act.

House bill 3437, introduced by Representative DAVIS, Populist from Kansas, provides for—

Granting a pension of $10 to $25 per month to all soldiers or sailors of the Union Army and Navy in the late war, and also to widows and minors; this to be in addition to disability pensions granted under present laws.

The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that this bill would increase our annual disbursements for pensions to $460,000,000 for the coming year and the Commissioner also says that—

Death will but slowly lighten this national burden.

House bill 6767, introduced by Representative DAVIS, Populist member from Kansas—directs the immediate enlistment of 500,000 men to be fed, clothed, paid, and provided for the same as the regular Army; said army to be employed on works of public improvement, canals, rivers, and harbors, irrigation works, public highways, etc.

As the present Army of 25,000 men costs over $23,700,000 a year, the cost of simply the clothing, food, pay, etc., of this proposed army of 500,000 men would probably exceed $474,000,000.

If these bills should go into effect it would require the disbursement this year by the United States Government of $14,434,000,000, which is more than forty times the entire income of the United States, and as the entire amount of gold, silver, and paper money circulation of the world is only $10,037,568,000, the proposed expenditure this year by these four Populist bills would be one-half greater than all the money in the world. And yet these bills are only a few of the many impracticable measures which the Populists in Congress have prepared to have enacted into law.

The only possible way to raise this stupendous sum would be by a direct tax, and as the Constitution provides that direct taxes be apportioned according to population the amount Alabama would be required to pay this year would be $350,000,000. This would be about double the assessed value of all the property in that State. It is very clear that the passage and enforcement of these bills would bring bankruptcy and ruin upon all the people in the South.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is one of very great interest and, as I believe, of great importance to the million and a half of people of the State of Arkansas, whom I have the honor in part to represent on this floor.

A large majority of the people of my State are producers of farm products—corn, wheat, pork, and cotton. Of the latter product we raised and marketed in 1892-'93 615,000 bales, and in 1891-'92 900,000 bales, being fifth in the rank of cotton-producing States.

It has been impossible for me, Mr. Chairman, amid the press of other duties crowding upon me, to give as much time to the consideration of the pending measure as I needed, and I shall therefore not be able to present my views in as concise and orderly a manner as I could wish, but the subject is too vast and far-reaching in its effect upon the people I represent as well as many millions of other American citizens for me to forbear entering a plea in behalf of the passage of the bill by the present House at this session.

Upon this floor are many ostensible friends of the farmer, and of the men, women, and children who must earn their living by manual labor.

We have also many, very many constitutional lawyers, some of whom can always, when hard pressed for reasons for opposing a measure looking to the relief of the toiling masses, be depended upon to fortify themselves behind some generalization of the Constitution.

In saying this, I yield to no man on this floor or elsewhere in my respect for the great organic law of the land and in a deep sense of my obligation to support it in all its plain behests as well as in its true intent and spirit.

In the time I shall occupy before your committee I shall try, as befits a representative of the people in the greatest law-making body in the world, to discuss the measure under consideration dispassionately; and yet, Mr. Chairman, it is hard to restrain a feeling of impatience and indignation at some of the arguments, subterfuges, and devices which have been invoked to discredit and destroy the bill and to prevent any legislation upon the subject it treats of.

The practice of gambling in futures has been too often denounced and condemned both by many of the State courts of last resort, as well as by the Supreme Court of the Union, to require at my hands further animadversion to brand it as being an evil which the legislative department of the State governments may take hold of, regulate and suppress.

In my own State of Arkansas, ever in the van with wholesome, conservative legislation, looking to the interests of the people, eleven years ago in March last this business was made a misdemeanor punishable by fine of not less than $250 nor more than $500, with thirty days' imprisonment in the county jail for a second offense. This statute was construed in the case of Fortenberry vs. State, 47 Arkansas, 188, from which I read some extracts:

Smith, J. The plaintiff in error was convicted of gambling in grain futures, and was fined $250. Motions in arrest of judgment and for a new trial were denied. * * *

It is argued that this act is void as being in restraint of trade, and it may be conceded that it is loosely drawn.

* * * * * * *

Certainly the Legislature did not intend to impose any restrictions upon legitimate commerce, but only to destroy the parasite that infests it. Contracts for future delivery, if entered into in good faith and with an actual intention of fulfillment, are as valid as any other species of contract. A farmer may sell and agree to deliver his wheat or his cotton for a stipulated price before it is harvested. Nay, one may sell goods to be delivered at a future day which he has not in actual or potential possession, but which he intends to go into the market and buy.

But this is not what is commonly known as dealing in futures.

This phrase has acquired the signification of a mere speculation upon chances, where the grain, cotton, or stocks dealt in exist only in imagination, and where no delivery is contemplated, but the parties expect to settle upon the difference in the market.

* * * * * * *

It will be seen by this opinion that the produce gamblers of the stock and cotton exchanges of New York, and of the Board of Trade of Chicago, through their agent at Little Rock, proposed to continue their nefarious business in the teeth of the statute, until he was arrested by the mandate of the criminal court of Pulaski County. The opinion is also somewhat instructive as to the methods of this very legitimate and beneficent business of which some of our friends are so enamored.

This fellow was selling wheat in Little Rock, and had in the six months previous to his indictment sold 250,000 to 300,000 bushels per day. At that time there was not a grain elevator in Little Rock, nor is there now except in a small way as an attachment to some flouring mill. There was not 200,000 bushels of wheat raised annually in a radius of 100 miles from Little Rock, and never a bushel brought there for sale.

Now, it is the concensus of opinion among the cotton planters of my State that this speculating, that is, gambling on the price of this great staple, has a tendency to render prices fluctuating, uncertain, and in the end lower to the producer, and I am of opinion that the wheat, corn, and pork growers of the North and West have a like belief as to the effect of "futures" dealing as to these products.

If they are correct in this, it seems to me that all honest minds will concur that they should have relief, if relief may be had by legislation.

Perhaps these farmers can not demonstrate with mathematical precision the correctness of their belief in this regard, but they can easily come nearer to it than can the advocates of this sort of gambling do in support of their theory, that futures and options dealing augment prices.

A great army of people live off their gains in this sort of gambling—called by courtesy speculating. They do not add a pound of pork or cotton, or a peck of corn or wheat, to the amounts annually produced, nor do they find or create a market for any actual tangible quantities of these products. They simply engage in the business of wagering from day to day and week to week as to what prices will be at a given day in the future. They go through the form and pretense of buying billions of bushels of wheat, and millions of bales of cotton, which have no more real existence in bulk, form, and weight than do the shadows of the trees cast by the morning sun on the pavements surrounding this Capitol.

The immense volume of this phantom buying and selling is well illustrated by the transactions on the New York Cotton Exchange.

I hold in my hand a volume on the subject of cotton issued annually by Latham, Alexander & Co., brokers and cotton commission merchants of New York. Now, I want to say that I have very considerable regard for Latham, Alexander & Co. They are very clever people, or were about fifteen years ago, when they sent their agent down to Arkansas and lent that State money with which to pay the current expenses of her government immediately after the time when the carpet-baggers had robbed her so that her scrip was not worth but 20 cents on the dollar.

I quote these gentlemen now as very good authority on the facts of this matter. I do not agree with their conclusions. According to statistics furnished by them the cotton crop of 1891-'92 was 9,035,000 bales, and the crop of 1892-'93 was 6,700,000 bales; and in those same years there were sold on the New York Cotton Exchange, in 1891-'92, 33,230,600 bales, and in 1892-'93, 52,656,400 bales.

I understood a gentleman upon this floor to-day [Mr. QUIGG] to say that this practice of making fictitious sales, this dealing in "futures" was centuries old. Sir, it did not begin in New York until 1870, according to Latham, Alexander & Co.

It is a modern device. These gentlemen who publish this book, Latham, Alexander & Co., say:

Settlements of cotton contracts can be made only by purchases and sales of like contracts. "Puts," "calls," and "options," which are privileges, are not, and never were recognized by the New York Cotton Exchange, and are not traded in on the floor of that exchange.

The high-toned gentlemen of the New York Cotton Exchange do not deal in these things on the floor of the exchange; they have a basement there where that sort of dealing is done. These gentlemen—Latham, Alexander & Co.—go on further and say:

A ready means of disposing of cotton is thus afforded; when the market is dull it is difficult to sell cotton from table, except at a sacrifice, but a contract can at any time be sold against it.

They are made at "seller's option;" that is, the seller has the option of delivering the cotton on any day during the contract month: he can, if he choose, wait till the end of the month; but the buyer must receive it any day it is tendered during the contract month, unless he sells out or closes the contract, which can always be promptly done. * * *

As already stated, contracts can always be promptly settled; that is, bought in or sold out; yet on every one actual cotton can be obtained if desired.

Of course, those fellows do not desire it.

Mr. BOATNER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. NEILL. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. Do I understand that the gentleman is supporting this bill because he is opposed to dealings in futures or because he wants to raise revenue?

Mr. NEILL. Well, I will get to that question later on. I will be frank, however, with the gentleman, and say that so far as I am concerned I am opposed to this sort of business, and I will fight it as I would the devil—with fire.

Mr. BOATNER. If this bill would not break up the business, but would, on the contrary, encourage it, and in doing so bring revenue to the Government, would the gentleman then support it?

Mr. NEILL. Well, I think the bill will circumscribe the evil and eventually kill it. It is like building a fire around a copperhead snake; you may not kill him at once, but if you get him encircled with the flames after a while you will kill him, if you have fire enough.

Mr. Chairman, I read further from this statement of Latham, Alexander & Co.:

To merchants and operators, cotton contracts for future delivery afford great advantages.

These gentlemen do not pretend, they are too honest to say, that these cotton speculations inure to the benefit of the farmer.

This is evidenced not only by the large business in New York—

I have shown you that it is a very large business—but also by the extensive business done in them in Liverpool.

Now, mark the language that follows:

They fluctuate more widely and frequently than cotton, though governed in general by the course of actual cotton on which they are based.

Here are men arguing in behalf of this system and telling you that the prices of the cotton which these fictitious sales pretend to cover fluctuate more widely and frequently than the price of actual cotton, though, as they say, the price is "governed in general by the course of actual cotton, on which the sales are based." Of course they must have a few bales of cotton to make the shadow, and then they proceed to speculate on the shadow.

How is it possible that the gambling of these men can add a farthing to the price of the farmer's cotton or wheat? The assertion has been made, but no man has proved it or even offered respectable evidence in support of it, that this gambling, this betting upon the price of these products can enhance and does enhance their value.

The prices of these things if governed by legitimate trade alone would inevitably be regulated by the law of supply and demand. But the aggregation of capital and of brains and cunning engaged in this devious business is so great that by their combinations and gambler's tricks the price of produce is sometimes forced up unnaturally, and as often artificially depressed. It so occurs that the producer never gets any benefit of the artificial rise, but is dead sure to be a sufferer from unnatural and forced depression.

Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, the absurdity of the claim that this species of gambling can add to the price of the farmer's products or be a benefit to him is unsurpassed. It is only equaled in my judgment by that other monstrous absurdity, the claim of our friends of the Republican party in behalf of a protective tariff, that we can make ourselves rich as a nation by taxing ourselves.

But we are told that this legislation is unconstitutional, is inimical to the Constitution. That is the difficulty that my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], a member of the Judiciary Committee, wants to get me in. In the language of the learned gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT], he [Mr. BOATNER] thought perhaps he would "deposit me in a cavity;" but I think I see a hole at the other end to come out at. [Laughter.]

Let us examine this cry of unconstitutionality, and test it in the light of a judicial exposition of a very similar statute of Congress, rendered by the Supreme Court in 1866, and reaffirmed and approved in 1876, and never overruled or challenged to this day, so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. Chairman, in 1864 and 1866 there was legislation placed upon the statute books of the United States in the form of an internal-revenue act, passed originally in 1864 and subsequently amended in 1866. It enacted that no persons should be engaged in certain trades or business, including those of selling lottery tickets and retail dealing in liquors, until they should have obtained a license. By the amendatory act of 1866 the words "special tax" were inserted in the place of the word "license" in the former acts.

Congress at that time really provided in effect for licensing lotteries. I presume there is hardly any member of this House who would have the hardihood to get up on this floor to-day and say that lotteries are a legitimate business. In the great State of my honorable and honored friend from Louisiana there was a fight made by the gallant people of that State upon this question, and to my great joy and that of most of the honest people of the United States I believe, the hydra-headed monster, the Louisiana Lottery, was crushed. Yet Congress licensed the selling of lottery tickets in 1864, and the Supreme Court of the United States in a well-considered decision rendered in 1866 sustained the constitutionality of that law.

Now, I am going to take up the time of the committee only a little while on this branch of the subject, for it is a question at this point which few but the lawyers will pay much attention to; but they know that in the license-tax cases decided by Chief Justice Chase in 1866 it was held that the power of the Government to license or tax these things (lotteries and retailing of liquors) was unquestioned, and that right was fully recognized. The cases are reported in 5 Wallace, United States Supreme Court Reports, pages 462 and following. Something had been said in the brief of counsel for defendants about the policy and immorality of the statute. Chief Justice Chase disposed of that in short order when he said:

Congress, by an internal-revenue act of 1864, subsequently amended, enacted that no persons should be engaged in certain trades or businesses, including those of selling lottery tickets and retail dealing in liquors, until they should have obtained a "license" from the United States.

In New York and New Jersey, selling lottery tickets, as in Massachusetts retailing liquors (except in special cases not important to be noted) is, by statute, wholly forbidden.

Such selling or dealing is treated as an offense against public morals, made subject to indictment, fine, and imprisonment, and in one or more of the States named high vigilance is enjoined on all magistrates to discover and to bring offenders to justice, and grand juries are to be specially charged to present them.

There are cases, it is true, in which arguments drawn from public policy must have large influence; but these are cases in which the course of legislation and administration do not leave any doubt upon the question what the public policy is, and in which what would otherwise be obscure or of doubtful interpretation, may be cleared and resolved by reference to what is already received and established.

The cases before us are not of this sort. The Legislature has thought fit, by enactments clear of all ambiguity, to impose penalties for unlicensed dealing in lottery tickets and in liquors. These enactments, so long as they stand unrepealed and unmodified, express the public policy in regard to the subjects of them.

But it is not necessary to regard these laws as giving such authority. So far as they relate to trade within State limits they give none and can give none. They simply express the purpose of the Government not to interfere by penal proceedings with the trade nominally licensed if the required taxes are paid. The power to tax is not questioned, nor the power to impose penalties for nonpayment of taxes. The granting of a license, therefore, must be regarded as nothing more than a mere form of imposing a tax, and of implying nothing except that the licensee shall be subject to no penalties under national law if he pays it.

I say to you frankly if I had power I would dispose of all this business at once. The States ought to do it, but they will not; and the people of this country invoke therefore the power of Congress for their protection, and insist that it shall be done. I have read this decision to show that there is nothing unconstitutional in this bill; that is, as to the spirit and purport of it. As to the details of my friend's bill I am not well posted, for I have really not had time to study it. If, however, there are objectionable features in it they can be remedied to-morrow by amendment.

In short, Mr. Chairman, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion by Chief Justice Chase, which was reaffirmed in a later case in 1876, reported in the Supreme Court Reports, volume 93, declares as to the constitutionality of such legislation as is embraced in the pending bill. That is sufficient for me. I maintain that Congress has complete power to tax these occupations—you may call them occupations—and to impose a stamp tax upon them.

It boots not what may be my motive or the motive of gentlemen in supporting the bill. I have dealt frankly with you and have told you my opinions in regard to it. I am supporting the bill because we have the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that the bill is not obnoxious to the Constitution; and many of us recognize the importance of some measure that will deal with this evil.

Mr. Chairman, there is a sort of remarkable coincidence about this bill and those who support and those who oppose it. I venture the opinion—and in what I may say following this I mean no disrespect to any gentleman on this floor, I disclaim any such intention; but I venture the opinion that every gold monometallist on this floor, every man who voted against the repeal of the State bank tax, and every devotee of the national banking system, as well as every representative of the boards of trade in the great commercial centers of this country are opposed to this bill.

These things, let me tell you, commend the bill to me. I support it in part for the enemies it has. The solicitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] who immediately preceded me, that the farmer would have to pay this tax, is a marvel of human charity; that solicitude would indeed be painful if it were not so absolutely ridiculous. [Laughter.] The gentleman from the purlieus of Wall street sympathizing with the farmer! I could make a quotation in this connection and comment thereon, but I will not—I forbear. [Laughter.]

Now, I have but little more to say on this subject. It is reported as having been said on yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GOLDZIER] "that Congress should do nothing for the farmer." I did not hear that speech. It is not printed in the RECORD, and I have derived what information I have on the subject from an extract in the Washington Post of this morning. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is just about what Congress has done for the farmer heretofore—nothing.

It remains to be seen, however, whether Congress will now take a new departure, and climb to a higher plane of statesmanship, and mete out justice and the equal protection of the laws to that class of our population on the products of whose labor our national prosperity so largely rests. The farmer is not a mendicant. He is not asking your charity, but only the equal protection of the law, and for that legislation which may inure to his benefit without harm to any other honest industry throughout the country.

The gentleman from Illinois on yesterday, as I understand it, inveighed against selecting any class of citizens and doing something for them. He must have forgotten that his own colleague who sits here [Mr. DURBOROW], two days ago proposed for consideration and secured the passage through this House of a bill which, it was stated on this floor, inured largely and especially and particularly to the benefit of that large and respectable class of citizens known as commercial travelers.

I voted for the bill, and it was right in my judgment, and yet the gentleman says we ought not to have any legislation for any particular class. Why, it has not been long since we passed a bill to enable them to build a big bridge down there by New York City, across the Hudson River or the East River, somewhere there. I have never been there, and do not know exactly where it is.

Why, the time of Congress is largely taken up by the passage of bills which inure to the benefit of only a part of our fellow-citizens, and it is the first time I have heard an objection to it. I will vote for that kind of a bill as cheerfully as any other, if it is right.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, who fought the battles of the Union in the late war between the States? Was it the stock gamblers and money-changers of New York City, Chicago, and Philadelphia? Who poured out the best and bravest blood of the youth and manhood of the South in that battle of giants? Was it the Shylocks of New Orleans, St. Louis, and Memphis, and Mobile? History will say, No. Are the producers of farm products in this country, the stalwart men, the comely matrons, the rollicking plowboys, and the rosy-cheeked maidens of the farm houses never to have a hearing and never to receive consideration by the American Congress?

Must they remain hewers of wood and drawers of water, they and their children, forever and forever? They are asking you, appealing to you, to give the country legislation which will relieve them from being longer the prey and the victims of a set of cormorants and vampires, who, under the false pretense of commerce and trade, have by organized capital and effort placed the products of the farm at the mercy of common gamblers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. NEILL. I should like a minute or two more.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the committee will give the gentleman from Arkansas two minutes in which to complete his remarks.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I am perfectly willing, provided my time may be extended also.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman's time will be extended two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the House, you alone can give relief. The States of New York, Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Louisiana, dominated by the boards of trade and various exchanges in New York City, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, and New Orleans, will not act, as they might, to suppress this species of gambling by legislative enactment making it penal.

You have the power, complete, ample, and plenary, and that without injury to a single human being in America who is engaged in a business not under the ban of the law, as construed by the courts of the States and of your Federal Union. Millions of honest people who earn their bread literally in the sweat of their brows, are asking you and begging you for this measure of relief. I join with them in asking you for it. But we shall not always be beggars, mark you. Let me entreat you to yield to us the benefit of your doubts and give this legislation a trial.

You will at least have the consciousness of having attempted something in the interest of the toiling masses without the slightest fear of having injured any honest industry. You will represent the views and wishes of an honest people who, though they may not have the money to employ eminent lawyers to give learned opinions to you, as have done those opposing this bill, are yet the pillars of this Republic, its shield and buckler in war, and its crowning glory in peace. [Applause.]

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I had intended in my time to treat of the commercial features of this bill, and especially one portion that I desire to refer to, and that is the absolute impossibility of doing business under the system of this bill, by absolute sales and actual deliveries. But as that matter has been gone over, and desiring to hear something more about the legal aspects of the bill, I surrender my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

[Mr. BOATNER withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. May I ask the indulgence of the committee for five minutes?

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARSH. I hope that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] will allow my colleague five minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to make a suggestion to my friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] for his consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Then I will listen to the gentleman for five minutes with great pleasure.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill, if I understand it, and I want the attention of the gentleman from Missouri when I am speaking, is framed to correct certain alleged evils and not to embarrass legitimate business. If in point of fact his constituent or mine, who was engaged in the corn trade, in good faith, to protect himself, as most contracts are made with the farmers, had made a contract to sell on the board of trade for future delivery, if his transaction is in good faith and not gambling, the gentleman if he had the power would not prohibit that contract.

But the gentleman says he will prohibit that contract if he can, by taxing it so that it can not be compromised or annulled without paying the tax, because there are a good many men who take that form of contract who merely bet on the price, and this sort of transaction is harmful to the public. Therefore, a man who makes a transaction in good faith would be prevented from canceling his contract without paying the tax, so that we may get at this great army of people who gamble. I think I have stated it fairly.

Let me state what I fear. If you pass this bill, you will catch the man and embarrass him who has tried to protect himself, and the man who merely gambles will change the form of his contract, and instead of making a contract that "I will sell you so much wheat deliverable in six months," or any other period, neither party having any intention that it is to be delivered, he will change the form of the contract and say "I will sell you a spread, that it goes up or down," without any contract or sale, because this is the transaction he is trying to get at, namely, the fictitious transaction that is clothed in legal form. Am I right in that? If I am right about that, then the gentleman embarrasses the genuine trader, and the gambler changes his former contract and goes on, and is happy forever after.

That is all I wanted to say. I tried to say it to the gentleman who last was addressing the committee, but I was talking in his time. It seems to me that this legislation is subject to the criticism I have made, and in good faith I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, if he can answer the proposition I have made, that he owes it to me and he owes it to the House to do so to-morrow when he comes to make his speech.

Mr. HATCH. I will not fail to do it either. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7007, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DURBOROW, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. LEFEVER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WHITING, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. MARVIN of New York, for two weeks, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have addressed the committee or the House upon the pending bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have addressed the committee may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WARNER. Or who may be recognized upon this bill.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, I meant those who have addressed the committee or may address it.

Mr. MEYER. I will have to object unless——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will not object to that proposition. There are several gentlemen on the list who have not had an opportunity to speak at all, and if they are recognized under the five-minute rule they ought to have the same privilege extended to them as gentlemen who have addressed the committee.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 22, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplin, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on the motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VILAS presented the petition of Hans C. Anderson and 27 other citizens of Eau Claire, Wis., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of various cities of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Col. Fred Taylor Council No. 762, Junior Order of American Mechanics, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to issue Treasury notes in payment of noninterest-bearing twenty-five year bonds deposited in the Treasury for public improvements, etc., in any State, Territory, town, county, etc., whenever it shall be necessary for such improvements; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Encampment No. 62, Union Veteran Legion, of Kittanning, Pa., praying for the passage of a per diem service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Workingmen's Protective Tariff League, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Columbus, Pa., and a petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Noble County, Ind., praying that the funds of mutual life-insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of M. Toepp & Co., of South Bend, Ind., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Clark County, Ohio, praying that the funds of mutual life-insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Builders' Exchange of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that an appropriation of $25,000 be made to survey routes to determine the most practical and efficient one for a ship canal between Lake Erie and the Ohio River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I present resolutions adopted by the Oregon State Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry at the twenty-first annual session, held at Eugene, Oregon, May 22 to 24, 1894. The resolutions memoralize Congress for legislation on various subjects; among others in favor of a bill providing for the free coinage of both silver and gold on equal terms and at the present ratio of 16 to 1, and that the Government use the coins of both metals without discrimination. Also that the metallic currency be supplemented by the issue of United States notes in sufficient amount to prevent the necessity of issuing any more interest-bearing bonds. The memorialists also recommend the passage of a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by the people; and "whereas the Government has already guaranteed the payment of bonds almost sufficient to build the transcontinental lines and also has donated vast tracts of valuable lands, more than sufficient to build them, which have not been paid for nor rightfully earned," they demand the absolute ownership on the part of the Government of those railroads.

I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Council and of 25,000 citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of the bill incorporating the telegraph with the postal service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. POWER presented a petition of Local Assembly No. 3298, Knights of Labor, of Helena, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect free labor against convict labor as employed in some of the several States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of A. Cullen and 10 other citizens of Helena, Mont., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Joseph J. Stewart and 18 other citizens of Malden, Mass., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Miner Beal & Co., and 25 other business firms of Boston, Mass., praying that a higher duty of 5 per cent be placed upon clothing than upon the woolen material from which such clothing is made.

Mr. GALLINGER presented additional papers to accompany the bill (S. 2156) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph Blanchard, heretofore introduced by him; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. STEWART, April 30, 1894, intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure, reported it with amendments.

SUPREME LODGE OF KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4701) to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, to report it with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was in section 2, line 2, after the word "estate," to insert "not exceeding in value $100,000;" so as to read:

That the said corporation shall have the power to take and hold real and personal estate, not exceeding in value $100,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move to add to the bill as an additional section:

SEC. —. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS (at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia) introduced a bill (S. 2152) to amend sections 720, 721, 722, and 723 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia in relation to marriages; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying letter of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROACH introduced a bill (S. 2153) for the relief of certain Winnebago Indians in Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 2154) to authorize a survey and estimates of cost of deepening and widening the Miami and Erie Canal, in the State of Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2155) to secure to the public the benefit of improvements on patented articles: which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2156) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph Blanchard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (S. 2157) providing for the relief of George Baldey, of Louisiana, late Captain Thirty-ninth Infantry, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2158) for the relief of Jacob A. Wolfson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ROACH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCPHERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill: which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ANTONIO MAXIMO MORA.

Mr. DOLPH. Some correspondence came in yesterday from the Department of State concerning the Antonio Maximo Mora case. There was previous correspondence, but the publication has been exhausted. There are only two copies remaining, I am informed. The previous correspondence ought to be printed in connection with that which came in yesterday. I move that it be so printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. KYLE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee to Establish the University of the United States 2,000 copies of Senator HUNTON'S Report No. 433, on Senate bill 1708, to establish a national university; also 2,000 copies of Miscellaneous Document No. 95, entitled "A Solution of the Labor Problem," for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor.

EMMA A. RIPLEY.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 447) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of a certain land warrant to Emma A. Ripley. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] objected to this bill some days ago, but afterwards looked into it very carefully and came to me and said he would withdraw his objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Emma A. Ripley duplicate of one Porterfield land warrant issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved April 11, 1860, for 40 acres, upon satisfactory proof of ownership and loss of same, and the execution of a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, in double the market value of the warrant so to be issued, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, conditioned to indemnify the United States against the presentation by an innocent holder of the alleged lost warrant; and the duplicate shall have all the legal force and effect as had the original.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CHARLES COLLEGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 211) for the relief of St. Charles College.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the alleged use and occupation, by the United States military authorities, for Government purposes, during the late war, of the college buildings and grounds of St. Charles College in St. Charles County, Mo.; the actual value of such use and occupation, and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what amount, if any, is equitably due to St. Charles College from the United States as the reasonable value of such use and occupation.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 13, after the word "occupation," to strike out the remainder of the bill in the following words:

And that the Secrerary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said St. Charles College, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount, if any, so found to be due from the United States; and the acceptance by said St. Charles College of any sum paid under the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every kind and nature for said use and occupation, and all damages resulting therefrom.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment proposed by the committee was made doubtless supposing that the same bill was before the committee which was first before it, and not the bill passed at the last Congress. I suggest therefore that the amendment be disagreed to, in order that the bill may be passed just as it has passed Congress twice before.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT WATER-MAIN ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an mendment, after the word "assessment," in line 10, to strike out the remainder of the bill in the following words:

And provided further, That in all cases now pending where assessments have been regularly made, and where there has not been paid a sum equal to $1.25 per linear foot, as estimated above, then only so much shall be collected as will make the whole sum paid equal to $1.25 per linear foot. But this act is not intended to give any ground of action for the refunding of any sum already paid in excess of $1.25 per linear foot.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter assessments levied for laying water mains in the District of Columbia shall be at the rate of $1.25 per linear front foot against all lots or land abutting upon the street, road, or alley in which a water main shall be laid: Provided, That corner lots shall be taxed only on their front, with a depth of not exceeding 100 feet; any excess of the other front over 100 feet shall be subject to above rate of assessment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

TIMBER INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. ROACH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S 313) appropriating funds for investigations and tests of American timber.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $40,000 for the continuance of the timber investigations and the speedy publication of results, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture through the Forestry Division.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

LABOR DAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. KYLE. We are on the Calendar just about down to Order of Business No. 245, which is Senate bill 730. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, ect., That the first Monday in September in each year, being the day celebrated and known as labor's holiday, is hereby made a legal public holiday, to all intents and purposes, in the same manner as Christmas, the 1st day of January, the 22d day of February, the 30th day of May, and the 4th day of July are now made by law public holidays.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to say for the information of those who do not know, that something like twenty-five States of the United States have now settled upon the first Monday of September or the 1st day of October. In order to make the observance uniform, that all may enjoy vacation privileges upon the same day, the labor organizations of the country have united in asking that the first Monday of September be set apart as a holiday.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the day mentioned in the bill the 1st day of September?

Mr. COCKRELL. The first Monday of September. It ought to be the 1st day of September. I move to strike out "Monday" and insert "day;" so as to read, "the 1st day of September."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then it would come on Sunday once every few years.

Mr. COCKRELL. So does the 4th of July, and so does any fixed holiday fall upon Sunday occasionally.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It should be fixed on a week day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think if the labor organizations have fixed their own time, as it is said twenty-three States have done, we had better let them have a week day. I do not myself like to encourage holidays on Sunday. There is too much old Presbyterianism in me for that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Neither do I like to encourage holidays on Sunday; but if there is to be any symmetry in our holidays this one ought to be fixed on the first day of the month, just as we have the 4th of July, the 25th of December, the 30th of May, and so on, for public holidays. However, I have no objection to letting it go; and I withdraw my amendment if there is any objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had better leave it the first Monday, as we now create the holiday. The 4th of July was created by a great event, and could not be changed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIME POINT MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4961) granting certain rights over Lime Point military reservation in the State of California.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to grant to the citizens of the town or city of Sausalito, Marin County, Cal., the right to occupy and improve for the purpose of a road only for the use and benefit of the citizens of the United States, and for no other purpose whatever, a portion of the tract of land owned by the United States in the State of California, known as the Lime Point military reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOLLIE CRANDALL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to call up a little pension bill. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1490) to pension Mollie Crandall.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mollie Crandall, widow of Clark P. Crandall, deceased, and late captain of Company C, First Regiment Oregon Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose Mrs. Crandall is now receiving some pension.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. She is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the words be added—

In lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

E. R. SHIPLEY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 199) for the relief of E. R. Shipley. A similar bill has passed Congress three times heretofore without objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $450 for the payment in full to E. R. Shipley for moneys paid, by direction of Post-Office Inspector Edgerton, to parties having money in registered packages stolen from the post-office in Springfield, Mo., on the 23d day of June, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH G. UTTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 1343) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Joseph G. Utter was announced as first in order on the Calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. 6558) to amend section numbered 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims;

A bill (H. R. 7334) to sell certain lands in Montgomery County, Ark., to the Methodist Episcopal Church South;

A bill (H. R. 7489) to amend section 3 of an act to withdraw certain public lands from private entry, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1889; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

CORPORATE INTERFERENCE IN ELECTIONS.

Mr. CALL. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the regular morning business I shall ask the privilege of calling up the resolution I introduced some days ago relative to the appointment of a special committee to investigate the organized efforts of corporations to control elections of members of State Legislatures and members of Congress.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the subject of taxation has puzzled statesmen and economists long before this body came into existence. It is as old as organized society. Government is for the people and they must contribute to the support of national organization and public institutions. All agree to this; but how to raise the revenue most easily and distribute the burden equally and justly is the problem that puzzles and which now confronts us. Whether on land or chattels, on neccessaries or luxuries consumed, or on annual incomes, taxation is a burden, and the province of legislation should be to administer public affairs in an economical manner, causing the burden to fall lightly on the shoulders of all, especially the poor. The toiler whose life is spent in the yoke—almost like the beast of burden—gives of his lifeblood to add to the material wealth of the nation and knows little of ease or luxury. The rich are often the children of fortune, living on the fruits of others' labor, and it is right economically and morally that they should bear the larger share of public expense.

There is no better law than the Biblical laws on which to found a prosperous government. The sum of all those teachings is that the rich or favored should not oppress the poor, and that all citizens should recognize government and contribute to its support as they are prospered. Adam Smith, one of the fathers of political economy, says:

The subjects of every state ought to contribute towards the support of the government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state. The expense of government to the individuals of a great nation is like the expense of management to the joint tenants of a great estate, who are all obliged to contribute in proportion to their respective interests in the estate. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.

It is common law and common sense that to the support of government. The Constitution guarantees to all alike protection to life and property; but nine-tenths of our laws concern the protection of property. Our Federal, State, and county courts, our police power, the militia, and national Army are for the protection of people in their rights to property, not primarily to protect the life of individuals. In barbarous countries where no government exists people look out for their lives. Quarrels between tribes, when such occur, are largely caused by violation of customs as to property rights.

When civilization appears and individuals begin to acquire personal and real property, governments are formed to protect the weak against the strong, and insure justice between man and man as to property. The well-to-do citizens of our country own our factories, palatial residences, mercantile institutions, our railroads, banks, etc., to the amount of three-fourths of the nation's wealth; and it is for the protection of such property that taxes are levied. The annual income of the nation is a little over $7,000,000,000, but 10 per cent of the people absorb the large part of it. Why should they not contribute of their abundance to support the Government which makes their wealth secure? Ninety per cent are small property holders with small incomes, and under present economical arrangements pay a larger portion per capita of tax on property than the rich for the support of the Government.

On this point the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in his speech of March 15, 1892, used these words:

The public mind is not yet prepared to apply the key of a genuine revenue reform. A few years of further experience will convince the whole body of our people that a system of national taxes which rests the whole burden of taxation on consumption and not one cent on property and income is intrinsically unjust.

While the expenses of the National Government are largely caused by the protection of property, it is but right to call property to contribute to its payment. It will not do to say that each person consumes in proportion to his means. That is not true. Everyone must see that the consumption of the rich does not bear the same relation to the consumption of the poor as the income of the rich does to the wages of the poor. As wealth accumulates this injustice in the fundamental basis of our system will be felt and forced upon the attention of Congress.

IT IS A JUST TAX.

Many objections may be raised against this system, but few can be found to question its justness. It compels those who receive the protection of law to pay the bills incurred by such protection. The system has commended itself to the wisdom and judgment of nearly all civilized nations, and prominent political economists have pronounced it the best and most just method of raising revenue. Prof. Ely, our freshest writer on modern economics, says of the income tax:

The central and variable tax in a proper system of state taxation ought to be an income tax. This should vary from year to year according to the needs of the state government, and its rate should be calculated after the revenues from other sources have been estimated,

Again he remarks:

First. It is universally, or almost universally, admitted that no tax is so just provided it can be assessed fairly and collected without difficulty. More nearly than any other tax does it answer the requirements of that canon of taxation which prescribes equality of sacrifice. Furthermore, it is of moment that the income tax, unlike license charges, does not make it more difficult for a poor man to begin business or to continue business. Its social effects, to the contrary, are beneficial, because it places a heavy load only on strong shoulders.

Even for men of large means engaged in business it is a tax to be strongly recommended, for such men will in some years make little or nothing, or even lose money. Now, our property tax is merciless, it exacts as much in a year when a business man is struggling to keep his head above water as in a year of rare prosperity; whereas the income tax exacts much only when much can be given without financial embarrassment. If it were practicable to substitute an income tax for the whole of the property tax it would save many a man from bankruptcy.

Referring to annuitants and others who escape taxation, he says:

Again, why should the man with a large income but with no property escape all share in the common burdens? There is a considerable and increasing class living in great comfort on incomes of large proportions, say five, ten, twenty, thirty, or forty, or even fifty thousand dollars, who by insurance and various devices, protect themselves and their families for the future, and yet pay no taxes. This is an injustice to other classes and a harm to the commonwealth, because these men are often careless and indifferent about their public duties, knowing that their income is not affected by high or low taxation. They appear to pay nothing to Government, and as it seems to cost them nothing, they too often care little for it.

Touching the apathy of professional men as to public affairs of government, he says:

One of the reasons of poor government in our States and cities is to be found in the failure of large and influential classes to concern themselves about practical politics. They often speak of politics with an affectation of superiority, as if they were above anything so base and common. This attitude is not uncommon among professional people, as lawyers, physicians, and teachers. These men have opportunities for personal cultivation and for gathering knowledge which are better than those enjoyed by other members of the community, and their influence ought to be large and beneficial. They must pay taxes, because indirect Federal taxes form a part of the price of commodities which they purchase, and because a considerable portion of our direct taxes, like the tax on house property, is shifted, and reaches them indirectly.

This, however, is not noticed. What is needed is a tax varying with public needs, and with the integrity and efficiency of administration, which will reach the great mass of citizens—a tax which will directly and immediately rest upon the tax-bearer. We have too few payers of direct taxes in our States and cities; but the income tax is a tax which is felt and which must be paid by the tax-bearer. It is precisely the kind of tax needed, and it is beyond question that it would change the attitude of a large portion of the community towards government.

The incomes enjoyed by the professional and salaried classes and some others are frequently the results of large expenditures in cultivating one's powers, and they create what can be called personal wealth. One man spends $10,000 in preparing himself for some lucrative position and derives therefrom an income, but pays no taxes, while the man who spends $10,000 on a farm must contribute every year a sum large in proportion to his income for the support of government.

Prof. Wayland, the distinguished economist of Brown University, says:

Theoretically, this is the most equitable of all taxes, since it touches men exactly according to their abilities. But, as we have seen, if the percentage is uniform for all incomes, it involves an inequality which bears heavily on those whose incomes are small. To relieve this two measures are employed. The first is to exempt all income below a specified amount. The other is to establish two or three grades of income and make the percentage greater on the larger incomes. The chief objection to an income tax is the difficulty, almost impossibility, of ascertaining men's real incomes; partly because many keep no accurate accounts, and partly because few comparatively will make truthful report of their incomes.

Inquisitorial measures to discover actual incomes are exceedingly offensive. * * * Actual experience under the law tended to relieve difficulties and objections. When most efficiently carried out, concealment and dishonesty were not probably greater under this form of tax than are practiced continually under the attempts of the States to levy taxes on miscellaneous personal property. In both cases the needed relief must come from the moral culture which forms good consciences.

Prof. Thompson, of the chair of social science in the University of Pennsylvania, commends the system in these strong terms:

The most modern, and theoretically the fairest, form of taxation is the income tax. It seems to make everyone contribute to the wants of the State in proportion to the revenue which he enjoys under its protection; while, "by falling equally on all, it occasions no change in the distribution of capital, or in the material direction of industry, and has no influence on prices."—(McCulloch). No other is so cheaply assessed and collected; no other brings home to the people so forcibly the fact that it is their interest to insist on a wise economy of the national revenue.

Mr. N. A. Dunning, who is as well posted in economics as any journalist in the country to-day, says in a recent editorial in the National Watchman:

This whole objection is founded on a desire to shift the burdens of taxation upon other shoulders, and thereby avoid the payment of a proper share of the expenses of government, and at the same time keep the common people in ignorance of the vast incomes that are now being received by the plutocratic and wealth-absorbing classes.

A graduated income tax, which increases with the amount of income, is the most equitable form of taxation. We should favor beginning with incomes of $1,000, so as to reach a large class of annuitants and professions. It is capable of being demonstrated that with this tax placed on incomes of $1,000 and over, fully 50,000,000 out of our 65,000,000 of people would not be taxed. Such are the inequalities of the distribution of the fruits of industry that full 50 per cent of the families of this country live on yearly incomes of less than $500. Indirect taxation reaches this class in far greater proportion than it does the wealthy. And while they have nothing for government to protect, they are compelled to pay for protecting the property of the rich. This is manifestly unfair, and can only be remedied through a graduated income tax rigidly administered.

Prof. Levi, of Kings College, London, comments on the income tax favorably in the Statistical Journal of 1874:

Ever since Sir Robert Peel, in a moment of financial perplexity, hit upon the happy expedient of appealing to the wealthy class of people to contribute in a direct manner such a sum as might enable him to establish a proper equilibrium between the revenue and expenditure, and to induce wholesome and radical reform in the custom and excise revenue, every chancellor of the exchequer has clung to the income tax as the main prop of all his budget, in peace or war; with a wholesome surplus or with a deficiency to meet this tax has always been found most welcome, and notwithstanding all the grumbling and objections urged against it at its first imposition, and at every subsequent revival of the same, the income tax still brings a handsome contingent to the national revenue.

The taxation of the country is now very much simplified. In 1873 70 per cent of the whole amount of governmental revenue was derived from the sources, namely: Of spirits, malt, tobacco, sugar, and tea, and the income tax; but none of these branches of taxation is less objectionable in relation to the production of wealth, expensiveness of collection, or certainty of result than the income tax, and I do not wonder that with perfect machinery at work, with the assessment, and with the national mind accustomed to the burden, the chancellor of the exchequer is unwilling to relinquish so good a contributor to his "ways and means."

Prof. Cossa, of the University of Pavia, Italy, says in his recent work on taxation, its principles and methods:

In the year 1776 Adam Smith stated four rules of taxation which have been accepted by the whole civilized world and by all governments in it as the maxims of justice applied to that matter. The first of these rules says that the subjects of every state ought to contribute as nearly as possible according to their respective abilities. This means, of course, that a man whose income is $5,000 ought to pay ten times as much as the one whose income is $500. Nobody denies the truth of this maxim, except some writers who contend that the man whose income is $500 or less ought not to pay any taxes.

Lastly, John Stuart Mill, in his Political Economy, says:

We now pass from taxes on the separate kinds of income to a tax admitted to be assessed fairly upon all kinds—in other words, an income tax. This tax, and the conditions necessary to make this tax consistent with justice, has been investigated in the last chapter. We shall suppose, therefore, that these conditions have been complied with, and they are, first, that incomes below a certain amount should be altogether untaxed. This minimum should not be higher than the amount which suffices for the necessaries of the existing population. The exemption from the present income tax of all incomes under £100, and the lower percentage levied on all those between £100 and £150, are based upon the ground that almost all indirect taxation bears more heavily on incomes between fifty and one hundred and fifty than on any others whatever.

The second condition is, that incomes above the limit should be taxed only in proportion to the surplus by which they exceed the limit. All sums saved from the income and invested should be exempt from tax, or if this should be found impracticable that the live incomes and incomes from business professions should be less heavily taxed than such inheritable incomes and in a degree as nearly as possible equivalent to the increased need of economy arising from their termable character, allowance being also made in the case of available incomes for their vicariousness.

Mr. President, an income tax is right and just because

WEALTH HAS BEEN FAVORED.

Discriminations have been practiced, and geographical sections have been favored until to-day classes of society are as clearly marked as they are in almost any country of Europe. Our national condition is dark and threatening; the ranks of the ignorant poor are fast being swelled, while the ranks of the élite four hundred is to be found in every important city—a thing utterly undemocratic, un-American, and nationally suicidal. To refuse to see the suppressed wrath of a country full of honest laborers is unstatesmanlike; nay, more, it is criminally wrong.

Revolutions have occured with less ferment than we see in the United States to-day. Nero fiddled while Rome was burning, and the capitalistic press of the United States to-day jeer and taunt the efforts of the bond-burdened serfs on the farms and in the workshops who attempt to rise from their pitiful condition. It is a sorrowful sight to see an army of penniless laborers marching from every quarter of our bountiful country to the nation's capital to petition for deliverance from bondage. It is a sadder thought that the country has so far fallen into the hands of the oppressor as to make an uprising of the people necessary. Sitting in our comfortable homes, surrounded with happy families who are free from the burdens and the cares of poverty, we little know the sufferings that fall to the lot of the toil stained, poorly clothed and poorly fed laborer.

The papers of our great cities have contained heartrending stories during the past winter and spring of the famished condition of 3,000,000 of people out of employment, ready for riot and plunder. The Master Workman of the Knights of Labor has spent his time in trying to curb the mad haste of thousands of strong men who vowed vengeance upon capital. He tells me we do not know the condition of the people. Mr. President, I think I do understand the feeling among workingmen, but I am powerless to help matters. All this is happening in our prosperous Government—the flower of the civilization of the nineteenth century, and at the close of thirty years of Republican rule! Only the ignorant and unsophisticated can be made to believe that the present ills are the result of the incumbency of the Democratic party just come into power.

The fact is, Mr. President, that thirty years with Shylock in power has left the country burdened with indebtedness, exaggerated in all lines of business; and worst of all, with the wealth of the nation centralized in a small area and in few hands. A few have become immensely rich, while the millions have grown poorer. The middle classes of society, consisting of farmers, mechanics, and small tradesmen, are rapidly disappearing. Under the present order of things the end will not come until the American farmer is on a level with the Irish tenant, and mechanics and tradesmen are made the servants of the rich.

PRINCELY FORTUNES.

We are living in a day of princely fortunes. By hook or crook—possibly in both ways—the United States have outstripped the world in less than half a century. The fortunes of single individuals in the United States have scarcely been equaled in the world's history. Authorities place the wealth of the Marquis of Bute at $30,000,000, the Duke of Westminster at $50,000,000, and the Duke of Norfolk at $40,000,000.

In the United States several men in a single city surpass the highest. The Rockafellers are rated at $200,000,000. The Goulds at between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000, and the late Vanderbilt at $200,000,000. A simple problem in arithmetic will reveal to any interested person the threatening evil of such enormous fortunes and of concentrated wealth. Sixty-three billion dollars of national wealth do not represent that degree of prosperity. The large bulk of it is congested in a few money centers, while more than 40,000,000 of people have practically nothing. Let me read from the New York World some striking facts comparing our condition and showing our drift:

A CENSUS STUDY.

In 1860 our total wealth per capita was $993. The assessed value was $383, or .3873 of the true wealth—51 per cent escaping taxation, and 49 per cent being assessed at an average of 75 per cent of its value. In 1890 the per capita wealth was $999 and the assessed value $384. In other words:

Year.	Assessed value.	Actual wealth.
1860	$12,084,500,005	$31,201,000,000
1890	24,249,589,804	62,000,000,000

Year.	Population.	Per capita.
1860	31,443,321	$993
1890	62,622,250	999

There had been no increase practically in the wealth in thirty years, although in the ten years between 1850 and 1860 the per capita wealth nearly doubled, rising from $591 to $993, of which only $21 was from the discovery of gold.

In 1860 the wealth of this country was very evenly distributed; there were no multi-millionaires, very few millionaires, few large fortunes. No special wealth statistics were collected, but the census of 1860 shows half the wealth in possession of half the people. There were no bonanza farms and no tenant farmers. One-half the male workers were on farms they owned, and the average land value of each farm was $3,251, while few went much over or under. Poverty was confined to the cities, and to small sections of them. It is perfectly safe to assert that 91 per cent of the people held in fair and even measure 91 per cent of the wealth, while 4 per cent of the people owned the remaining 9 per cent, leaving not more than 5 per cent practically paupers.

The per capita wealth is the same to-day as in 1860. Each man eats and drinks, and any great change that has come must of necessity have been by a redistribution of wealth—by taking from many and giving it to one.

The census of 1890 shows that the conditions of 1860 have been reversed; that 91 per cent of the people of the United States are to-day practically paupers, living from hand to mouth, dependent upon their daily labor for their daily bread, while 9 per cent are capitalistic employers, owning 84 per cent of the wealth. It divides the wealth among three classes of families in 1890—(1) multi-millionaires, (2) employing capitalists, (3) wage-workers, as follows:

Class.	Families.	Total wealth.	Per family.
1	4,074	$12,400,000,000	$3,000,000
2	1,092,218	31,620,000,000	28,000
3	12,010,000	17,980,000,000	1,497
Total	13,102,292	62,000,000,000	4,732

In the wage-working class are included all families worth $5,000 or less, or all having their share of the wealth. Now, remember that the wealth that must be created and consumed yearly in order to live—$800 the census says for each family of five, $140 for each person—is included by the census in this. It is a small matter to the multi-millionaire, but a great one to the wage-worker. The actual wealth, omitting our daily bread, is as follows:

Class.	Families.	Wealth.	Wealth per family.
1	4,074	$12,396,768,800	$3,000,000
2	1,092,218	30,746,225,600	28,000
3	12,010,000	8,272,000,000	697
Total	13,102,292	51,414,994,400	3,932

Think what this means. While the average wealth is $3,932 per family, 1,096,292 families (all worth over $5,000) hold an average of $40,000 each, and 12,010,000 families (worth under $5,000) hold an average of only $697 each.

The 4,074 multi-millionaires have 50 per cent more wealth than the 55,000,000 members of the 12,010,000 families belonging to the wage-working class, or 24 per cent of it all. The capitalist employers have 60 per cent, and the masses of the people (91 per cent of them) have only 16 per cent of the wealth.

In 1840 England had been for eight centuries the strongest of protection countries. According to the legacy and succession returns of that year the wealth of the United Kingdom was distributed as follows:

Class.	Families.	Per family.
Rich	26,833	£28,820
Middle	782,100	1,436
Working	4,341,067	44

An almost incredible diffusion of wealth followed the adoption of freer trade in 1848 and finally of free trade in 1860, as shown by the same returns for 1877.

Class.	Families.	Per family.
Rich	122,500	£25,803
Middle	1,824,400	1,005

Over one million families of the working class had joined the middle class. The average wealth of every working family had doubled. The average wealth of the rich families had declined. The rich were getting poorer and the poor were getting richer.

Now suppose we tabulate our American returns in the same way:

Class.	Families.	Per family.
Rich	4,074	£600,000
Middle	1,092,218	5,500
Working	12,010,000	138

Our census has not divided our population properly for comparison, but a little figuring will show.

The "working class" in the United States numbered less than 50 per cent in 1860; now numbers 91 per cent, and is rapidly increasing in proportion to the others.

The "working class" in England in 1840 numbered 83 per cent; in 1877 numbered 70 per cent, and is decreasing in proportion so rapidly that it will not now number much over 60 per cent. It absorbed nearly all the increase in wealth between 1840 and 1877, while in the United States nearly all the increase in wealth was absorbed by the rich and middle classes between 1860 and 1890.

In 1860 50 per cent of the families of the United States held 50 per cent of wealth; in 1890 we find 91 per cent of the families holding only 16 per cent.

What has brought about this redistribution?

T. E. W.

Along the same line the Dawn, of Boston, remarks upon the distribution of wealth as given by Mr. Holmes, a statistician of the Census Bureau:

In the last number of the Political Science Quarterly there is an article by George K. Holmes. The Political Science Quarterly is as high economic authority as there is in this country. Mr. Holmes is a specialist of the Census Bureau on statistics of wealth. In his article Mr. Holmes treats of the concentration of wealth, and after carefully examining the facts, comes to this result. He says (Political Science Quarterly, page 593): "We are now prepared to characterize the concentration of wealth in the United States by stating that 29 per cent of it (of the wealth of the United States) is owned by three-hundredths of 1 per cent of the families; 51 per cent by 9 per cent of the families (not including millionaires); 71 per cent by 9 per cent of the families (including the millionaires); and 29 per cent of the wealth by 91 per cent of the families." That is, according to Mr. Holmes, 9 per cent of the families of the United States own 71 per cent, or nearly three-quarters, of our wealth, and 91 per cent of our families together own only 29 per cent of our wealth.

Now, do we not begin to see why there is poverty? Mr. Thomas G. Shearman published four years ago similar figures, but they were not credited by many. Here is practically the same result published by the wealth expert of the Eleventh Census. Do we not see now why there are the unemployed? If 91 per cent of our families own only a little over one-quarter of our wealth, that means that they are poor. They do not have the money to buy what they want. They wear old hats, turned clothes, worn shoes. I heard of a number of girls the other day wearing papers under their jackets because they could not afford winter clothing. People are economizing in harsher ways than these. I know of one girl who has lived on one meal a day since November because she does not wish to accept alms. There are many who drop a meal several times a week, and have poor meals the rest of the time, in order to keep out of pauperism. This is what the statistics I have read come to. Now, do we not see how it affects the unemployed? But it is hard to convince people that our workingmen are poor.—The Dawn.

What has brought about this "redistribution"? The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] yesterday, in his long argument on this question, took occasion to refer to the Populists and the socialists of this country as those who were demanding a new distribution of the wealth of the country. I ask, in the face of the figures I have just read, who has been responsible for the "redistribution" of the national wealth during the past thirty years? It must be laid at the door of national legislation in the two Halls of Congress; there the responsibility must lie. If the Populists to-day are demanding in their platforms legislation for the redistribution of the wealth of the United States, it is only to be by lawful means, by the enactment of just and humane laws.

The per capita wealth of the United States was about the same in 1860, according to these figures, as it was in the year 1890. But then the wealth was more evenly distributed amongst the people of our country than it is to-day, when a very large proportion of it in the hands of a very few persons. The "redistribution," as it is termed, has been brought about by the pernicious laws which have been put into effect by the Congress of the United States during this period.

This is a startling disclosure, Mr. President, and confirms the calculations of Thomas G. Shearman, frequently quoted heretofore by Senators. A few men own our Republic.

I do not believe such vast wealth, Mr. President, has been honestly accumulated. No man is able by the greatest exertion to start with nothing and amass $100,000,000 during a single lifetime. It can only be done by the methods of gambling carried on in great commercial centers. Cold-blooded, heartless men stand to-day in the wheat pit and toy with the bread of the poor as though it were the chips on the gambling table. In railroad stock transactions the small savings of farmers, widows, and orphans are swallowed up in a day to swell the vast fortunes of railroad kings. And yet these men, with their wealth protected by the laws of the United States, refuse to accede to a tax of 2 per cent to be used for their specific benefit.

THE RICH WILLING TO COMMIT PERJURY.

They even go so far as to say that such a tax could never be collected; that the rich would commit perjury before they would pay it. This, Mr. President, is a sad comment on the honesty and integrity of this favored class of citizens. Men of wealth should repudiate such statements, and their representatives in Congress who volunteer to make them.

This tax can be collected at less expense than other internal-revenue taxes, and our people will be slow to conceal their actual incomes if public officers are as faithful as the ordinary tax assessor.

In England a fine of $100 and a triple tax on the income is levied for false swearing. The result is that little trouble is experienced in the collection of income taxes. In Prussia if false returns are made the matter is fully investigated and heavy fines or imprisonment or both are imposed. Some millionaires in that country, as in the United States, are opposed to the income tax and sometimes commit perjury to avoid it. But if any citizen fails to make returns for ten years the bill is charged up to the heirs of the estate and on the death of the defrauder the Government collects the amount from his estate with fine and a legacy tax.

NOT MORE INQUISITORIAL THAN OTHER TAXES.

The charge that such a tax is inquisitorial is not true unless the work of all tax collectors is inquisitorial. The city and county assessor comes into our houses and examines and lists one by one your books, pianos, stoves, carpets, clocks, and chairs. He goes on to your farm and appraises your horses and cows, your farming implements and grain. At every custom-house, also, the most inquisitorial process is gone through with on the arrival of every steamer. Your trunks and boxes are opened and the contents examined one by one. The fact is that the collection of any tax is in a sense inquisitorial, and the income tax will be as acceptable to the people as any other tax.

THE RICH ESCAPE TAXATION.

It is a common belief, Mr. President, that the rich do not contribute their fair share of taxes to the support of our public institutions. Whereas they should pay correspondingly more than the poor, they pay less considering the amount of property. Hundreds of millions of Government bonds are owned by millionaires on which they draw quarterly interest in gold, but on which they do not pay a dollar of tax. This exemption was made by the act of 1871, and is as unjust as the score or more laws enacted during the past thirty years for the benefit of the rich.

I have lately read in the Chicago Times a series of editorials charging the assessor in that city with favoring the rich in the appraisement of property. It was a courageous work on the part of the Times, which should commend the paper to fair-minded people. Here is the result of the investigation, which will show you, as you run your eye over the columns of per cents, just where and upon whom the burden of taxation rests.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] wishes a little more explicit information in regard to these facts. I have taken from the Chicago Times a list of twenty pieces of property owned by the rich. In the first column the real value is given, in the second the assessed value, and in the third the per cent of assessment as related to the real value of the property. The assessment for the first is 10 per cent, for the second 12 per cent, and for the third 10 per cent, and so on, making an average of 7 per cent for the list of twenty pieces of property.

The second list is of twenty pieces of property, mostly residences of poor people, ranging in value from $1,600 to $12,500; and we find there the average is 21 per cent.

Startling facts are revealed in Mr. Stead's new book on Chicago under the heading of Dives, the Tax Dodger. I wish that I could take the time to read the whole book here for the benefit of the Senate, but I shall content myself by reading a short editorial from the New York World upon the book. The World says:

RICH MEN AND TAXES.

One of the most startling facts brought to light in Mr. Stead's book on Chicago is the way in which the rich men of that city escape their just share of taxation. Twenty years ago the assessment for taxation of the property of Chicago, real and personal, was $312,072,995. In 1893 it was but $245,790,351.

When, according to the estimate of the people of that city, it is more than two thousand million dollars.

Here is a shrinkage in twenty years of about $70,000,000 in the assessed property, while, as everybody knows, the wealth of the city has enormously increased. The rich have found ways of concealing it from the assessors.

The assessors under oath make the following returns of the personal property of the richest citizens: Marshall Field, $20,000; Marshall Field, jr., $2,000; P. D. Armour, $5,000; George M. Pullman, $12,000; J. W. Doane, $12,000; H. H. Kohlsaat, $1,500; C. T. Yerkes, $4,000.

This man is the owner of the street railway system, I believe.

Potter Palmer, $15,000. None of these men makes out or swears to his own account. The swearing is all done by the assessors, who are allowed by the Crœsuses grossly to undervalue their possessions for taxation. It is not without reason that Mr. Stead says: "There is a heavier sum in solid dollars pocketed every year by the official perjurers of Chicago than is paid to any other officials in the service of the city."

An income tax enforced by the National Government would fetch some millionaire tax-dodgers in Chicago and elsewhere to book. Now they escape doing their proper share in maintaining the institutions of Government under which they fatten by the false swearing of others, connived at if not suborned by bribes. Many of them would not swear falsely themselves. Those who are willing to do it might not be able to buy off the nation's assessors as easily as they corrupt their local officials.

Such facts as these revealed of Chicago show why the rich are, as a rule, against an income tax. Without it they can escape doing their duty. They fear they may not be able to do so any more. Their talk about the evil of false swearing that it will promote means nothing more than that they doubt their own ability to be more honest than they have been in this particular. But they do not relish becoming liable to the pains and penalties of perjury in their own persons.

But so far from this being a reason against an income tax it is a strong reason for it. Too long and too heavily have taxes been imposed upon that part of the earnings of the people which is necessarily spent for shelter, food, and clothing instead of upon the surplus which is saved.

But coming nearer home, Mr. President, look at some facts in the city of Washington. The House committee two years ago, Hon. TOM JOHNSON, of Ohio, chairman, made some discoveries here which furnish very interesting reading for those who are accustomed to make honest returns of property to the assessor. Mr. JOHNSON says in the preamble of his resolution:

Whereas said old assessment on the land values alone in the District is $76,000,000, when it should be more than $300,000,000, this shows an extraordinary undervaluation, and, what is still worse, the greatest injustice between the valuation of the land used for business purposes, which in many cases is assessed at less than 14 per cent of its true value, and land used for residence purposes, especially where the small homes are situated, is assessed at from 70 to 80 per cent of its true value, while in many cases land held for speculation is assessed at less than 10 per cent of its true value. The foregoing facts were brought our by an expert valuation on enough land in the District to furnish an average. A public hearing was held by the Commissioners in which this subject was thoroughly discussed, and after a careful examination they say "the figures embraced in these showings seem to have been carefully and conservatively prepared."

These statements are verified by tables showing exact assessments.

Again, the committee say:

LACK OF CONSCIENCE IN TAXATION.

In the last report of the assessor for the District of Columbia it is intimated that "the public conscience is becoming somewhat elastic on the subject of taxation." This is putting an obvious fact very mildly indeed. So far as our investigation goes, it would be a better expression of the truth to say that in matters of taxation there seems to be very little public conscience left, and that the general sentiment is that no one is bound in honor or honesty to pay any tax that he can by any device escape from, and men whose word is as good as their bond, who would feel themselves disgraced in depriving a private creditor of a penny of his due, make no scruple whatever in defrauding the government of its claim and shirking their responsibility for what is held to be their due to society in return for the benefits which they receive from society.

These discriminations in favor of the rich, Mr. President, do not happen by mistake. It is open, everyday fraud, and is as bad as theft or highway robbery. The poor respect and fear the law. The rich ride over all laws if they are obnoxious to them. The power of money is to-day greater than law; and it is time we were coming back to pure Democratic principles, that all men are equal and entitled to equal protection under the law.

A tax on incomes, Mr. President, would prove to be

A POPULAR TAX.

I feel confident in making this assertion, despite the statement of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], that it is both unpopular and undemocratic. That it was borrowed from the Populist platform, or that it was adopted by the Populist convention, does not, I grant, necessarily make it popular. But the Populists represent only a small portion of public sentiment in favor of the income tax. The agricultural and laboring classes, representing 60 per cent of our population, are, regardless of party, almost unanimous in favor of an income tax.

The vote recently taken in the House on this question would indicate that the West and South are almost a unit in favor of this feature of the bill. The following table shows the population of Congressional districts represented by the affirmative votes:

SOUTHERN STATES.

Total population of these States, 42,398,841.

Here is a table showing population of Congressional districts represented by the negative vote on this proposition. There are given in the table twelve States and forty-eight Congressional districts. The population of these districts was only 8,000,000; in other words, 8,000,000 and a fraction against nearly 31,000,000 of population.

In these New England States, represented as opposed to the income tax, are to be found large bodies of organized labor, like the Knights of Labor, who for years have embodied the income tax in their platforms. From New York, New Jersey, and Massachusetts I get some of the strongest letters in favor of this feature of the revenue bill. Many go so far as to declare that Eastern Representatives do not express the views of a majority of their constituents, but rather the views of the capitalistic class.

I would not go to the length of saying that the income tax is un-Democratic. Will the Senator from New Jersey kindly give me a definition of Democracy? The country to-day is waiting breathless for an answer. Five million five hundred and fifty-one thousand one hundred and forty-three voters who stood by the party in 1892 wish to know, and now look to the daily action of this Chamber. And mark you, they understand the meaning of Democracy. They still stand by the teachings of Jefferson and Jackson, and will suffer no twisting of the term Democracy to suit the whims of a few who have lost their love for the old principles and are willing to vote with Republicans when private interests are involved.

The Senator from New York yesterday took occasion to use the whip and to scourge the balance of the Democrats on this side of the Chamber because he said they were masquerading as Democrats, when at heart they were Populists. I ask whether nine-tenths of the Democrats on this side of the Chamber are not in favor of the income tax, and whether it is not one-tenth, upon the other hand, who are voting and masquerading as Democrats who are at heart not Democrats, but rather Republicans or representatives of the money power?

I clip from the Washington Post editorial an extract showing Democratic sentiment:

NORTH LOUISIANA POPULISTS.

In common with many other newspapers, the Philadelphia Inquirer is greatly interested in the result of a certain sentimental census recently taken in the Fourth Congressional district of Louisiana, and referred to by our esteemed contemporary thus:

"The people of Louisiana are on record as to certain burning questions of the day. At the recent primaries to select a successor to Congressman BLANCHARD, promoted to the Senate, a sort of referendum was held, with the following result:

For income tax	3,446
Against	151
The tariff for revenue	3,156
Against	161
For antioption bill	3,250
Against	173
For repeal of the 10 per cent tax on State banks	3,369
Against	239
For free coinage of silver	3,270
Against	226

"The majority in these cases is so overwhelming as to leave no doubt as to where the people of Northwest Louisiana stand. We run no risk in saying that the income-tax collections from that section will never swell the Treasury coffers to bursting."

This is the average sentiment of the South and West to-day on this and many important questions. Ignore it if you will, these people will yet demonstrate at the ballot box the meaning of Democracy.

If I had time I might analyze the sentiment of the Republicans of the same sections with like results. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] succeeded in proving that the income tax was unpopular among capitalists, but they have not yet caught the sound from the masses.

The enemies of this proposition also say that such a tax is unpopular in England. Note the following from the Chicago Times of April 18, 1894:

VICTORY FOR THE INCOME TAX.

An answer to the assertion that the income tax is so unpopular in England that the Government is about to abolish it came yesterday in the news from London that the new budget increases this tax by 1 penny in the pound. The increase in revenue by this action is estimated at about $8,500,000. This is a significant act on the part of the British Government, for it gives the lie to the assertion that the income tax is odious and unpopular. A government in the ticklish position which Lord Rosebery's ministry now occupies would catch at the opportunity to win favor by reducing an unpopular tax. It certainly would not put its existence further in jeopardy by increasing such an impost.

The fact is that in England the income tax is accepted as a matter of course, enjoying rather more popularity than most devices for raising revenue because of the obvious equity in it. In the United States it will be even more popular than in England, because under our system of raising the bulk of our revenues by tariff duties the inequalities of taxation are more glaring.

That the income-tax clause in the Wilson bill now before the Senate will become a law the Times does not doubt. The bitter assault upon it of the privileged classes, led by the political mercenary, DAVID B. HILL, only goes to prove its justice and to increase its strength. It is characteristic that the attack upon the income tax was coupled with an attack upon free trade. It is significant, too, that the agencies which antagonize the taxation of great incomes are the agencies which oppose any attempt to break down the monopoly of money by a proper increase of the circulating medium. The beneficiaries of privilege are alarmed, and have rallied to each other's defense. (They are so used to having other people taxed for their benefit that they look on a proposition involving their taxation for the people's benefit as revolutionary.) They will make the people pay them for the use of money, yet will they not pay the people—that is, the State—for the protection under which they have amassed their riches?

The income tax is a vital plank in the platform of the people's emancipation. It must be riveted there and made a part of the national structure.

The Senator from New Jersey says that the income tax is un-American. I grant it, Mr. President. It is also undemocratic for the same reason. But neither statement is based upon good logic. All good things are neither American nor democratic. For the United States to refuse to adopt ideas from other nations is like the case of a man who would refuse to use certain products because they were not produced in this country. Let me inform the Senator that his State ballot law—also those of many other States—was borrowed from Australia. The wisest men of our nation to-day say that we would do well to borrow the government ownership of the telegraph from England, and railroad ideas from Hungary, Germany, and Australia. Yes; the income tax is European, but it is good, nevertheless; as good as any economic principle that has been framed into a nation's laws.

England, Italy, and the states of Germany adopted the idea years ago.

Prussia has had an income tax since 1851, and it has worked to the entire satisfaction of the Government and the people.

The minimum of exemptions is 900 marks ($214.20), and the tax on this is about two-thirds of 1 per cent. On incomes ranging from 1,050 to 1,200 marks, about three-fourths of 1 per cent; from 1,200 to 1,350, 1 per cent. The rate increases up to 9,500, where between that amount and 10,000 marks the rate is 3 per cent. Between 10,000 and 100,000 the rate is 5 per cent. Last year the Government collected $31,210,712.

Wurtemburg has had an income tax since 1820, and the present rate is 6 per cent. Baden has a tax of 2 per cent on incomes above $150 and raised last year $1,425,000. Bremen taxes at 4 per cent incomes above $150. Austria's income tax ranges from 7½ to 20 per cent and raises annually $10,000,000. Italy's rate on incomes is 12 per cent, and she raised last year $15,000,000.

Switzerland's tax ranges from 1 to 8 per cent.

England through Mr. Pitt introduced the income tax as early as 1798, and taxes all incomes above $750. Our millionaires want to be English in all but the method of taxation. England long since discovered that capitalists and landed proprietors were the beneficiaries of taxation and adopted the income tax as a matter of justice.

As long ago as 1850 objections were raised by certain capitalists against the income tax, but after two committees, one in 1852 and another in 1861, had made full investigation in elaborate reports they declared it to be the best system that could be devised, and it stands to-day as an example for American statesmen to follow. American capital may court justice when it is too late.

The proposed income tax, Mr. President, is NOT ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY.

Many changes could be made so as to make it more acceptable. The maximum of exemptions should be placed as low as $1,000, an amount supposed to represent the average living expense of a family in moderate circumstances. But the House bill, in placing the maximum at $4,000, have not gone below the average family expense when the moderately rich are averaged with the poor.

Again, the only proper income tax is a graduated one, beginning with small incomes and increasing the percentage of tax on all sums above $5,000. After long experience foreign nations have adopted the graduated plan, and find it works to the entire satisfaction of the majority of the people.

THE UNITED STATES HAS TRIED THE INCOME TAX.

In the United States many people remember having paid an income tax from 1862 to 1872. Under the war income tax the maximum exemption was $600 at first. On sums from $600 to $1,000 the rate was 3 per cent during the first three years. On incomes above $1,000 the rate was 5 per cent. In 1865 a tax of 7½ per cent was levied on all incomes between $600 and $5,000. In 1868 the maximum exemption was placed at $1,000. The average yearly income from this measure was more than $30,000,000.

It was then a war measure, but was willingly paid by all those who hoped for the perpetuity of the Union.

The Senator from New Jersey quotes the revenues derived each year from 1862 to 1873, to show that the tax was unsuccessful. The receipts gradually diminished:

1863	$22,741,358.25	1869	$34,791,855.84
1864	20,294,731.74	1870	37,775,873.62
1865	32,050,017.44	1871	19,162,650.75
1866	72,982,159.63	1872	14,436,861.78
1867	66,014,429.34	1873	5,062,311.62
1868	41,455,598.36

The receipts increased till 1866, and then, as the Senator says, "as soon as it became certain that the Union was saved and that extraordinary, inquisitorial, and hateful methods of taxation were no longer necessary, they refused to pay." A confession, Mr. President, that the rich refuse to obey a law when it is distasteful to them. The fall in income was caused partly by the refusal of the rich to pay; but partly also by the change in the law as to rate of tax and exemptions. The rich can be made to respect any law if proper penalties are attached; and if the Government were as diligent in collecting the income tax from the wealthy as the Internal Revenue Department are in hunting moonshiners or violaters of the tobacco tax, we should have an end of petted and pampered criminals.

The law of 1863, Mr. President, should not have been repealed, for a just law is as good in time of peace as in time of war. But after the war was over and a surplus began to accumulate in the Treasury a continuation of the income tax would have endangered the protective tariff system which had proved a veritable bonanza to New England manufacturers under the war tariff of 1867. If the war tariff was to be retained the income tax must go, and it went.

The abolition of the latter and the retention of the former were alike agreeable and beneficial to the American millionaire. The repeal of the income tax was done at the request of the money power, and is one of the long series of enactments by which during thirty years the people have been converted from freemen into serfs.

We are now hoping to retrace our steps by relieving the masses from the burden of oppressve taxation, but at every step we are confronted by greedy capital which prates about "vested rights" and "legislation aimed at the East." Mr. President, stolen rights are not vested rights; and in the future the people are determined that one section of the country shall be no more sacred than another. No class shall be allowed to become arrogant and oppressive merely because "might makes right." Woe to our country if capital inculcates that doctrine in the minds of 40,000,000 hungry, proud spirited Americans. The people who have slaved in the mines and factories of this country and have produced the vast fortunes now enjoyed by a few feel they have a right to life and the comforts guaranteed by the framers of the Constitution. Capital may go one step too far in their attempt to wrest from the laboring man the fruits of his honest toil.

Considering these facts, Mr. President, can the Senator from New Jersey argue that an income tax is unwise? Will he or other Senators deny the people this small request in the line of justice? It is always wise to throw around the Republic those safeguards of legislation which will insure contentment and happiness to the people and perpetuate our institutions to coming generations. We are here as representatives, and not as individuals; as statesmen, not as local politicians; as patriots, and not as promoters of selfish interests. Let us legislate in the interests of all the people.

Mr. VEST. I attempted yesterday, but did not care to interrupt the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] when he was speaking, to give notice of some amendments which are not printed, which I propose to submit on the part of the committee in lieu of the amendment in regard to the tax upon mutual life insurance companies. I send the amendment proposed by the committee as a substitute to the desk to be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 11, section 59, it is proposed to strike out the following amendment:

Provided, That mutual life insurance companies shall not be required to pay an income tax upon the sums repaid to their policy holders as dividends or interest upon the surplus premiums held by such companies.

And insert at the end of the section:

Nor to any insurance company or association which conducts all its business solely upon the mutual plan and only for the benefit of its policy holders or members, and having no capital stock and no stock or shareholders, and holding all its property in trust and in reserve for its policy holders or members; nor to that part of the business of any insurance company having a capital stock and stock and shareholders, which is conducted on the mutual plan, separate from its stock plan of insurance company and solely for the benefit of the policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan, and holding all the property belonging to and derived from said mutual part of its business in trust and reserved for the benefit of its policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan.

Mr. HOAR. I was unable to catch the reading from the desk. Does the Senator mean to include all insurance companies, whether marine, life, or fire?

Mr. VEST. All insurance companies conducted on the mutual plan.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator intend to propose an amendment in regard to building and loan associations?

Mr. VEST. I am about to state the other amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri—I have just now had the opportunity of looking at the amendments—that he offer all the amendments and have them sent immediately to the Printer to be printed.

Mr. VEST. I am doing that. I want everybody to have full notice of what these amendments are, so that the debate may be conducted intelligently.

In line 20, section 54, the committee propose to strike out "four" and insert "three," and so all through the bill, thereby making the exemption $3,000 instead of $4,000.

In regard to building and loan associations, the committee propose to modify the amendment so as not to apply to building and loan associations which make loans only to their shareholders.

Upon page 187 of the print of the bill which I hold in my hand, section 59, line 14, the committee propose to insert after the word "collected" the words "except as herein otherwise provided;" and in lines 15 and 16 to strike out the words "ordinary working or" and insert "actual;" after the word "expenses," in line 16, to insert "losses and interest on their bonded debt;" so that with this amendment the section would commence:

That there shall be levied and collected, except as herein otherwise provided, a tax of 2 per cent per annum on the net profits or income above actual operating expenses, losses, and interest on their bonded debt, etc.

This exempts from taxation the losses of these corporations and interest on their bonded debt or fixed charges.

Mr. HALE. It is difficult, listening to the Senator, to know to what section or sections of the bill these provisions apply.

Mr. VEST. The new section.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator whether this covers that portion of the bill which refers to railroad corporations and which emphasizes what is known as the surrender to the railroad corporations, or does it only apply to banks?

Mr. VEST. It covers the corporation section, 59.

Mr. HALE. Does it include railroad corporations?

Mr. VEST. Of course, it includes all corporations.

Mr. HALE. There has been a large assembly of railroad people here for the last few days, and there has been a good deal of interest to know what would come out of it; and therefore I wanted to know what these provisions covered.

Mr. VEST. I know nothing of any railroad people being assembled here. I have not seen any of them, except as I have seen people here every day for the last four months; but this amendment has not been made at the instigation of any corporation. I am under the influence of no corporation, and have no connection with any corporation; but we are endeavoring to make this bill upon just and equitable principles, and this was the result of consultation amongst the members of the committee.

In line 17, section 56, strike out the word "three" and insert "two;" in line 11, page 175, strike out "three" and insert "two;" and in line 8, section 65, page 196, strike out the words "collector of its collection district" and insert "Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the Senator from Missouri presented all the amendments he intends to present?

Mr. VEST. All I intend to present now. The other amendments are printed in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Was an order entered to have these amendments printed immediately, so that we can have an opportunity to examine them?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Their printing will be ordered in the absence of objection.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the details of this bill. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Missouri I had understood would be offered. I think, so far as I have been able to catch them, and so far as I can understand them from the reading at the desk, that they probably improve the details of the bill.

I only desire to say a few words about the principle of collecting revenue from the income tax. Such a tax has been grievously assailed, not only on this floor, but in the public press of a certain section of the country. It has been assailed as a sectional method, a sectional principle, as one belonging to monarchical government, and having no place in a republic. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] yesterday made a very violent attack, not upon the bill, but upon the proposition to collect money by means of an income tax. He said:

This proposition is a war upon industry, honest wages, frugal living, and moderate gains. It is a combination of aristocrat and Populist, of the millionaire and the tramp, which is forcing this policy upon us against which the honest, the simple, frugal American spirit expresses its dissent and its loathing. You put the burden upon these men, upon the savings bank, upon the life policy, upon the foreman in the mill, upon the man with a little saving which you will take off from whisky and tobacco. It is easy to get a sufficient revenue, if that be what you want, though the Senator from New York has well demonstrated that you have plenty without it by a reasonable and moderate addition to the imposition upon whisky and tobacco.

Mr. President, that is in keeping with the arguments which have been made, I believe, on this floor, not only now but heretofore, with reference to the income tax. In 1871, when there was a proposition before the Senate to repeal the then existing tax, an examination of the RECORD will disclose the fact that the same class of arguments, if arguments they may be called, were then invoked as are now made. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a few remarks made by the then distinguished Senator from Indiana, the old war governor, Senator Morton, touching this very method of proceeding. This was in 1870, when the question was before the Senate. He said:

Mr. President, we have had the argument by epithet in this case. This has been called an inquisitorial, an infamous, and an iniquitous tax. I will meet the argument by epithet with the argument of opinion, and I will give my opinion on the other side, that it is the most equitable and just of all taxes.

But it is said that some rich men will make false returns, and therefore all ought to be exempted. Many rich men make false returns in regard to State taxes, and my opinion is there is just as much fraud committed in regard to State taxes as there is in regard to national taxes, and I think the cases are far more frequent, in fact.

After continuing some time in defense of the principle of the income tax, he further said:

But I shall now speak of the general operation of the law; and I say, taking the country through, taking the general condition of the community, that the income tax is the best expression and exponent of the productive property of this country. Sometimes a man pays a tax on an income that is far above his productive property. It may be on a fictitious income; it may be what may be called an occasional income resulting from peculiar circumstances that may not happen again during his life. I do not argue from those cases; I argue from the great mass of cases; I will say four hundred and ninety-nine cases out of every five hundred; and, take the country through, the income is a true expression of a man's productive property.

Later, he said:

I started out with the declaration that it was the most just and equitable of all taxes. I have compared it now to the system of State taxation of property according to its value, real and personal, and the experience of every Senator who hears me proves to him that there is more hardship from taxing a man according to the assessed value of his property than in any other way.

Then he goes on and speaks of some hardships such as the Senator from Massachusetts brought against the law, and says:

The law can not avoid that. I know we can not meet these exceptions. The law has to deal in generalities; and when gentlemen complain of the hard cases growing out of the income tax I refer them to the fact that there are more hard cases growing out of every other system of taxation, because no other system represents half so well a man's productive property.

* * * * * * *

The argument is against a tax that falls upon the productive property according to its quantity, and upon its consumption; that falls upon the country according to population and not according to wealth. It is an argument in favor of an unequal and unjust tax and against a just and equal tax in its principles.

There is very much more here which might be read, and I think it would be instructive and would be a full answer to the epithets which are hurled against the proposed law.

I have another quotation I should like to make. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] addressed the Senate on the 25th of January, 1871, upon this question:

It is the only tax—

Speaking of the income tax—levied by the United States that falls upon property or office, or on brains that yield property, and in this respect is distinguished from all other taxes levied by the United States, all of which are upon consumption, the consumption of the rich and the poor, the old and the young. I make this the simplest division of taxes—taxes upon possessions and taxes upon consumption. As the income tax now stands, it is estimated that it will yield $12,833,000 out of an aggregate revenue of $320,000,000, or about 4 per cent or one twenty-sixth part of our aggregate revenue.

The Senator from Ohio was then resisting the repeal of the income tax. As to the objection against it that it interferes with private business, the Senator said:

The first objection is that it authorizes espionage into a man's business. Well, sir, so do all taxes. Your whisky tax authorizes the most searching espionage, and assumes that fraud is inevitable in the production of whisky.

Then the Senator proceeded to show that in all the collection of revenue duties of every kind and character there was the same objection to be made, and said:

But no custom-house laws can be enforced unless this espionage is allowed. It is not allowed for the purpose of interfering with men or women engaged in ordinary travel, but the espionage must extend to them in order to reach the fraudulent importer or the smuggler.

* * * * * * *

There is not a State in this Union which does not authorize more espionage into a man's private affairs than the income-tax law of the United States.

Again he said:

We are told that this is an odious and unpopular tax. I never knew a tax that was not odious and unpopular with the people who paid it. I think if the Senator from Pennsylvania would go into some places in Philadelphia he would find that the whisky tax which is so popular with us is unpopular there.

Later, after arguing to show that it was a fair tax, he said:

That is the only answer, and it is a complete answer; because if you leave your system of taxation to rest solely upon consumption without any tax upon property or income, you do make an unequal and unjust system.

Then the Senator went on to show that the income tax was collected at less expense and at about half the expense required to collect other taxes.

I speak only by recollection, not having looked at it recently; but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who introduced the income-tax proposition in the House of Representatives and advocated it, declared then from his place in the House that it was a just and equitable system of taxation. When the question came before the Senate for final vote——

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Colorado will see that the committee then introduced it with great reluctance and as a necessary war measure.

Mr. TELLER. They did not introduce an unjust and inequitable tax, I think, even for a war measure. It was regarded, and the debate in the Senate will show that a majority of the Republicans of this body at that time so declared both by their voice and by their vote, as an equitable and just system of taxation without reference to the question of war or peace. The most distinguished members of this body, at least a great number of very distinguished members of this body defended the income tax by speeches and by their votes. There were 26 votes in favor of its repeal and 25 against it, and every Senator who voted against it was a member of the Republican party. There were 5 Democrats who voted with the 26 for the repeal. So in 1871 the Republican party in this Chamber put themselves upon record in favor of the justice and the righteousness of the abused income tax.

I shall not read the vote of the Senate, but there were in the Senate at that time a good many men of national reputation who favored the retention of the act, and who defended it not upon the ground that it was a war measure, for in all that debate which I have gone over I do not find a single defender of it, not even the Senator from Vermont, in defending it putting it upon the ground that it was a necessary war tax. Some of them did say that we could not afford in the state of our finances to dispense with the revenue, and perhaps made that the reason. All who expressed themselves on the subject, I think without exception, declared that it was an equitable and just tax.

The then colleague of the senior Senator from Vermont, not being present at the time of the vote, was paired in favor of the retention of the act. Various other Senators of national reputation, and, I repeat, more than half of the Republican members of the Senate, voted for the retention of this tax, at a time when there was no pressing necessity for revenue, any more than there is to-day, or as much, and when there was every year and every month of the year a surplus of revenue.

Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] declared from his seat here that it was admitted by the defenders of this proposition that it was the purpose to distribute the property of the United States by means of an income tax. I challenged the Senator then, and I challenge him now, and I challenge everyone who is opposed to this feature of the bill to show that any one of the advocates of the proposition has ever made any such statement here or elsewhere.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Colorado will read the debates in the House of Representatives upon this very measure, he will find that the principal advocates of the proposition there stated that this was the first step in taking away from the rich property which did not belong to them for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Government, which they ought to pay. Of course no person in the House of Representatives or elsewhere, so far as I know, has stated directly that this is a method for the redistribution of wealth; but the logical result of their arguments and statements was exactly in the line which I have now stated, that it is for the purpose of reaching practically a redistribution of wealth.

Mr. TELLER. I am not allowed by the rules of the Senate to comment upon what occurred in the other House, but as it has been referred to, I will state that after a fairly careful examination of the debate I do not think there is anything in it which will justify that inference, and the Senator himself admits it is an inference and not a statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am told by a Senator near me that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] in his speech this morning discussed the proposition along that line.

Mr. TELLER. It has been discussed along the line that the rich people of the country are not paying their part of the taxes. That is a very different thing from the distribution of the property. No Socialist, no anarchist can possibly hope to derive any personal gain by taking money out of the coffers of the rich and putting it in the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the argument, it is that at present the poor people of the country pay all the taxes and the rich people pay none, and the idea is to have the rich people pay the taxes and the poor people relieved from paying them. It strikes me it is only an indirect method of doing the same thing.

Mr. TELLER. There is no such assumption made on the part of anybody who defends this feature of the bill. The Senator from Rhode Island may make the argument for his side; he has no right to make it for the other. The argument has been from the beginning, it has been defended upon that principle, it was so defended when it was passed here, it was so defended when it was maintained here, upon the ground that it was an equitable distribution of the taxes, and that the men who had the wealth of the country should pay in proportion as they call upon the Government for their protection and preservation. It has been asserted here and it has been asserted elsewhere that a tax upon consumption and consumption alone does not properly distribute the burdens of taxation among the people.

The man who holds millions of dollars' worth of property pays no more, perhaps, under the general taxes levied upon consumption than the man who has not any property. The man who buys foreign clothes and foreign wines and foreign cigars or who buys cigars which are manufactured here under the internal-revenue system of taxation pays a tax; and we know that in every community there are men of moderate means and moderate fortune who pay just as much tax to the General Government in that way as the richest of all. That is the claim; not that it is proposed that the rich men shall pay the taxes, but that they shall pay an equitable and just proportion of the taxes, and no more and no less.

There is no party in this country which ever has insisted in its platform or by its representative men that any class of people in this country should pay more than a just and equitable share of the burden of maintaining our Government. No party could live which would put itself upon such a platform. The common sense of the American people and their sense of justice would prevent a party from coming into power upon such principles, but there has been a feeling amongst the people of the United States, and rightfully, too, that the wealth of this country does not bear its fair proportion of the burdens.

It is said that this is a sectional tax. It is sectional because in one section of the country the people will pay more than the people in another section will pay. That is true. The great State of New York and the State of Massachusetts, all the New England States and the Middle States, will pay more in proportion to their population, perhaps, than will be paid by the Western States and the Southern States, but they will not pay as much under this proposed act in proportion to their wealth as the Southern and Western States will pay. There is not the slightest excuse for the statement that an income tax is sectional. There is not the slightest excuse for the statement that anybody who advocates this proposition proposes to take from any man that which he is not under obligations equitably and justly to surrender to the Government of the United States for the preservation and maintenance of order and the preservation and protection of his property.

Is this tax an inquisitorial tax to such an extent that we ought not to adopt it? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] yesterday took offense at something the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] said in plain Western language, that the objection to this tax is that the rich men of the country are going to lie about it and not pay. That has been the stock argument against this proposition. It is not put in that way; nobody says it exactly as the Senator from Kansas said it, but it has been repeated ad nauseam that we can not collect this tax because the people will not render to the Government a just and truthful account of their incomes.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I did not take offense at that. I took offense because the Senator from Kansas insisted I had said it. I never said it, and never thought it.

Mr. TELLER. I did not so understand. I thought he charged it had been said generally.

Mr. HOAR. I pointed out that all I said was that the people like to have privacy in their affairs, but the Senator from Kansas still persisted, and I did not further insist on correcting him.

Mr. TELLER. I misunderstood the Senator's cause of complaint against the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. TELLER. I supposed the Senator from Massachusetts was objecting because the Senator from Kansas had made a general charge that that is the argument against the proposition. The Senator from Massachusetts will admit, I suppose, that that is perhaps the most frequently adduced argument against such a tax, that you can not honestly collect it.

Mr. HOAR. I do think I should go so far as to say that it is the most frequently used argument. It is undoubtedly an argument, but it never seemed to be an argument with the slightest weight. As I said yesterday, the objection to the income tax on that ground is not a tenth part equal to that which would apply to a tariff. There never would be a tenth part as much objection to an income tax law on that ground as to a law taxing importations.

Mr. TELLER. I am coming to that point.

Now, is it an inquisitorial tax? Is it any more so than the State taxes under the laws of Massachusetts or any other State, because the laws are practically the same on that subject? Every citizen of the State of Massachusetts and other States is required, at least that is the law in the West, and I suppose it is the law in the East, to give in under oath a statement of all his personal and real property. If he has bonds, not United States bonds, and not excepted from taxation, he must list them.

If the authorities think the party does not properly list his bond, they bring him before them and then they make a proper list themselves. They inquire into a man's business; they send for his books; they subpœna witnesses, if they choose, and they take all the steps which may be necessary to compel him to pay his just and proper share of Government burdens. If an importer ships goods to the city of New York he is compelled to furnish a properly certified and sworn invoice. If the authorities believe that it is not correct, they take testimony and examine into his affairs to determine whether he is making a proper return.

When a person lands at the New York wharf some whippersnapper comes up and says, "Have you any diamonds or any contraband goods on your person?" No matter who it may be, no matter what his reputation at home may be, unless he happens to occupy an official position for the time being he is liable to be taken into a room and searched and compelled to disrobe. And that is true whether the person be a male or female; yet nobody will allege that against the collection of import duties that you can not collect them honestly, because occasionally there is a villain who will bring in things upon which he ought to pay a duty with a view of not paying a duty. So honest men have to submit to indignities, and no man ever was searched at a station who did not feel indignant. He can not help it, although he knows it is proper and right that that should be the law. He feels that an insult has been put upon him, and yet no thinking man feels it so severely that he brings that as a charge against the system of collecting import duties. Under the ad valorem system of collecting import duties there are, in my judgment, three or four times as many opportunities for fraud as there are in the collection of the income tax.

Now, why should not the man who has an income of more than $3,000 (as I understand that is to be the limit now) pay upon that income? Is it not a fairer system of levying taxes than to levy them upon property? The man who has broad acres in Kansas or Colorado that are worth to him nothing as a revenue-producing agent, pays taxes to his State, and he might pay taxes to the Government under a system properly arranged; but is it not infinitely more just that the man who has money coming to him should pay a pittance of 2 per cent upon his income? Is there any hardship in it? Is there any inequality in it? Is the statute when it shall be enacted liable to the charge that was brought against it by the Senator from Massachusets [Mr. HOAR] yesterday, that it is a tax upon industry, a tax upon thrift, a tax upon honesty?

The Senator says that some man with a great estate will take and absorb all the income from it in riotous living. So men in every department of life will waste their substance. When you tax the mechanic's house under the State law of Massachusetts (and I think they tax them all), it is a tax upon industry; it is a tax upon saving; it is a tax upon thrift. All taxes bear hard upon the people who pay them, unless it be the very rich. But you can not maintain governments without taxation. When governmental societies were organized every man agreed that he would pay his part of the burden, and he agreed that that should be in proportion to the property that he owned; that is, determined by the income that he gets.

Mr. President, let us see whether this is a severe provision upon the men who have incomes. I do not suppose that the foremen of very many mills spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts get more than $3,000 a year. Perhaps occasionally in the great establishments making iron (and I do not know but that it is the same case with extremely skilled people in the manufacture of cotton cloths and woolen goods) they get more than $3,000, but they are the exception and they are envied by all the rest. If such a person gets $5,000 he will pay how much? He will pay on $2,000, and he will pay $40. The mechanic and the clerk, and the man whose income is so small that he lives up to it every day, escapes this taxation. Does the Senator object to that? Does anybody object to it? He has little property, and probably escapes State taxes as he escapes national taxes. The true principle is that the property of the country shall maintain the government of the country.

I presume it is safe to say that the interest upon the investments of this country will not now exceed 4½ to 5 per cent. If the citizen gets his income from fortunate investments in railroad securities or other things which are excepted, although he may have $50,000 invested, from which he draws 4, 5, or 6 per cent, he will not pay a single dollar on that income. I think no man who has an income above $3,000 a year ought to complain.

Is it true, as stated by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday, that we do not need this revenue? We needed it in 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865. We need it to-day, I repeat, as much as we needed it then.

Up to the 1st day of April the revenues had fallen behind $66,000,000, and since then they have fallen behind until certainly there will be a deficiency of seventy-five or eighty million dollars this year. How is it to be met? Senators tell us there is abundance of revenue.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] said there is abundance of revenue from import duties. In 1892 the revenue duties were within $10,000,000 of the expenditures of the Government; in 1893 they were within less than two and a half million dollars; and for the year 1894, I repeat, they will be undoubtedly somewhere in the neighborhood of from sixty-six to seventy-five million dollars less, and perhaps the amount of deficiency will be less. Month by month the deficiency is increasing.

Now, pray tell me, some one who is opposed to this income tax, how are we to pay the national obligations; how are we to maintain the high credit this Government has maintained unless we resort to some other method? I asked the Senator from Delaware what is to be the revenue under this bill? I had asked the committee. I know that no one can tell, no one who has studied this question has any reason to suppose that the revenues for the next year will be any more than they are now or than they have been for the last year.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I regret very much, of course, to interrupt the Senator during what may be called a set speech——

Mr. TELLER. It is not a set speech. The Senator is quite at liberty to interrupt me.

Mr. HILL. I wish simply to make one suggestion. Does the Senator say that the condition of [illegible]ces of the country is such that it is impossible to mak[illegible]tion of tariff duties without providing some other syst[illegible]evenue?

Mr. TELLER. I believe that there might have been a revision of the tariff in a way that might have brought more revenue than the McKinley act brought. If the revision of the tariff was solely for the purpose of securing revenue, I believe that it might have been done in a way that there might have been an increased revenue over that of the year 1893.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Then are we to understand that the tariff-reform bill that is proposed to be passed will not of itself alone bring sufficient revenues to support the Government?

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe it will.

Mr. HILL. I commend that to the consideration of the gentlemen who are engaged in supporting it on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe the pending bill would bring sufficient revenue without the income tax. It may be that it would bring sufficient revenue to run the Government, but we must have more. We owe $600,000,000, some of which will become due very soon. We shall have to provide for the payment of our national debt. The American people have willed and determined long since that the national debt should be wiped out and not continued, and therefore any revenue system which does not provide more than is necessary to run the Government each year is not a proper one.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, the estimates which have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury include sufficient to pay all the interest on the public debt.

Mr. TELLER. The estimates may do that. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated last year that the deficiency in the revenues would be $28,000,000. They will be $50,000,000 more. Is it wise for any government to run so close to the wind that a little disturbance in the financial affairs of the country will destroy its revenue, so that there will be a deficiency?

Mr. President, we want a revenue tariff, if we obtain our revenue by a tariff, that shall not only yield sufficient to run the Government, but leave a surplus in the Treasury to apply to the payment of our debts, and if we do not get it from that source we must get it somewhere else.

I need not say here what I have said before, that the American people were displeased with the McKinley act of 1890. They believed, as very many men on this floor who voted for it believed, that in it we had gone to excess, and had put upon the statute book larger import duties than ought to have been imposed. The people of the United States were not satisfied, and if the Republican party had come into power public sentiment would have required of us that we should revise the tariff in very many particulars.

In my judgment, I repeat, not only is an income tax an equitable and just and proper method, but it is absolutely necessary at this time that we should have it. Our finances are not in good condition; the financial world is not in good condition; and while you put down the duties upon imports, and it should be presumed that the imports will increase, the amount of imports that come to this country will depend upon our ability to buy. If we are not able to buy they will not come in. Consumption in the United States, by the best authorities and by all who have given attention to it for the last year, has been reduced one-third. There is nothing in the financial sky that justifies any man in believing that increased consumption will cause a greater demand for imports. If the people can not buy the importer will not import.

Our gold goes abroad every month, some months at the rate of $25,000,000. Twenty-five million dollars went last month and $15,000,000 already in this month, or in the neighborhood of that amount. There is no prospect of a revival of business. There is no prospect that the people of the United States will be able to consume the additional millions and many millions of imports that will be required to make up this deficiency; and, as I said months ago, we are met with the proposition squarely, shall we create further indebtedness to maintain the current expenses of the Government, or shall we by an income tax collect from the wealth of the country that which it can easily bear?

There is no country in the world whose citizens feel the hand of the national government as lightly as they feel it here. Nobody has felt its burden, whether it was a tax upon consumption or a tax upon incomes; and a tax upon incomes of 2 per cent is infinitesimal, and ought not to excite the ire of the fortunate possessors of great wealth and of great incomes. But whether it does or does not, I want to predict that the income tax has come not to stay for five years, but to stay as a permanent system in this Government for the collection of revenue, as a system that has been demonstrated in another country (where there is as much love of justice and law as there is here) to be after all the most equitable method of compelling property to pay the burdens of Government. I speak of the Kingdom of Great Britain.

I know the Senator from New York thought that that did not commend itself to us because it was an English aristocratic system. Mr. President, there is no aristocracy in taxes. There is no democracy in taxes. The law puts its hands, if it is an equitable and just law, upon the property, and not upon the individual. In Great Britain they have been compelled by their necessities, by their enormous debt, and tremendous expenses to acquire in every way that they could taxes on an equitable and just plane, and this tax, which went into effect in 1798 and continued until 1816, and then went into effect again in 1842, finds no opponents in that great Kingdom. It is admitted by all, Liberal and Tory, that it is a proper and just way of distributing the burdens of government on the people of that country. It was a just and equitable tax in this country, and found no opponents outside of the few people bordering on the Atlantic Ocean, and very few of those.

Mr. HILL. I assume the Senator did not intend to misrepresent the position of public men in England. I read in my remarks on April 9 last, and simply incidentally referred to it yesterday, a letter from Mr. Gladstone, who for many long years has had a little to do with the Government of Great Britain, in which he said he was not in favor of the continuance of that tax, and gave his reasons.

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean that somebody did not complain about it. I meant to say what the Senator will not deny, that no political party in that country has ever made that one of its articles of faith. There, whenever they want any money, they do not go to Parliament; some authority that they have adds 2 pence to the pound, or 3 pence, or whatever may be necessary. It is a more burdensome tax there than it is here. It is collected in Italy; it is collected in Austria; it is collected in Germany; it has become one of the features of administration the world over as equitable and just.

Mr. HILL. Is it collected in any republic on the face of the globe?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, there are not many republics. I do not know whether it is collected in any republic, and I do not know any republic on the face of the earth outside of ours that any financier would point to as an exemplar in financial administration. Whatever we may have done as republics in taking care of the liberty of the person and of speech and all that, the republics of the world outside of our own have not shown any extraordinary wisdom in finance. I do not know whether any other republic except ours ever tried it. We tried it, and I repeat, when that act was repealed there was no sentiment for its repeal outside of a small fringe of settlements on the Atlantic coast and California on the Pacific. Senators on this floor from the great States of Iowa and other inland States declared that it was a popular law.

I believe it may be said that there is no other feature in this bill that will commend itself so thoroughly to the people of the United States as this feature, not because the people of the United States are socialists, not because the people of the United States want to take unduly from any man that which the law does not require to be done in equity and justice; but because there is a prevalent idea everywhere that it is an equitable and just system of distributing the burdens. The Senator from New York talks about its shipwrecking the Democratic party. Mr. President, I have not much interest as to whether it does or does not; but if there is anything that will give the Democratic party a hold upon the votes of this country it is the assertion in the bill of this principle of equitable and just taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate more than a short time to express my opinions in regard to the income tax.

On the 25th of January, 1871, in a speech made in the Senate, I gave my opinion as to the constitutionality and justice of the income tax. I have read that speech within a day or two, and do not find anything in it that I do not concur in. I believe, under the circumstances in which we were then placed, the repeal of the income tax was a bad measure of public policy. It was carried mainly not by party divisions so much as by sectional divisions. The majority of the Senate voted for its repeal mainly upon the ground that there was a surplus revenue at that time to a considerable amount, and they claimed that the income tax was not therefore necessary. I was opposed to the repeal of the income tax for the reasons I gave in that speech. Those reasons still stand as my justification.

If the circumstances in which we are now placed were the same as then, or anything like it, I would insist upon a renewal of the income tax. I believe that an income tax is a fair and just mode of revenue, whether enforced by the nation or the State; and if the circumstances demanded it and there was any necessity for it, I should not hesitate for a moment to vote for an income tax as proposed in this bill. I do not think there is any such necessity. I do not believe it is a wise thing at this time to renew this exceptional tax—the income tax—which was never before assessed since the Government of the United States was formed, except during the civil war.

In 1871, when it was proposed to repeal the tax, the Government of the United States was in debt over $2,000,000,000. The permanent appropriations growing out of the war, including the interest on the public debt and the sinking fund, amounted to $160,000,000. The great payments of the debt have been made since that time. The conditions then existing demanded, as I thought and as I urged throughout the length and breadth of that speech, that the current income tax should be continued at least until it expired by its own limitation. According to the law as it stood in January, 1871, the income tax would have expired in two years, I believe, the 1st of January, 1873.

Yet the proposition to repeal the income tax was carried by the majority of one vote at a time when this heavy burden rested upon the shoulders of the American people. The result was that in two years from that time the income of the Government fell so greatly that there was a deficiency in the revenues in 1874, very much the same condition of affairs that we are having now. Indeed, the United States is passing through one of those peculiar financial stringencies that occur among all nations and all people in all times, when the fluctuation of trade, which no man can foresee, causes a great disturbance in business affairs and a sudden loss of confidence, a reduction of revenue, and enormous loss to the people.

In 1873 there was just such a condition as we have now, twenty years afterwards. In 1873 the panic was precipitated by the failure of a great banking house interested in building the Northern Pacific Railroad, but the want of confidence growing out of that one fact spread to all other industries, so that in two years after that time all kinds of industries became stagnated, and the people were passing through a period of most severe stringency, far greater than they are passing through to-day.

The same condition, the same stringency, has again come upon the people. Hardly any man can give a reason why. No man can say there is anything peculiar in the condition of affairs in the United States that does not apply to all the other nations of the world. We know that the same stringency that exists here exists also in other parts of the commercial world. Under these circumstances I do not think it is wise for us to renew a tax that was never put in force except once, when the United States had over $160,000,000 of permanent appropriations to meet, interest on the public debt and the sinking fund. At that time we were feeling all the resulting burdens of the war, and the public debt had not been materially reduced. Under these circumstances to repeal any form of a taxation seemed to me unwise and improper.

I do not deny that on general principles of equality and justice the incomes of the rich should contribute their full share of taxes. Their incomes ought to bear a fair share of the public burden, but it seems to me that it should only be imposed by the Government of the United States in a time of severe and vital necessity. The States ought to have the power of taxing incomes, and they have it unless they have denied that power to their Legislatures by their constitutions. They ought to have the power of levying all direct taxes; and this income tax, whatever may be said by the Supreme Court, and however nice the distinctions may be made between direct and indirect taxation, is in effect a direct tax upon each individual or upon a corporation representing individuals. This tax ought to be left to the people of the States.

The other day in speaking upon this bill I showed that the local taxes of the people of the several States amount to $200,000,000 more than the taxes imposed by the General Government. Therefore, public policy demands that we should leave to the States all forms of taxation that are not specifically and exclusively levied by the United States. We have in duties on imported goods a sure and ample reliance for all that is necessary to carry on the operations of the Government.

It is not necessary to pass this income tax provision to provide sufficient revenues for the support of the National Government. We are now daily repealing and reducing taxes which fall lightly upon the people, which can not be levied by the State governments, which can be levied only by the National Government in the form of duties on imported goods. Day by day we have by this bill sacrificed by the million dollars a day the revenue that would come into the Treasury with but little cost from duties on imported goods which can not be levied for State taxes.

There are ample resources in this form of tax for all the expenses of the Government, whatever may be their name or nature. There is no di[illegible]whatever in the honorable gentlemen who have char[illegible] bill putting enough taxes on imported goods to coll[illegible]h and even more than enough revenue to carry on the [illegible]ary operations of the National Government, leaving to excises for ample means for the necessary payment of the interest on the public debt and the pensions to the Union soldiers of the war. The pretext for this measure is that some faults are found in the McKinley act. Some dissatisfaction was created two years ago when that act was not understood any more than the pending bill is now understood by the people of the United States.

On account of the changes made, the alarm that was created, and the loud outcry made by our Democratic friends, there was a gross misunderstanding in regard to the terms and provisions of the McKinley act. It was a far better measure than they represented it. It largely reduced taxation. It was a measure of relief and wise protection to domestic industries; but a feeling was created that some of the duties were too high, and we may concede that some of the rates were too high. On the other hand the McKinley act repealed many taxes, some of which ought to have been retained.

If I were called upon to designate one or two items that ought to have been preserved in the McKinley act, I would say at once promptly that the tax on sugar ought never to have been disturbed. It is the best subject of taxation, because it not only gives a sure and certain revenue and is but a slight burden upon the consumer, yet it protects an industry vital to our country, and which will be more important to us in the future when the sugar beet shall supply the great body of the sugar consumed by our people. Slight changes in the McKinley law, additions here and deductions there, without any radical change of its provisions, would have been amply sufficient to have furnished all the necessary expenses of the Government without resorting to an income tax.

Therefore I shall vote against this income tax simply because it is unnecessary. It is unnecessary because we have ample sources of revenue without resorting to this expedient.

Then, besides, to levy an income tax is an invasion of the rights of the States. The States have only direct taxes upon property, including incomes, licenses, and franchises by which to carry on the operations of the State and local government. We ought to keep our hands off of every kind of taxation the States may properly levy. There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any kind of property tax being levied by a State upon any of the property, real or personal, of the citizens of that State. They could levy income taxes as well as we, and we have other and better sources of revenue which tend to protect and foster our industries.

We ought not to invade the domain of State taxation or cripple them in the exercise of their local powers of taxation, which now requires more than $560,000,000 to meet the growing wants of States, counties, cities, and townships extending over our vast country. If it were not for that, and if there was some absolute necessity to secure a greater sum of money than can be collected from imports and excises, I would not hesitate in levying it in the form of an income tax.

But there is another thing. The terms and conditions of this income-tax provision it seems to me are utterly indefensible. Why should we levy a tax upon the incomes above $4,000 a year and not levy upon the great mass of the incomes from $1,000 up to $4,000?

Mr. CULLOM. It is proposed to reduce it to three.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it proposed to reduce it to three? Well, that is an improvement. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is proposed to reduce the minimum income to $3,000.

Mr. CULLOM. I so understood the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Yes; to $3,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. That helps somewhat. Why take $3,000 as the standard? There is only one line of demarcation which has been generally observed by any nation, including our own, and that is to exempt from income taxation enough to cover all the necessaries of life of a man's family in the ordinary condition of human society.

In the beginning of our civil war, when our circumstances were stringent and we had to get money, we exempted $600, on the ground that $600 would supply at least the wants of the ordinary family, merely exempting enough to supply the absolute wants of a family in the ordinary condition of the people of our country. All above that was taxed. We collected over $300,000,000 in less than ten years on this tax. We made no discrimination. This bill does make the discrimination of $3,000 a year. If the tax is levied on all above $1,000 a year—which I would regard as about the line of demarcation of income—and there was any necessity for the use of that money for the support of the Government, I would vote for it with great pleasure.

I feel precisely as I expressed myself twenty years ago, that it was a tax no man should complain of. If the circumstances and exigencies demanded it, or the interests of our people, the need of revenue, or the public credit, or any public interest demanded it, I would vote for it without hesitation. I do not by any means regard the income tax as the worst feature of this bill, and I should have no objection to it, as I say, if there was any real demand for it. But there is not.

Mr. President, this making a line of demarcation on incomes of $4,000 or $3,000 it seems to me is a low and mean form of socialism. Why should a man who has been prosperous, who is a property holder, be aimed at, struck at for special taxation? Why should ordinary success, the result of care and prudence in the management of his affairs, reduce him below or beyond the sympathy of the mass of our people, and subject him to special and discriminating taxes?

Any man who thinks that this doctrine of socialism can poison the minds of the native people of the United States, and especially of the farmers of the United States, is greatly mistaken. The ideas that are now permeating society in many countries of the world will not have a strong foothold among the yeomanry, the plain people of the United States, because they know that whatever may be the advantage of wealth and however may be the condition of prosperity in life between men, our institutions are founded upon the equality of all, and there is no man, however poor and humble, who can not demand and secure the same rights and privileges and enjoyments as the richest man in our country.

In a republic like ours, where all men are equal, this attempt to array the rich against the poor or the poor against the rich is socialism, communism, devilism; it is the foundation of all the fears that now disturb many of the European governments. I have no sympathy with it whatever. I know something about how it was to be poor, how it was to struggle one's way in life, and how to be independent. All that I can perceive, and every person in the United States can perceive it as well as I.

There is a complaint made against the accumulation and distribution of wealth in this country. I do not think there has been any accumulation of wealth for two or three years in our country. There have arisen conditions out of our civil war that have made great changes in the condition of individuals. Probably the most important tendency since the war is the concentration of men and women in cities at the expense of the country. The cities have grown enormously, the most remarkable growth being that of Chicago.

I was in Chicago when its population was less than 50,000, and now it is rivaling New York in the magnitude of its population. Look at the vast wealth created by that aggregation of people, settling upon a treeless plain, because it was as level as the sea when it was first occupied, and unattractive in every way. Yet more than a million and a half people have settled there, and most of them since the war. The vast increase of city property in the United States, and the vast increase of its value by the increased population, has been the chief source of wealth and the foundation of great industrial interests and great property in this country. Who could object to that? It was the natural advance and growth of our country, and it ought to be the pride of our country instead of being the cause of remark and complaint.

Another thing, the inventions of our country in the last thirty or forty years have been wonderful beyond all precedent in ancient or in modern times. Look at the condition of things fifty years ago in the State of Ohio, when we had no railroads, no modes of transportation except the old stage coach and the farm wagon. In former times property was invested in building turnpikes and bridges, and tolls were levied upon all who passed over the bridge or along the turnpike every eight or ten miles. The whole condition of society is changed, not only in Ohio, but in all parts of our country.

Now 170,000 miles of railroad traverse our land, more than all the railroads of Europe. Those railroads have been the source of great wealth, largely increased by very improper means, by watering stock, by selling to the people certificates of stock or bonds that do not represent anything. But this fancied wealth is disappearing. The time I think is not far distant when much of the railroad property in the United States, like the turnpike property and the bridge property, will disappear. Even now many of the stocks except of a very few lines of railroads are of scarcely any value whatever; and many of the fortunes built upon these great works are disappearing like snow before the summer sun. The railroads of the United States could be duplicated for one-third of their cost, and one-fifth of their paper cost as represented by bonds, etc. So these things will cure themselves.

All the wonderful inventions in electricity and all the innumerable and amazing inventions of machinery for farming yielded enormous profits to inventors and capitalists and laid the foundations of great fortunes, but these become the property of the people. The amount that has been realized by the brief monopoly given for patents soon disappears, and then all this vast property becomes the common property of the people of the country and can no longer be made the basis of untold fortunes and untold wealth. The added wealth by invention lessens the labor and toil of the people and reduces the cost of living and adds to the comforts of all.

A farmer in Ohio will take his sulky plow, and riding along he may in an easy way turn the sod and prepare the soil. The labor is comparatively slight. He has the benefit of machinery, but not at its cost twenty or thirty years ago when an ordinary mowing machine would cost $100. Now it costs $30 or $40, all the great establishments competing at low prices to construct the machines. A vast aggregation of wealth has been added to the people of the United States by these inventions. In every condition the life of man and woman is improving, so that although the people of the United States may be suffering from a temporary disability they are really far richer than their fathers and mothers were before them.

Sir, I could draw pictures here by the hour of comparison between the former condition of our people in Ohio and their condition now. It is all beneficial. They are inheriting all these inventions and all the great improvements of the age. Most of the men who are scoffed at as millionaires are self-made men who commenced life in poverty and availing themselves of industry, intelligence, and opportunity, have been successful. Many of them are of the highest standing and character, some have devoted their lives to the public good, and have given freely for all good purposes. They have made themselves rich by their intelligence, their integrity, their capacity, and their ability; and the people, at least of the State in which I live, have respect for men of that character.

There are some things in our country that we ought to break down. We have inherited all the benefit of invention. On all the railroads of our country freight is carried cheaper than in any other. But we have in modern times a new invention that is devilish in all its aims and ends, and that is the invention of trusts and combinations by which a few people get together forming an incorporation in some remote State, and throwing into a mass all the property in a particular line of industry under a single ownership or control; they control it so as to prevent any benefit to the people of the United States. A vast amount of watered stock is added to the value of the property involved; stocks and bonds are issued; and then men are supposed to be created millionaires.

Take the stocks of the sugar trust that we had here before us only a few days ago, where upon the basis of $9,000,000 they issued $75,000,000 of stock and $10,000,000 of bonds, and paid upon it, watered stock and all, from 6 to 12 per cent interest every year, every dollar of which was at the cost of the people of the United States.

If the Senators here who have charge of this bill will take as much pains in striking at the combinations and trusts which interfere not only with our foreign but with our domestic trade, they will do a duty to their country more important, indeed, than any they have attempted in the bill. I am sorry to say that instead of that they have gone, I think, to the other extreme.

It may be said truly that in the McKinley act some of the combinations were greatly favored. At that time these combinations were not fully understood; they were not well formed. If the Senators on the other side had only put sugar upon the dutiable list without any discrimination for or against the trust at a particular rate they would have had all the revenue that is required for the Government without invading the domain of State sovereignty with the income tax. There would have been no trouble at all. A dozen amendments made in the McKinley act would have changed everything that was complained of in that act without all this long delay, this codification of a new law, this assessment of an income tax, a war tax justified by the necessity of a former time, but not justified now by any circumstances whatever.

Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say on this feature of the bill. There are some features of the bill that may be changed by amendment, but I do not know whether that will be done or not.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge to one or two subjects-matter. I find here in the bill as it originally came to us a tax on all individual incomes of over $4,000; and if the income was again taxed in the form of corporate property, no deduction was to be made from it. But the Senate committee have inserted the following provision:

Provided, also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as interest or dividends upon the bonds or stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 2 per cent has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

If this means that the individual person who is called upon to pay an income tax has a right to deduct from his rendering all the capital invested in corporations, it will very greatly reduce the amount that can be collected from the tax. Capitalists as a rule do not invest very large sums in corporations, generally managing their own affairs in their own way. The great body of the owners of the corporations are comparatively poor men. You may say in regard to the national banking system, as shown by their statistics, that more than three-fourths of all the stock held by national banks is owned by persons holding stock to a less amount than $3,000. The great fortunes of the country are not involved in these corporations. Therefore when you extend the income tax to the corporations you extend it mainly to the income of the poor and to the income of the thrifty poor.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will allow me, unless persons have $4,000 or $3,000 income, it is no benefit to them to deduct from the income anything that they have received upon stock while the corporation has paid it. It makes persons who have less than $3,000 income invested in corporations pay without any deduction.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what I intended to say. The result of the tax levied upon corporations, and not upon individuals, is that if levied upon individuals the deduction may be made, but if levied upon corporations there is no deduction whatever, and all the tax on the profit made by the corporations is deducted from their stockholders.

Who are they? Are they wealthy men who are fortunate in having a large income? Not at all. The most of our corporations, State and national, are composed of small stockholders; the only exceptions are such organizations as the sugar trust, the gas trust, and the Pacific corporations, where three or four men hold the entire stock of the companies. As a rule, however, in our railroads, in our manufactories, and in the various corporations connected with the active business life of the people, most of the stock is owned by small stockholders, and yet we propose to levy upon these small stockholders the great mass of the income tax imposed by this bill.

I have no hesitation in saying that the amount levied upon corporations will be far more than that which will be levied upon individuals under the operations of the bill. Therefore the greater part of the income tax thus levied will be upon the very best people of our country, the men who have been poor but who are trying to improve their condition, men who, whenever they can save a little money, put it into one of these organizations, many of which are organized for the benefit of people of that class; or they put their savings into bank stock or something of that kind, in the hope that they are laying by a nest-egg which will make them rich.

This is the condition. How to change it is difficult to tell, and I do not exactly know, but if you reduce the limit to the individual taxpayer to $1,000, then this discrimination will not be so great; so that a person having a total income of a thousand dollars from any source whatever, as an attorney, as a physician, or as a mechanic, or a laboring man, would have the benefit of this reduction. If the income tax is only applied to large property-holders, none of these people will pay the full income tax.

The people are to be taxed on all their incomes, without any reservation whatever, and there will be no exemption for the mass of the people who are interested in these corporations. They will have no benefit of a limit of $1,000 or any other sum, and will have to pay upon the whole income the tax levied by this bill. I am not prepared to say how this can be changed; but I think it is an important feature of the bill.

I do not say that an income tax is not a proper and desirable tax to be levied, but only that it is not a proper and desirable tax to be levied now by the United States. It should be left to the States as a source of revenue, to be used by them whenever they choose to do so.

I do not put my opposition to the income tax, therefore, upon any ground such as has been named by other Senators as being an unjust tax under all circumstances. I think, under other circumstances, as a State tax, it would be just and proper.

There is another thing in this bill which I do not think is right. It is proposed by it in express terms to levy a succession tax. A man will be required to pay a tax on all property he gets by way of inheritance, although it may be by inheritance from the father to the son or from the husband to the wife. If property is acquired by legacy or by descent, those receiving it in any year are bound to return the whole value of that legacy for the purpose of taxation. That is not the form of a legacy tax usually imposed, and it ought not to be imposed in this form at any time; but certainly we ought to leave to the States the duty of regulating the disposition of property after the death of a testator. We ought to leave all these matters to the States, and not take them under the control of the General Government.

In most of the States, as in Ohio, there is a tax somewhat similar to this; but if you provide a double tax upon the inheritance of property proceeding from the father to the son, or from the husband to the wife, you would then subject the property which came to them as the result of the labors and the savings of a lifetime of the husband or the father to double-loaded taxes, by the United States and by the State. It seems to me that provision ought to be entirely stricken out. There is no necessity for that form of tax.

There are many other features and items of the income-tax provision of this bill which I think are wrong, but the proper time to discuss them, I suppose, will be when they regularly come up for action; and therefore I shall not debate the subject longer now.

I believe, however, it is unwise to insert the income-tax clauses in this bill, not because I am opposed to an income tax, but because it is not necessary to the National Government to levy such a tax now. I hope and trust it may be stricken out—I can hardly say "I trust," because, from the vote which has been taken, I assume, as a matter of course, in spite of all the observations which have been made or anything which can be said about it, it is the sense and determination of the Senate to risk this experiment.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. President, in obedience to the commands of a great State, at whose industries the pending tariff bill aims a deadly blow, and emboldened by the example of other Senators who have addressed this body, and whose terms of service here have been but little longer than my own; with the cry of distress coming from every quarter, I feel that I should be guilty of neglect of duty did I not enter the protest of Michigan against this bill, which means only destruction to those interests which have made it great and powerful. There is no State in the Union, Mr. President, more vitally, more seriously affected by the proposed bill than the one which I have the honor in part to represent here, and there is no part of our country, sir, which is a more shining example of the beneficent influences of a protective tariff.

Admitted into the Union in 1837, as the twenty-third State in population, with 176,000 people, it now ranks as ninth, with over two million people, who were as happy, as prosperous, as well employed as any the globe contained until the threat of free trade paralyzed their industries and left a record of want and suffering unknown before to the generation in which we live. Our interests are great, and in many instances greater than those of any other State affected, for Michigan stands first, according to the census of 1890, in the production of lumber, iron ore, charcoal iron, salt, furniture, peppermint oil; second in copper, and third in value of sheep and wool.

The income-tax provisions of this bill are full of interest to my constituents, and in common with other Senators, I have presented many petitions, largely signed, from members of fraternal orders and from policy holders in mutual life insurance companies, asking that they be exempted from its provisions. It is gratifying to be assured that the Finance Committee has been impressed by the flood of opposition, and has agreed to permit an amendment exempting fraternal orders, but there is no reason why policy holders in mutual life insurance companies should not also be freed from the operations of this measure. An income tax which grasps at a portion of that fund, which, in too many instances, is all that is left to the family for support in the severest trial which comes to humanity, should have no place in our system.

Such a plan of taxation as is proposed by this bill will increase the cost of insurance in many ways, and will meet with universal opposition, as it ought to. It confiscates not only the widow's mite, but greedily reaches for a portion of the earnings of savings banks, thus diminishing the already small dividends which by skillful management they are enabled to pay. There is no one thing of which we boast more frequently than the number of small depositors in our savings banks, and the amount of their deposits. In my own State they have grown enormously, and they furnish the highest evidence of that prosperity which has come from protection, for by reason of the high wages paid our people are enabled to save their money. Taxation of this kind must result in their receiving less interest for their deposits.

In the United States, according to the last report of the Comptroller, in 1892-'93 the total number of depositors in these institutions was 4,830,599; the amount of deposits was $1,785,150,957, an average to each depositor of $369.95.

The income tax was a war measure, necessitated by the exigencies of that great struggle, in order to meet the enormous drain upon the revenues of the Government. It was admitted to be simply a war measure, enacted against the protest of the Democratic party, and there is no excuse for its existence in a time of peace. It produced revenues which dwindled steadily. The table printed with my remarks will show this:

1863	$22,741,358.25	1869	$34,791,855.84
1864	20,294,731.74	1870	37,775,873.62
1865	32,050,017.44	1871	19,162,650.75
1866	72,982,159.08	1872	14,436,861.78
1867	66,014,429.34	1873	5,062,311.62
1868	41,455,598.36

To be sure there were some changes in the law, but these do not account in any sense for the remarkable decrease in the revenue. Probably there never was a more offensive tax than this inaugurated. It put a premium on perjury, and exercised the most demoralizing influence upon our national life. The system of espionage and the scrutiny of private books and papers which is contemplated is one which Americans will not bear. It is hard enough even now to enforce the provisions of our own State tax laws, and the written declarations of property which are expected to be furnished to the tax assessors are, in most cases, a dead letter.

It has been the Republican contention always, against the denial of our friends on the other side, that direct taxation would have to be instituted if their theories were ever carried into effect and custom-house taxation abolished. We have now reached that point, and this party which voted I believe almost solidly for the repeal of the war income tax, is now found occupying the other ground. Instead of requiring foreigners to contribute to the support of our Government, it pursues our own people and renounces its former principles by advocating class legislation. It is not an American tax, but is copied from foreign statute books, and that too at a time when the best minds of those countries recognize the inequality and injustice of such a system.

It was a wise man, Mr. President, who said:

> Few political conditions can be more perilous than that of the long exile in opposition of a great political party. Extravagant and impracticable theories of politics are apt to be adopted by such parties—theories they could not maintain in power with credit to themselves or safety to the public.

It is very easy for a party in opposition, which gathers together all the dissatisfied elements, to attack and try to tear down when it has no responsibility of power. Such a party has been the Democratic party. In the last Presidential campaign its candidates in many sections of our country stood both upon the Populist and Democratic platform. It was willing to embrace any notion, and go to any length to obtain the power which it sought. But when once in power it finds that the habits and tendencies of its statesmen have been so long iconoclastic that it must still continue to attack and tear down, and it has proven utterly incapable of constructive statesmanship. It is one thing to destroy, but it is quite another to construct a great tariff bill, which has to do with the diversified industries of 65,000,000 of people. The Democratic party now realizes, as it has not realized before, how impossible it is to combine the conflicting elements of Populists and Democrats into a majority agreed on any one measure representing the party principles. And to-day we behold it supporting a bill which does not in any sense represent either the platform of the party, the teachings of its leaders, or the hopes or wishes of its rank and file. The chief and central feature of the pending bill, the income tax, on which it hopes to win popular support in the West and South, is not Democratic doctrine, but is a demand of the Populist allies as part of the Populist platform by which it is hoped to win their votes for this bill.

The statement that Michigan is more vitally affected than any other State is corroborated by the report of its industries. The census of 1890 shows that Michigan is first in lumber products, with $68,141,189—one-fifth of the total domestic product—an increase over 1880 of $15,691,261. It is the first in iron ore, producing $15,800,524—more than one-third of the total product of the country, and one-half its value. For 1892 it produced 7,267,874 tons—an increase over 1890 census of 1,411,609 tons.

It is second in the production of copper. In 1891 it produced 54,685 tons. The United States produced one-half the world's copper, and Michigan one-third of the output of the United States.

It is first in the production of charcoal iron, producing $3,982,278 worth in 1890, as shown by the census of that year.

It is first in the production of salt, the output of the State being nearly one-half that of the United States in amount and value—$2,302,579 in 1890—making 3,927,671 barrels.

It is first in the yield of wheat per acre—18½ bushels in 1891—in the front rank of wheat States, producing 27,900,148 bushels.

First in the value of farm crops generally per acre, leading Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and all the great Northwest. For the ten years ending 1890 Michigan not only led all of these States in yield per acre of wheat, but also in value of product per acre of wheat, corn, barley, buckwheat, and hay crops.

It is first in furniture—178 factories in 60 cities, with a capital of $9,855,000, the city of Grand Rapids alone having 45 factories, with an aggregate capital of $5,000,000, employing 5,000 hands. Detroit has 20 factories, with capital of $750,000.

It is first in peppermint oil, producing more than all the rest of the States combined, with a product for 1892 of 88,000 pounds, of the value of $176,000 at the still. In 1890 and 1891 the United States exported 45,321 pounds of peppermint oil, valued at $2.66 per pound, while Japan, the only other surplus producer, exported the same year 39,149 pounds, valued at 85 cents a pound.

It stands third in the value of sheep and wool, only Ohio and California leading her: Michigan, $8,552,679; California, $9,559,475; Ohio, $13,900,263. Michigan wool clip, 1891, 11,732,395 pounds; average per fleece, 6½ pounds. Total domestic product, census of 1890, 258,757,101 pounds.

It is first in the extent of coast line, Lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, St. Clair, and Erie forming over 2,000 miles of coast. It is first in lake commerce, and second in vessel tonnage of all kinds—the center of commerce in the Great Lakes. The tonnage of these lakes in 1891, 1,063,063; vessels, 2,945; value, $75,590,950. Total ton mileage on the lakes in 1890 was 25 per cent of the total United States railway ton mileage. The freight tonnage passing the "Soo" Canal in 1890 was 8,554,434, or 1,664,341 more than the Suez Canal. Through the Detroit River, 21,684,000 tons, about the same as London and Liverpool combined, or the entire Atlantic coast foreign trade tonnage.

Ex-United States Statistician Dodge says about one-quarter of our entire merchant marine is on the northern lakes, and the large steam tonnage of the Great Lakes (1,000 tons and upwards), exceeds the total similar tonnage of the rest of the country by 131,093 tons. Michigan leads in this commerce, and our vessel tonnage is surpassed only by New York, the great ocean carrier. Vessel tonnage for the year ending June 30, 1892: Michigan, 390,920; Massachusetts, 389,942; Pennsylvania, 353,057; Maine, 352,574; California, 316,872; Ohio, 315,849; Maryland, 143,536; New York, 1,339,937; total for the United States, 4,764,961. Since 1886 Michigan's tonnage has increased 164,529, and New York's 121,824 tons. (Statistics of the United States Bureau of Navigation.)

It is first in shipbuilding. Total tonnage built in 1890—northern lakes, 108,526. The whole seaboard, 169,091. Western rivers, 16,506 Grand total, 294,123. Of this 108,526 lake tonnage, Michigan yards at Bay City, Detroit, and Grand Haven, 45,733 tons; 65 vessels, including two 4,000 tons steel steamers for the ocean trade. The steam tonnage built on the Great Lakes in 1890 was 40 per cent greater than the entire seaboard. The lakes, 86,023 tons; the entire seaboard, 61,137 tons. (Statistician Dodge.)

was valued at $1,058,028 in first hands. The Michigan fish-freezing industry alone employed 4,000 hands.

It is not my purpose at this stage of the debate to make an extended speech upon the tariff, or even the schedule under consideration, although each of these great industries should be treated separately, for this debate, long and exhaustive, has been illuminated by learned and splendid presentations of protection from this side of the Chamber, showing great research, and which fully cover the subject. The question has been so much discussed before our people from the beginning of our Government, that it is difficult to say anything new about it. Neither can I be expected to participate in the close discussion of schedules with Senators of long experience who are acknowledged experts in such matters, but I do desire to emphasize the fact that the marvelous growth and prosperity which our country enjoys has come largely because of the tariff shield which has developed our industries, enabled us to pay high wages, and given us a contented and happy people in a land of liberty and law, until the success of the Democratic party brought the blight of the past year.

In this measure we are offered practically no protection. The men who have by skill and enterprise developed our great lumber industries until they outrank all the States are told that lumber must be free, which means that Canadian lands are to be enhanced in price, and the Canadian logs now taken across the lakes must hereafter be manufactured on Canadian soil. The great mills which employ hundreds of workmen at good wages must be moved across the lakes, and the Michigan mill hands must work for wages which are estimated at 35 per cent less than those paid in the States. All this must take place because certain Senators from the prairie States, under the delusion that lumber will be cheaper to their citizens, make free lumber, it is charged, one of the conditions of their support of this bill.

Our great salt industry was not a profitable one until it was allied to the lumber mills, and the refuse from the logs was used in its manufacture. It has been the slow growth of years, and is now to be stricken down by the Democratic party.

The theory of the free traders, that protection enhances the price to the consumer, and that he invariably pays the duty, has been shown to be false many times, but there is no illustration of it more apparent than in the history of the salt industry of my State. The average price per barrel each year since 1866 is shown by the following table:

Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.
1867	1.77	1881	.82½
1868	1.85	1882	.70
1869	1.58	1883	.81
1870	1.32	1884	.75½
1871	1.46	1885	.70
1872	1.46	1886	.66
1873	1.37	1887	.574
1874	1.19	1888	.585
1875	1.10	1889	.543
1876	1.05	1890	.547
1877	.85	1891	.55
1878	.85	1893	.53
1879	1.02

Competition has brought the price down steadily from $1.80 in 1866, based on a barrel of 280 pounds, with a 20-cent package included, to the price of to-day, showing the theory of the protectionists to be correct, that given a duty which will stimulate and perfect the industry, and the competition invariably reduces the price of the product to the consumer.

This is a remarkable illustration of the falsity of the Democratic war cry that the consumer pays the tax.

Inadequate protection to copper and iron means only the crippling of these splendid industries which have helped to make the northern part of our State known throughout the world; and which has given us prosperity, higher wages, and comfort for our working people.

I hold in my hand the advance sheets of Consular Reports from the Department of State, dated June 20, 1894 (only two days ago), which give a letter from Hon. Jacob T. Child, consul of the United States at Hankow, China, dated March 19, 1894, which is most significant. I would that this statement could reach the ears of every American workingman, and particularly those who are engaged in the iron industries, for it corroborates, as nothing else has done, the assertion that the attempt to break down the industries of America is done for the benefit of those across the sea, and that England is deeply interested in the destruction of the American tariff. This letter is a most portentous cloud on the horizon, and it tells the American laborer in terms that can not be misunderstood, that if the present bill is to become a law he must take his chances with English capital, backed by the cheap labor of China. The letter is as follows:

THE HANYAN ROLLING MILLS.

One of the marvels of this marvelous country is the vast rolling mills and arsenals now approaching completion in Hanyan, a city opposite Hankow, on the Han side, erected under the auspices of Chang-Taz-Tung, a viceroy of Hupeh and Hunan. The plant covers about 70 acres, with a railroad 1½ miles in length from the Yangtze River to the works, and thence to the Han River, with an incline from the top of the Yangtze bank to the water, where powerful machinery is located to draw the cars up a steep incline of about 200 feet to the level. The works were designed by an English engineer on a most gigantic scale, and in their fitting up nothing but the most modern and improved machinery has been imported, mainly from England.

The buildings are, unfortunately, located in a valley liable to overflow, and their foundations have been raised 15 feet, consisting of a bed of concrete made of brick, stone, and Portland cement, covered with a layer of earth, the whole of which was carried by baskets by coolies—the labor of thousands of men. The work was commenced in 1891, and is yet far from completion, as much of the machinery is still in boxes.

The buildings are of brick, with stone foundations, handsomely designed, and most elaborately and solidly constructed. The brick used in the construction of the work was made on the ground by machinery, the clay being moistened and ground, then passed through a press, forming a continuous slab which is automatically cut in pieces a yard in length. The piece is forced against the frame, interlaced with wires that severs it into ten perfect, hard-pressed bricks, which are then conveyed by hand to the furnaces and burned. All the fire brick for lining the furnaces, casing, etc., were also made in these yards.

There are four immense hot-air blast furnaces, two large steam hammer, and innumerable rollers, with all their appendages, for manufacturing railroad iron, which is the main object for the erection of the plant. Large quantities of Chinese iron are now in the yard, with some English iron for blending purposes, and coke is being imported from Wales to be used temporarily in the construction of rails, as soon as the machinery can be put in operation, as a test of what the foundry can do. The sheds, covered with corrugated roofing, cover an area of 20 acres. The smelters are of a most improved pattern, and a large furnace is nearly completed for the manufacture of Bessemer steel. The molding and pattern shops are as complete as they can be, and large elevators are placed in various buildings for hoisting materials. In fact, if ever finished, it will be one of the most complete rolling mills in the world, as expense seems to have been a secondary consideration in the erection of this immense establishment. It is estimated by experts in such matters to have cost so far not less than $3,500,000, and it will cost at least $1,000,000 more to complete it.

Once in operation, it is the intention of the viceroy to manufacture everything in the iron line—ordnance, rails, machinery, small arms, etc. The arsenals are about complete, and machinery will soon be set up for the manufacture of arms and munitions. A number of skilled workmen are now en route here for the purpose of instructing the native artisans and of arranging everything in working order.

The two buildings, covering an area of about 4 acres, are substantially constructed, and display great skill on the part of the architect and builder. They are fitted up with large engines and the most improved machinery, and everything that the ingenuity of the machinist can conceive to be necessary in such an establishment has been purchased in order to make it a success. The average Chinaman looks on these modern wonders with stolid countenance, and turns away with the idea that the viceroy must be hypnotized by the foreigner to put so much cash into an undertaking from which he can see no outcome, and this view is taken by some of the foreigners that have visited the works.

So far nothing but the best material has been used; nothing of a shoddy character has been allowed in its construction. The railroad is laid with heavy steel rails. The two traction locomotives are of the latest designs, and the iron cars are similar to those used in England for the transportation of coal and iron, and will be used for carrying coal, iron, and other material from the river to the works.

The mines from which the metals for the manufacture of rails is to be obtained are near Wang-Shih-King, about 76 miles below Hankow, 16 miles inland at Tayeh, connecting with the river by a well constructed railroad and dock at a landing 3 miles below Wang-Shih-King. The ore is reported to be of good quality and inexhaustible.

Coal, both hard and soft, is mined in this neighborhood in the crudest manner, no effort being made to drain the mines of water; and once flooded, they are abandoned and new ones opened. This coal has been pronounced by experts as not suitable for smelting, containing too much sulphur, but it is thought that a good quality can be obtained hereabouts from mines now undeveloped. Mines of iron and coal are numerous in this section and can be made to furnish all the material needed, if mined systematically, and owing to the cheap labor obtainable they can do work economically.

Should the means of the viceroy hold out and the plant be successfully operated, it will prove a revelation to the natives of this portion of China, and do much to disabuse their minds of their own infallibility, and convince them of the benefits to be derived from the genius and skill of the foreigner. It will stand Chang-Taz-Tung as a public benefactor and one of the most progressive mandarins of the Imperial Empire.

The rails to be manufactured here will be used to construct a road to start some distance above Hankow, so as to get beyond the marshy ground of the lake country and the annual overflow, to connect with roads projected for the interior. It is asserted that work will commence on the contemplated road as soon as it is definitely settled that the Hanyan mill can supply the rails.

Taken all in all, it is the most progressive movement so far made in China for the purpose of manufacturing arms, steel rails, and machinery, as the plant is a perfect one and of a magnitude sufficient to require several hours to inspect it even hastily.

JACOB T. CHILD, Consul.

The election of 1890 was no sooner declared in favor of the Democratic party than the work was begun of erecting this immense plant, costing $4,500,000, in China for the purpose of manufacturing iron, steel rails, or machinery, and I would ask the American laborer if the cheap labor of China is to produce arms and steel rails and machinery as cheaply as they can be produced by a servile and degraded laborer, what can he expect with a largely reduced protection for him in this bill? The bars are to be taken down, and this is a significant illustration of what may be expected in case this alleged revenue tariff bill of the Democratic party shall succeed.

In short, Mr. President, as I have previously stated, all of our products, both of the field and of the mine, will suffer incalculable loss if this iniquitous measure shall find its way to our statute books and be enacted into law. It is not my purpose at this late stage of the discussion to enter on an argument as to the merits of protection or the policy of a revenue tariff, which I believe is now the alleged doctrine of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber. But, sir, the great fact remains, which can not be denied, which is enforced by experience, which is illustrated in a thousand ways just now, that the chief glory of the system we advocate is in furnishing better wages to the laboring man and more of the comforts of life and more opportunities for development in every way than can be obtained elsewhere in all the world.

This bill absolutely abandons now and for all time the claim that protection is unconstitutional. After the spectacle which has been witnessed in this contest that issue ought not to be raised again. And this statement should be forever folded away as one of the exhibits in the unique collection of the mistakes of the Democratic party.

The junior Senator from Georgia in his late speech in this Chamber said:

> The Democratic party is bound to make good its pledges. To fail in the policy of tariff reform would be to betray the interests of the people who placed it in power. To fail in this great dominating issue, upon which the last Presidential campaign was fought and won, would be to confess the inability of the party to administer the Government.
> The Democratic party will be false to its high mission and neglectful of its great opportunity if, in addition to tariff reform, it fails to carry out by effective legislation its solemn pledges of financial relief as embodied in the demand for free silver coinage and the recommendation for the repeal of the 10 per cent tax on State bank circulation.

Tariff reform is a very elastic term as illustrated in this bill, and whether he means the tariff reform of the sincere though mistaken ideas of the junior Senator from Texas, or those of the junior Senator from Ohio, does not appear. And yet there is a yawning gulf between them which even the skillful manipulations of the senior Senator from Maryland has not been able to bridge.

The vote of the House of Representatives of 172 to 102, 79 members not voting, by which it refused to repeal the 10 per cent tax on State bank circulation a few days ago, shows also that the party is still, in the words of the distinguished gentleman, "False to its high mission and neglectful of its great opportunities."

There is no class of people who will suffer more by the passage of this bill than the farmers, and nowhere will it bear more heavily than in Michigan. With a coast line of over 800 miles on Lakes Superior and Huron, the competition with Canada in hay, vegetables, eggs, apples, and farm products generally, is sharp and severe.

This bill offers no adequate protection to our farmers in any of these articles, and we can only believe that this attack on the agricultural interests of the country has been made in favor of the Canadian farmers and not of our own.

The American Farmer of January 11, 1894, in quoting from the Philadelphia Times, a Democratic paper, has the following:

> "There is no more fertile region than the Canadian provinces. They produce wheat, rye, barley, fowls, eggs, butter, apples, horses, and cattle in great abundance, and of superior quality. By placing these farm products upon the free list, the Committee on Ways and Means will give to barren New England those products which have heretofore been largely brought from New York, Pennsylvania, and the prairie States of the Mississippi Valley. The Canadians can produce them all and sell them cheaper than the product of our own country."
> To such a feast the Committee on Finance invite the already depressed agricultural industry.

With a large overproduction at home, the American farmer is not only offered sharp competition with a foreign government, which can undersell him because of cheap land and cheap labor, and with the fences of a sufficient protection broken down the prospect is indeed disheartening.

For more than fifty years our national policy has been to put a tariff upon the importation of woolen goods. This has built up great industries at home, employing thousands of people, with millions of dollars of capital invested. The testimony before the House Committee on Ways and Means in the Fifty-third Congress was that "American manufacturers are able to make every kind of grade of woolen goods at least just as good as they are made in Europe."

Decreased duties and the abrogation of the McKinley rate strikes a serious blow at a great industry, which, under the act of 1890, was developing at marvelous speed. But the feature of this bill which deserves the most severe condemnation is the treatment of the American farmer as a woolgrower. It is the determination of the other side to force free wool, and while now the American woolgrower has to compete directly with Australasia, the Argentine Republic, South Africa, and Uruguay, where they are able to increase their sheep almost without limit, to this colossal industry no protection whatever is offered.

The number of sheep in the world in 1892 outside of the United States is estimated by a well-known authority, North's Wool Book, at 539,787,332, and the product of the wool outside of the United States in 1891 at 2,149,673,600 pounds. The sheep of the United States in 1892 were only 44,038,365, and our production of wool in 1891 only 307,100,000 pounds. Australasia with 114,628,301 sheep in 1891 and in 1893 125,000,000, the Argentine Republic with 103,413,817 in 1887, and South Africa with immense flocks, could supply all the wool required at prices even lower than they are now. If this bill should become a law, this means the practical destruction of this great American industry.

The minimum value on the Michigan farm before March, 1893, when the McKinley law was in full force, of Michigan fine washed wool, was 23 cents a pound. In June, 1894, with a threat of free wool impending, it was sold for 9½ cents, and if the fear of free wool brings such an enormous reduction, what will the act itself do? My colleague has pointed out in detail, and has cited in letters from our citizens, the feeling in my State and the great and present ruin which has come upon this industry.

I will content myself with quoting from one letter from among those received on this subject. Judge F. I. Russell, of Hart, Mich., who is largely interested in sheep-raising, writes:

> With unwashed wool selling at 8 and 10 cents, it is out of the question for the industry to survive. It is now worth 8 cents, but they do not care to purchase even at that. I would give a man a commission of 10 per cent to sell my entire flock at one-half of what I could have sold them for immediately before Cleveland's election. If this duty is removed, we must quit raising sheep in Michigan; there is no mistake about that.

There is no justice in giving protection to the manufacturer and the miner and denying it to the farmer, and this bill which grants a 40 per cent duty on sugar and 80 per cent on rice for the benefit of the planters of Louisiana offers only ruin to the people of Michigan. The woolgrowing interest of our country, Mr. President, should be protected above all others, because it represents one of the very greatest of our industries in the amount of capital invested, the amount of wages paid to labor, and in the amount of its production, and the demand for pasturage, hay, corn, oats, etc.

We witness to-day a situation almost phenomenal in American politics. The Wilson bill, when it passed the House of Representatives, was hailed with loud acclaim by the Democratic party as a realization at last of their fondest hopes for what they called tariff reform. The author of that bill was congratulated and cheered, and some of his devoted adherents went to the length of carrying him on their shoulders as an evidence of their joy. It has run its weary course in this Chamber; and if it goes back at all to the other end of the Capitol, will go so disfigured as to be unrecognizable even by its fond parent. It is neither one thing nor the other.

A large portion of the Democratic press of the country has denounced and repudiated it. Even such a blind adherent of Mr. Cleveland as Harper's Weekly says "the Democratic party has had its chance and failed." It calls the Administration a failure; and Democratic meetings of tariff reformers in New York and Massachusetts, in their bitterness of soul, have expressed themselves as willing that the McKinley law, which to them has been the abomination of all abominations, should remain on the statute books rather than this monstrosity should become a law. It is covered with the stain of a great scandal, by which the sugar trust gets a concession of some $30,000,000; it has brought a lasting disrepute on the Senate itself, and is discredited and denounced in the house of its friends. It is a series of bargains and deals unequaled in American politics, and it can not but receive the just condemnation of the people of the country if they should ever pass judgment upon it.

The speech of my friend, the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia, was an earnest effort to refute the charge that this bill is not sectional, but he was surrounded with unfortunate concessions which can not be explained on any other theory. The spectacle of a duty of 80 per cent on the rice of Louisiana and 40 per cent on sugar, while the Northern farmer in competition with Canada is not given adequate protection to his eggs, hay, and vegetables, and is offered free wool, is one which taxes the best energies of his mind to explain. It is difficult to harmonize the action of the Finance Committee on cotton ties and cotton machinery with placing barbed wire on the free list—barbed wire, which employs 20,000 men in Illinois, I am told, while the billets from which it is made are dutiable for the benefit of foreign labor.

I listened to the glowing picture he presented of the undeveloped resources of his State; I also heard the junior Senator from Louisiana describing the virgin pine forests in Louisiana. Senators have grown eloquent picturing the coal and iron and marble now awaiting the capital and skill and enterprise necessary to develop those marvelous resources. Let me say to these Senators, if they would listen to the voices from the New South; if they would point to the smoke signals which have waved in the sky from Atlanta and Birmingham and Sheffield; if they would come out of the mists and fogs of the past and denounce the mumbling over dead issues, and get away from the doctrine of free trade, which was the corner stone of that Confederate constitution which was shot to death by the invincible armies of the Union, and perished at Appomattox, their resources will not remain undeveloped. Let them listen to the voice of the New South which is surely coming with the triumph of protection, already heralded by the ground swell of popular approval at every opportunity the people have had to apologize for the great mistake of 1892.

The doctrine this side of the Chamber advocates is as broad as our country. It will do for Alabama, the Virginias, Louisiana, and Georgia what it has already done for Ohio and Michigan.

Let them denounce and disclaim the Gen. Rossers and Rev. Caves, who are still falsifying history and fanning the almost extinct embers of past bitterness, and welcome the Northern immigrant into great States which only require the magic touch of capital and labor to become hives of industry, surrounded by a people enjoying the comforts and luxuries of life inseparable from the high wages the protected American workman has heretofore received.

The South had a gifted son who passed away in "youth's bright morning," lamented by the entire nation, whose grave is still covered with the immortelles of our affectionate admiration. In his brief life he had accomplished great things for his country, and was as eloquent in speech as he was great-souled and tender-hearted. A true lover of his country, he saw the future and the needs of the South with unclouded vision. He believed in protection and sought to build up his section. He turned his back on the bitterness and mistakes of the sad past, and with beautiful word-pictures, painted a future of industrial development for the States of the South which is an inspiration to better things. He had an all-embracing patriotism, which reached out the hand of friendship to the North and has done much to bring us all together. Mr. President, the national calamity of the untimely death of Henry W. Grady is universally recognized. In a speech at the Texas State Fair at Dallas, seven years ago, among other things he said:

Texas produces a million and a half bales of cotton, which yield her $60,000,000. That cotton, woven into common goods, would add $75,000,000 to Texas's income from this crop, and employ 220,000 operatives, who would spend within her borders more than $30,000,000 in wages. Massachusetts manufactures 575,000 bales of cotton, for which she pays $31,000,000, and sells for $72,000,000, adding a value nearly equal to Texas's gross revenue from cotton, and yet Texas has a clean advantage for manufacturing this cotton of 1 cent per pound over Massachusetts. The little village of Grand Rapids began manufacturing furniture simply because it was set in a timber district. It is now a great city, and sells $10,000,000 worth of furniture every year, in making which a population of 40,000 people is supported.

The best pine districts of the world are in Eastern Texas. With less competition and wider markets than Grand Rapids has, will she ship her forests at prices that barely support the wood-chopper and sawyer, to be returned in the making of which great cities are built or maintained? When her farmers and herdsmen draw from her cities $126,000,000 as the price of their annual produce, shall this enormous wealth be scattered through distant shops and factories, leaving in the hands of Texas no more than the sustenance, support, and the narrow brokerage between buyer and seller? As one-crop farming can not support the country, neither can a resource of commercial exchange support a city. Texas wants immigrants; she needs them; for if every human being in Texas were placed at equidistant points through the State, no Texan could hear the sound of a human voice in your broad areas.

So how can you best attract immigration? By furnishing work for the artisan and mechanic if you meet the demand of your population for cheaper and essential manufactured articles. One-half million workers would be needed for this, and with their families would double the population of your State. In these mechanics and their dependents farmers would find a market for not only their staple crops, but for the truck that they now despise to raise or sell, but is at least the cream of the farm.

The most prosperous section of this world is that known as the Middle States of this Republic. With agriculture and manufacturers in the balance, and their shops and factories set amid rich and ample acres, the result is such deep and diffuse prosperity as no other section can show. Suppose those States had a monopoly of cotton and coal so disposed as to command the world's markets and the treasury of the world's timber, I suppose the mind is staggered in contemplating the majesty of the wealth and power they would attain.

Another cause that has prospered New England and the Middle States, while the South languished, is the system of tariff taxes levied on the unmixed agriculture of those States for the protection of industries to our neighbors to the north, a system on which the Hon. ROGER Q. MILLS—that lion of the Tribe of Judah—has at last laid his mighty paw, and under the indignant touch of which it trembles to its center. That system is to be revised and its duties reduced, as we all agree it should be, though I should say in perfect frankness I do not agree with Mr. MILLS in it.

My own home city, to which he refers, has more than doubled in population since he made this statement. Our industrial system has again felt the heavy hand of the junior Senator from Texas, and indeed "trembles to its center;" but if this clear voice from Grady's grave could be heard again; if the smokeless furnaces of Birmingham and Sheffield, in Alabama, could influence and direct this bill, is there any question as to what message would be wafted to us?

Since I have sat in this Chamber I have heard the leaders of Democracy, with the record and the speeches of long years in the interest of free trade behind them, arise in their places one by one and announce their dissatisfaction with this bill. The junior Senator from Texas, Mr. MILLS, on April 24, 1894, said:

The bill we are now considering does not meet my entire approval. I doubt if in all its provisions it meets the approval of any Senator on this side of the Chamber; but as it is it shall have my cordial support.

They have admitted that it is not what they want; it is not what they approve. Instead of being brave men, they have practically admitted that they were forced to accept it at the dictation of so-called Democrats who have made them do their bidding. The senior Senator from Maryland has exultingly announced that the Wilson bill, embodying as it does the ideas of Democracy for free raw materials, could not pass this body, and as I have heard these utterances, Mr. President, I have recalled the early days of the Republic, when statesmen were consistent and did not advocate measures which they did not believe in, but stood fast to their principles and sought for the approval which comes from the consciousness of duty well performed.

I recalled, and I refer the Senators on the other side to the example of one who was as great as he was patriotic, and who believed in the principle of protection and commercial independence. Compare for one moment the utterances of these latter-day statesmen with those of George Washington at the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, when he is reported to have said: "If to please the people we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair; the event is in the hand of God."

We on this side of the Chamber, Mr. President, will confidently raise such a standard and appeal again to the great tribunal which stands ready and anxiously waiting to give an enlightened verdict. It is a banner which has led the American people in the past to material triumphs, which have blest our toiling millions, and won the admiration of the world. It marks the highest development in the progress of civilization, and carries hope and joy to the poorest and humblest citizen. It will still point the way to conquests yet unknown, and the light of peace and plenty will again shine upon the happy and contented homes of a free and prosperous people, where the laborer shall receive a just reward for toil, and the Republic will move grandly and steadily and serenely forward to that great future which, under a wise policy, awaits the American name.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in the strong and eloquent speech to which we have just listened from the junior Senator from the State of Michigan [Mr. PATTON], one thing in particular impressed me, and that was the recital concerning the great industrial plant for the manufacture of iron and steel which is now being constructed in China. In connection with that matter, I have risen to ask the courtesy of the Senate for a moment to put into the RECORD a very remarkable communication, which I cut from a recent number of the New York Sun, from the pen of one of their trusted correspondents, Mr. C. Wood Davis, which gives a very elaborate and interesting account of the industrial progress of Japan, which Mr. Davis aptly calls "the new member of the industrial commonwealth."

It is shown that in the manufacture of woolen goods, cotton goods, friction matches, soap, rope, machinery, clocks and watches, umbrellas, glass, brick, fireproof safes, leather, cement, electrical supplies, boots and shoes, hats and foreign styles of clothing, saddlery, coaches, paints, upholstery, passenger and freight cars, commercial fertilizers, and many other things, Japan is making most marvelous progress at the present time.

This correspondent, in the closing paragraph, calls the attention of the United States to the fact of this great industrial movement in Japan in these significant words:

The Western world must face the competition of this new member of the industrial commonwealth, soon to be fully armed with the best of modern appliances and processes, that is favored by the lowest of all wage scales, that has an abundance of most efficient labor, and that is not handicapped by excessive taxation.

Mr. President, this communication is one of great interest, to which I call the attention of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, showing as it does that in the industrial race of the present day we are seriously confronted by Japan, and that if we are to sustain our present industrial supremacy we must be wise in the matter of economic legislation in this country. Any law that will admit to our markets, without adequate tariff duties, the products of Japan and China, where labor is probably cheaper than in any other part of the world, will inevitably destroy the manufacturing industries and degrade the labor of this country.

I do not wish to detain the Senate a moment longer, but I will ask consent that the communication be printed in the RECORD without further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLANCHARD in the chair).

The request of the Senator from New Hampshire will be granted in the absence of objection.

The communication is as follows:

JAPAN—THE NEW MEMBER OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMONWEALTH.

When, after centuries of exclusion, the doors of Japan were opened to the Western nations, it was believed that an outlet had been found for immense quantities of European and American commodities, no thought being entertained that the Western peoples were but taking an apprentice to train and instruct in modern industrial processes, or that this apprentice would soon supply all the requirements of the newly opened market and compete sharply, with every advantage except an abundance of capital, for the possession of all the markets of the Eastern world, and become a menace to the possession of even the home markets of the older industrial nations.

Prior to the revolution of 1868 Japan was a nation of priests, feudal nobles, armed retainers, cultivating peasants that were but serfs of the nobles, and a great body of artist artisans, the social system being one of inexorable caste.

The revolution changed all this most completely and made a nation of merchants, peasant cultivators with a secure and favorable land tenure, and an active and skilled body of artisans who were no less artistic than under the old régime. The world has never witnessed more rapid and radical social and political changes than occurred in Japan during the last half of the seventh decade. No more radical industrial changes ever occurred than those now progressing in the Empire of the Rising Sun.

Prior to 1876, when the Mikado established a woolen mill at Tokio for the manufacture of cloth wherewith to cloth the army, Japan had little practical knowledge of modern industrial appliances and processes, as there existed but one establishmet in the Empire where such processes were applied to the production of textiles or other wares. At that time foreign machine-made goods were rapidly driving the domestic hand-made textiles and other wares out of the home market. Although the stupendous industrial change wrought since 1880 will not restore the supremacy of the hand loom and other primitive industries of the nation, but rather aid in their extinction, it has practically restored Japanese control of the home market for textiles and other manufactures, and is not unlikely to prove a potent factor in excluding American and European wares from other Eastern markets.

The first cotton spinning mill was erected at Kagoshima in 1865, and for fifteen years it was the only attempt made to introduce modern methods in textile industries other than the Government woolen mill at Tokio. In 1880 three other spinning mills were built and eleven more followed before 1886. Before 1890 twenty-three others were added, and since 1890 the increase of productive power has been very great; not so much from the multiplication of establishments as from the greater capacity of such as have been built.

The major part of the mills built prior to 1890 were of small capacity, and the cost of operation relatively great. This condition, combined with the inexperience of owner and operative, rendered the experiment unprofitable; so much so that British representatives were felicitating their countrymen upon the inability of the Japanese to conduct industrial corporations, the probability that the experiment would end in utter failure, and that Great Britain would long continue to control the textile trade of Japan. The Japan capitalist, however, seems to have soon penetrated the mysteries of corporate management, and, profiting by observation, has built larger mills, while the operative has learned the art of manipulating the machinery. That is, experience has added so much to the efficiency of managers and operatives as to result in complete success, if success can be measured by returns from investments. During the last three years shares of six of the cotton spinning corporations have been dealt in on the Osaka Exchange, the average value of the $100 shares having been $55.28, 15th of December, 1890, and $137.76, 15th of July, 1892.

This advance of 149 per cent in nineteen months followed the payment of dividends, those of December, 1891, ranging from $8 to $20 per share, or an average of $14.33. Dividends were not, however, confined to the six corporations named; indeed, those were much below the average of $17.63 a share paid at the same time by the twenty-one companies whose reports are at hand. The earnings per spindle in the twenty-one mills was something phenomenal, having averaged 84.27 cents in 1891. Aside from a wage scale of 16.2 cents a day for male operatives and one of 8 cents a day for females, this extraordinary spindle power to earn was largely due, as was the output per spindle, to the fact that under Japanese management a given capital and a given plant are twice as effective in production as among the Western nations, as the mills, aided by the electric light, run night and day in shifts of eleven hours. The operatives alternate weekly from day to night. In this way the sagacious Jap makes his capital do twice the duty of that of his Occidental competitor.

The impulse which the cotton industry has received of late is best shown by the imports of raw cotton in recent years. In 1886 the raw cotton imported aggregated 4,400,000 pounds; in 1887 it was 7,400,000 pounds, rising to 104,900,000 pounds in 1892, the imports of the latter year being fourteen times those of six years earlier. Marvelous as was this increase, by far the greater part of it was obtained in the last two years, as the imports of 1890 were less than a third of those of 1892.

Not only have the Japanese mills succeeded in securing control of the home markets for the lower counts of yarn used in household weaving, but in 1892 they began the exportation of yarn to China. As the cost of production in Japan is authoritatively stated to be 18 per cent less than in the Indian mills, it is not impossible that the yarns of Japan will drive both those of Bombay and Manchester from the East Asian markets at an early day. When the Japanese shall take to weaving as well as spinning cotton by machinery, there seems little to prevent their taking possession of a large part of the textile trade of the Eastern world, as they have exhibited a special facility of adapting their wares to the requirements of any given market. This has been exemplified in the methods employed to drive the European match out of the Chinese market and the manner in which they have secured the umbrella trade of the East.

Only recently have any attempts been made to weave cotton by machinery, but two such mills are now in operation, as are two silk-weaving mills of small capacity, and there is reason to believe that the progress will be quite as rapid as that obtaining in the spinning industry.

The manufacture of friction matches by European machinery is the oldest and most successful application of modern processes, and affords ample evidence of the adaptability of the Japanese to new modes of operation. So great has been their success in the match manufacture that the importation of European matches has wholly ceased; they have monopolized the markets of China, and make shipments to Russia, Korea, and San Francisco.

Soap factories are supplying most of the home demand, and large quantities of soap are exported.

Rope is made so successfully by modern machinery that the domestic demand is met, and shipments are made to the Asiatic continent and California.

Until 1888 the imports of machinery increased yearly, but since that time they have constantly declined, and are now confined largely to industrial equipments, the ordinary forms of machinery being of home make. So remarkable has been the progress in this direction that recently shipments of ordnance have been made to Portugal.

Breweries have been established, the importation of beer nearly extinguished, and the Japanese beverage is largely exported.

Clocks and watches were formerly imported; later the parts were imported and put together by Japanese workmen. While this still continues, the manufacture of timepieces outright has been commenced under the supervision of Japs who have learned the business in Switzerland, and so successful the venture that since the new year Japanese agents have been in the West buying the most approved watchmaking machinery, with the avowed purpose of engaging in the manufacture of watches for the Western markets. The deftness, intelligence, industry, and adaptability of Japanese metal-workers assure a mechanical success, and combined with an exceedingly low wage scale will render them formidable competitors whenever the output of timekeepers shall be in excess of home requirements

A few years since Europe shipped great numbers of umbrellas to Japan. Now the Japanese have taken complete possession of the home market, and in 1892 exported more than 1,000,000 umbrellas to China, Korea, and Asiatic Russia.

The glass factories of Japan are turning out great quantities of cheap ware that is displacing the European product both at home and abroad, markets being found in China, Korea, Vladivostock, and San Francisco.

Brick was formerly imported, as was coal. In recent years brick have been exported to England and coal to the Western coast of America.

In addition to the articles named Japanese manufacturers now nearly or quite meet the demand for fireproof safes, leather, cement, electric supplies, boots and shoes, hats and foreign styles of clothing, so dear to the heart of the Europeanized Jap, saddlery, coaches, paints, upholstery, passenger and freight cars, commercial fertilizers, and a vast array of small wares that were formerly imported. Progress is shown in the manufacture, use, and exportation of cigarettes.

During the last five years exports of the hand-woven silks of Japan have increased 375 per cent; those of paper, much of it made by the best American and European machinery, some 77 per cent; matches, 170 per cent; glassware, 600 per cent; leather, 700 per cent; boots and shoes 127 per cent, and sulphuric acid, 64 per cent.

The substitution of machine-made wares of domestic manufacture for those formerly imported, and the exportation of the surplus of machine-made goods have resulted in turning the balance of trade in Japan's favor, and the foreign debt of the nation being less than $5,000,000, the drain of specie has wholly ceased, leaving the Japanese in excellent condition to contest the markets of the far East with America, Europe, and India.

So progressive is this old-young nation, and so much inclined to adopt any obvious improvement, that its intention is to use the metric system of weights and measures.

The Western world must face the competition of this new member of the industrial commonwealth, soon to be fully armed with the best of modern appliances and processes, that is favored by the lowest of all wage scales, that has an abundance of most efficient labor, and that is not handicapped by excessive taxation.

C. WOOD DAVIS.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the clear and forcible presentation by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON] of the danger to the iron industry of his State and the United States from the great works which are being constructed in China under the supervision and patronage of that Government reminds me of a story which came to me lately in reference to a remark made by the viceroy of China, Li Hung Chang, to Gen. Grant on the occasion of the latter's tour around the world.

Gen. Grant was reported to have said to Li Hung Chang, "Why is it that your people do not seem to adapt themselves to modern inventions and modern machinery? Why do they not make more progress in those directions?" The viceroy significantly said, "The people of China are making progress in these directions fast enough for the welfare of the United States." That remark is illustrated by recent events. It has been well shown, to a limited extent in this debate, that the labor of this country is not alone in danger from the underpaid labor of Europe, but that in the future our greatest danger may be from the cheap labor of India, China, and Japan.

The revelations which are being daily made to us from those quarters of the globe should remind us that in a very short time instead of talking about 30, 40, and 50 per cent duties as sufficient to allow the industries of this country to survive, it will be necessary, if we are to protect our labor against the pauper hoards of Asia, to have duties of 100, 200 and 300 per cent, or our industries, maintained by highly paid American labor, will receive a fatal blow.

Mr. HALE. I wish to withdraw the amendment which I offered to paragraph 481 of the bill, on page 100.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I desire to submit only a few observations on the income tax proposed in the pending bill. My objections to it are twofold. First, that it is unnecessary for the purpose of raising sufficient revenue, and is resorted to as a means of breaking down the system of protective custom duties; and, secondly, that its provisions are extremely faulty, inequitable, unjust, and, by their complication, difficult of execution.

It is unnecessary. That has been shown by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and even, when fully considered, by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The bill as it stands to-day will raise all the revenue which the Government needs without the income tax. Some Senator whose name I can not now recall—I think it was the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]—in answering this admitted that it would; but said we should have bonds to pay by and by, and therefore it was proper enough to raise a surplus.

I take it for granted, then, that this is an unnecessary tax. It is not even an emergency tax, as it was said to be by some Senator, I think by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If there is any emergency which requires the imposition of this tax, it is a party emergency which makes it necessary for the Democratic party to conciliate its assistants, the Populists. But so far as the Government is concerned, so far as the revenues of the Government and the needs of its Treasury are concerned, it is an utterly unnecessary tax. If there is any revival of business after the passage of the bill we shall certainly have revenue enough without it.

It is claimed upon the other side, I think without much reason, that if we will only pass some kind of a bill there is to be a revival of business. If that claim is true, there will be raised from the customs duties and the excise duties all the money which will be required to support the Government during the next year. If it be not true, if the depression is to continue, there will be little or nothing derived from a tax on incomes. A policy which is to strike down business and destroy incomes should not have an income tax incorporated with it. I shall not speak further of the fact that the tax is unnecessary for the purpose of raising revenue.

Why, then, is the tax resorted to? As the bill came from the House of Representatives it might have been justified on the ground of necessity. The bill, as constructed in the House of Representatives, struck down a large portion of the duties derived from customs; for instance, the duty upon sugar. The bill came from the other House with free sugar and an income tax. We have added to the bill a duty on sugar which will produce in the near future at least $50,000,000. By that one act we did away with all necessity for the income tax. Upon the admitted statements of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives we add more to the bill by the sugar duty than it is expected the income tax will raise. Then we in the Senate have largely increased the revenue from other sources over the bill as it came from the other House.

Why was the income tax originally incorporated in the bill? It was because of the proposed change in our system of raising revenue. It was because the House of Representatives proposed to strike down protective duties and go to revenue duties as a rule for the raising of revenue. In other words, it undertook to adapt our system to the English system, and the English system includes and necessitates an income tax.

England will not raise customs by duties which are protective either incidentally or per se. Therefore England is obliged to resort to other forms of taxation. So she adopts the income tax, the stamp tax, the excise tax and a variety of miscellaneous taxes to make up for the duties which she will not impose and the revenues which she will not raise by customs duties. That is the only excuse for the income tax in the pending bill, an excuse and a reason which have now been taken away because we have added enough to our customs list, together with our excise taxes upon tobacco and spirits, to meet the expenditures of the Government.

I have heard for years and years one universal cry from the Democratic party that we ought to abolish war taxes, and yet I find here in the pending bill the most odious of all war taxes, that which has been universally conceded to have been the most odious of what were called war taxes. Indeed, if, when the election of Mr. Cleveland was known to have been effected, if last August, when we came here to the Senate and to the other House, anyone had proposed or suggested that it was possible that an income tax would be resorted to, the suggestion would not have been entertained for a moment.

I know that in certain sections of this country where the Populist sentiment prevails there was some talk about resorting to an income tax, but all over the country elsewhere, embracing the Eastern, the Middle, the Northwestern States, and way down below the old Mason and Dixon line, the idea was considered to be impossible. When I said to my friends in my own home that "what the Democratic party will finally do is to resort to the income tax," I was regarded as little better than a slanderer of the Democratic party. So it seems to me to come with ill grace from the people who have been inveighing against war taxes that they now adopt this most odious war tax and that they should follow directly as to our system of taxation the English system.

I wish to say right here that if this were a necessary tax and were justly and fairly constructed, I should not make any opposition to it. If the necessities of the Government required the imposition of some tax to raise revenue over and beyond what might be raised from customs duties and duties upon tobacco and spirits, I should regard the income tax as the next best method of taxation. Therefore, in what I have to say against the tax now proposed, I do not wish to be understood that I oppose an income tax whenever the necessities of the Government may require one.

What I do say is that it should not be resorted to when the necessities of the Government do not require it, simply for the purpose of breaking down the protective system in this country, or for the purpose of conciliating or pleasing any body of men who have such an apparent objection to the accumulation of money that if anyone has acquired any they are willing that the Government should attempt to take it away from them. I do not know that I shall say more upon this idea in these remarks.

I wish to state that the rights of property are just as sacred as the rights of life and liberty, and that no country which has not a just regard for the right of private property can go on progressively as a republic. I do not understand the prejudice against the accumulation of wealth. I can understand why it is that there should be a prejudice against people getting wealth by improper means.

I can understand why it should be thought to be a great evil that people should be able in a country to acquire large fortunes by illegitimate methods, by methods which the common judgment of mankind does not approve; but how it is possible that there should be a prejudice against any man, who by industry, enterprise, fragrality, economy, and good judgment in investment has accumulated property, I can not understand. I do not believe there is any such real prejudice existing.

I believe that demagogues appeal to prejudice, appeal to a sentiment which is perhaps to be found in almost every human breast, when they appeal to people to take such action, political or legislative, as will in some way interfere with and cripple people who are better off than they are. There never can be an equal distribution of wealth. If there were to be an equal distribution of wealth, its holding would soon be unequal. The history of civilization shows that there never will be and there never can be any equal holding of wealth.

Even if the wild idea of having everything owned by the State could be adopted there would soon be found ways in which certain individuals would acquire substantially great wealth, while others would be in a state of comparative poverty. There is no better illustration of this than what is now existing in the Indian Territory among the five civilized tribes. There the tribes own the fee to the land in common.

In theory the nation or tribe holds it as trustee for the benefit of all the individuals of the tribes, and yet that land, its occupation, its benefit, its income, its profit have been practically monopolized by probably not more than 2,500 people belonging to those Indian tribes; one-twentieth of the Indians have taken most of the land into possession. There is a great possession, with great landed proprietors of immense wealth controlling legislatures, controlling courts, all in the interest of their landed holdings. No, Mr. President, this beautiful idea of everything in common and everyone having just as much as anyone else is impracticable in this world.

Now, I say nothing in defense of those who acquire fortunes improperly, and yet there seems to be a prevailing idea that because some people acquire fortunes improperly, therefore the cry should be raised, "Down with every man who owns anything." All the ideas of the past, the acquisition of property and the accumulation of wealth by means which everybody says is legitimate, which the common judgment of mankind approves, are to be thrown to the winds, and if anybody has any money he is to be mulcted in some way and his property taken away from him.

I have no sympathy with that kind of an idea, whether it comes from one party or another or from one section or another. The right of property lies at the foundation of government; the idea of the protection of property lies at the foundation of all just governments. The Democratic party will make nothing by attempting to favor the wild notions about the inequality which exists in the country, and the wild notions which seem to make it criminal almost for anybody by industry, enterprise, earnestness, and good fortune to have acquired some property.

I wish to say right here that the Democratic party has to face that issue, and as it faces it wisely or unwisely much of the future of this country is to be fashioned. They succeeded in the last Presidential campaign by fusing with that class of our fellow-citizens who in some way have a prejudice against all wealth, no matter how acquired. That is the way in which they got the votes by which they came into power, by a tacit promise to the Populists, and, if I may be permitted to say it, notwithstanding the suggestion which was made here yesterday, the Socialists, that if they would vote with the Democratic party and put them in power the Democrats would carry out their ideas.

Now comes the time of performance. We have come to the parting of the ways. The Democratic party has to be all Populist or all conservative. It can not be a conservative Democratic party when it fuses with the Populist party. If it believes in the doctrines of the Populist party, then let it join hands and make one party. If it does not believe in the doctrines of the Populist party, it has to stand up for its own beliefs or go down. This matter of fusion will not do between parties who represent different ideas.

Mr. President, a large portion of this inveighing against anybody who has, by proper means, acquired some property comes, after all, from the passion of envy and covetousness. A farmer upon his farm in the West, having a hard time to get along, finding that his crops do not bring him enough to yield what he considers a fair return to enable him to live as he thinks he is entitled to live, draws his load of corn into town. He finds there a man who was a farmer, but has owned some lots where a city has grown up. He finds that his old-time farmer friend, who was in the same situation with himself financially, has sold out his city lots and has now become a nabob, a millionaire; and immediately he begins to be envious of his former associate.

He is not willing that he shall have the benefit of his fortunate situation and fortunate trade. He begins to think that in some way or other he should have been the man to enjoy that fortune. Then he begins to envy the man who has acquired the fortune.

Then, we all have been living extravagantly. The idea of making money, of acquiring without labor a fortune, according to our ideas of what a fortune should be, seems to have taken possession of everybody.

Everybody fixes his own standard of wealth, and then he wants to make that wealth within a twelvemonth, and live all the while during the twelvemonth as if he had it on hand on the 1st day of January. That is the foundation of this Populistic sentiment in this country. It is not that they complain so much of the improper and unequal distribution of wealth as it is the feeling of jealousy that they have not been able to acquire as much wealth as they desire.

Mr. President, you can not conduct a government successfully by giving way to that sort of feeling; and it is not statesmanlike to appeal to that sort of feeling.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not like to hear the Senator from Connecticut make a statement that is not borne out by the truth. I infer that he intends to state the case exactly as it is. The Senator states that the Populist party is envious of the wealthy and wishes to live without labor. I desire to state to the Senator from Connecticut that there is nothing of that kind in the Populist party; and there is nothing of the kind in its platform, nothing in the public utterances of its newspapers, nothing in the utterances of any of its leaders or members; and it is simply, in my judgment, a chimerical phrase.

Mr. PLATT. It was with great difficulty that I heard the Senator from Nebraska, and I do not know that I correctly heard what he had to say. I look not at platforms. I look at what I see going on in the country. I see men, who either belong to the Populist party or sympathize with the Populist party, are continually railing against wealth and making no discrimination in their denunciations as to the mode in which wealth has been acquired. It is natural enough that they should not make those discriminations——

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to make another suggestion?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. The Populist party does discriminate, and the Senator from Connecticut is in error there again.

Mr. PLATT. I am very glad if it does.

Mr. ALLEN. The Populist party, if the Senator will permit me, looks upon the constitutional right of property in all its forms with as much sacredness as the Senator himself looks upon it. It believes that any man who acquires an honest fortune is entitled to enjoy it and be protected in it.

It does not believe in encouraging the accumulation of fraudulent fortunes and a failure to properly legislate or enforce the law. It desires to destroy the opportunity of the extremely, fraudulently rich, if I may so express it, to constantly rob the producers of the country of their equitable and just proportion of the property they produce. If that is wrong, it is Populist sentiment.

Mr. PLATT. As stated by the Senator from Nebraska, he and I should not much disagree, but the truth is that in practice they assume that everybody who has anything has come by it improperly.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to make another remark? I desire to dispute that statement and to state that there are a great many Populists to-day—men who are leaders in the Populist party—who are themselves quite wealthy.

Mr. PLATT. That is the astonishing thing about the Populist party which I have observed, that people who have acquired their fortunes by these methods, which the common judgment of mankind would condemn, get into the Populist party and some of them become its leaders.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me again? That is not the class of men who get into the Populist party. It is the class of men who have earned their fortunes honestly who get into that party. The dishonest fellows are in the other parties.

Mr. PLATT. We can not go into personal specifications in regard to that, but I have some men in my mind who are leaders, or think they are, who assume to be spokesmen, at any rate, for the Populist party, who are men of large wealth, and who did not acquire it by brawny work in the field or in the shop, or anywhere else.

But I have been diverted from what I intended to say when I rose. I assert that the income-tax provision is unnecessary. As the bill has now been amended in the Senate it is unnecessary even to the scheme of the Democratic party, if we assume that the Senate acts for the Democratic party. We will have money enough without it; there will be plenty of revenue. It is not only unnecessary, but in some features it seems to me to be very wrong. I know that I am going to take an unpopular position in what I now say, yet I think it needs to be said.

There is no reason why this tax should apply to a corporation as a corporation. It is no part of any income scheme that has ever been put in operation or devised in the world. It is no part of the English income scheme, or if so, such an inconsiderable part that it cuts no figure whatever. It is entirely unjust, as I shall endeavor to show a little further on.

Now, this element which I have spoken of (and I call it the Populist element not in any disparagement of the Populist party at all, but this sentiment which has been so widely disseminated among the people, largely by politicians who sought to make them uneasy in order to get their votes) embraces the idea that all corporations are iniquitous associations and ought to be struck down.

You see that here every day in the Senate. To prejudice the Senate against the passage of a bill it is only thought necessary to say that a corporation desires it. A railroad corporation, of all things, is to be legislated against. If it desires anything, it is not to be granted; if it gets it, it must get it in some secret way. When anybody desires anything against a railroad corporation, that goes, as a matter of course.

Mr. President, corporations are just like individuals.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not like to interrupt the Senator so much.

Mr. PLATT. I have scarcely heard any interruption by the Senator yet.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not desire to trespass upon the Senator's time, but let me ask him in what section of the country the idea prevails of which he speaks, that everything is to be done against railroad corporations, that a great jealousy exists against them? Where is that the case?

Mr. PLATT. It is not long since the people of Washington, who had made great efforts to get railroads extended into their country, finally conceived such a prejudice against railroads that each political party in a certain portion of that State not desiring to be outdone by the other, passed resolutions to the effect that the tracks of the railroads ought to be torn up.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that the Populist party has not passed resolutions of that kind in Washington, and since that time the Populist party has so grown that it has almost wiped out of existence the other parties?

Mr. PLATT. I am not talking about the Populist party. I am talking about the sentiment in the country which we hear everywhere, which we hear in the public press, which we hear in speeches of Senators, that in some way corporations are to be denounced because they are corporations, that in some way they are detrimental to the best interests of the Government.

I will not allude to what is said over and over again about their power in legislation. This allegation needs no bill of particulars, no specifications; everybody understands what I mean. Denunciation of corporations forms the stock in trade of nearly half the politicians of the country, and they make no distinction apparently when they denounce corporations.

It is the sentiment that in some way or other the Legislature must get at the corporations, which accounts for the tax upon the incomes of corporations in this bill. It has been a remark made more than once in the Senate, and so publicly that I may refer to it during the consideration of this tariff bill, that the persons trying to pass it desire to "get at the rich men," and that is why this tax is laid on corporations. They wish some way or other to get at corporations.

As I said, this taxing of corporations by an income tax has no precedent to sustain it. It has never been advocated by any political economists in any scheme of income taxation. There is no more reason why we should tax the income of a corporation because it is a corporation than why we shall tax the income of a partnership because it is a partnership.

The truth about this matter of corporations is just this: A corporation should be treated as an individual. If it behaves itself it should be respected; if it undertakes to do wrong it should be restrained. A corporation properly conducted, conducted on principles of equity and fair dealing, is a benefit to the country and our civilization.

More than that, it is an indispensable agent of our civilization. Its advent marks progress. If it goes into unfair dealing, inequitable doing, then it is a disgrace and a shame. But that is true of the individual just as it is of the corporation. Take the merchant. The merchant who conducts business upon fair principles, upon principles of equity, of fair dealing, man with man, and does not attempt to trample upon anybody's rights, is respected. He ought to be respected. Take another who has no regard for the rights of others, who cheats and swindles and oppresses—that man deserves censure, condemnation. Just so is it with corporations.

But, Mr. President, if some individual merchant does wicked things, things which we condemn, things which we would like to prevent, we do not for that reason attack the whole class of merchants. Take money-lending. There is nothing wrong about money-lending. The world can not get along without credit or borrowing and lending, and there must be in every community people whose business it is to lend money.

Now, so long as they lend money at proper rates, the rates which are justified by the common consent of mankind, so long as they resort to no means to oppose the debtor, they are not to be condemned. But here is a usurer found. Here is a man found who takes too much; he lends money at 1 per cent a month—has a pawnbroker's shop, perhaps. What do we do by law? Do we immediately pass laws against money-lending? No. Do we attack money-lenders? Not at all. We pass laws against usury. We pass laws to regulate pawnbroking.

I trust the Senator from Nebraska will excuse me, I speak only about the Populist party as representing the sentiment or as having crystallized in some way a sentiment which prevails in the country. That sentiment seems to be that if a corporation does anything wrong, strike at all corporations, tax them. Now, why not tax a partnership? This bill does not tax the income of a partnership; and the corporations of this country, when you step outside of those which are continually in the mind of the people and which are exciting the criticism of people, are nothing more than commercial partnerships.

That is the law. The law treats them so. I found in one of the decisions of my own State, in the opinion of one of the judges, the following:

> Indeed, joint stock corporations in modern times are nothing but commercial partnerships which have taken the form of corporations for the greater facility of transacting business, and to prevent a dissolution of the concern by those numerous events which are so liable to work a dissolution in a partnership composed of a great number of individuals. (Pratt vs. Pratt, 33 Conn.)

Mr. HAWLEY. If my colleague will permit me, we remember, both of us very well, that some thirty years ago when our joint stock corporations laws were enacted in Connecticut, it was then supposed, and even is now, that it is an enormous advantage to the men of limited means, three, four, or five in number, who, with a thousand dollars apiece, can organize and safely conduct business. It is a special blessing to the poor man.

Mr. PLATT. I am going to get to that a little later on. In New York the manufacturing corporations are no longer created by special, but by general law. In the case of the Diamond Match Company vs. Roeber, in 106 New York, 473, the court of appeals says:

> The laws no longer favor the granting of exclusive privileges, and, to a great extent, business corporations are practically partnerships, and may be organized by any persons who desire to unite their capital or skill in business, leaving a free field to all others who desire for the same or similar purpose to clothe themselves with a corporate character.

If you will read the writings of John Stuart Mill you will find that he refers to this method of carrying on business by commercial joint stock corporations as one of the greatest blessings of our civilization.

My colleague has already alluded to the establishment of joint stock corporations in the State of Connecticut.

The general idea which one has when he hears about taxing the income of a corporation is that it refers to railroad, telegraph companies, banks, and that class of corporations, and great corporations like the sugar trust or the Standard Oil Company, the great corporations, with great aggregations of wealth, who have concentrated business in their hands, and who are supposed to be more or less monopolistic in their character and in their dealings. That is the idea which seems to be evoked when we talk about taxing the income of corporations.

That I insist, with all deference to my friend from Nebraska, is where the popularity of the income tax comes from, that it is based on the idea that it is taxing very wealthy people and taxing corporations because they possess great wealth.

Mr. President, when it comes to my own State it strikes an entirely different class of people and an entirely different class of corporations—corporations engaged in as honest and legitimate business as the merchant who has a retail store or the individual who is printing a country paper, or the mechanic who has been enabled to get a small shop and carry on a small manufacturing business.

As my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] has well said, back in 1851 we introduced into our State the system of encouraging joint stock corporations—I think it was in 1851—and they were, when established, and to-day still are, actual coöperative associations, as much as any reformer ever longed for.

We have this law?

> "Any three or more persons who shall associate by written articles, which shall express their agreement to constitute a corporation, the name by which it shall be known, the purpose for which it is constituted, the town in this State in which it is to be located, the amount of its capital stock, and the number of shares each person is to take, which shares shall each be of the par value of $100, $50, or $25, as may be prescribed in said articles, under any name commencing with 'The' and ending with 'company' or 'corporation,' which name is not then in use by an existing corporation in this State, for the purpose of carrying on any lawful business in this State and out of this State, whatever lawful business may be incidental to the business within it, such business not to be either trust, insurance, buying and selling real estate, banking, issuing or trading in bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness, or trafficking in letters patent or patent rights, shall, when so associated, and when a certificate shall have been filed with the secretary of this State as hereinafter provided, become and remain a joint stock corporation under this act; and corporations may in like manner be formed under this act for the purpose of carrying on, out of this State, any lawful business not herein forbidden: Provided, That in such cases the secretary and treasurer and a majority of the directors shall always be residents of this State."

The very essential idea of that is a coöperative association, and it has been upon that fortunate idea that the business of Connecticut has been developed. A few skillful men who have been able to acquire by economy and savings from their wages a little capital come together, joining their capital, or perhaps they get some man with money who is willing to help them along, and they start thereby a little manufacturing or a mercantile business or joint stock corporation. That is the way in which the industrial condition of Connecticut has been built up. Why should those institutions be taxed, Mr. President, any more than men who enter into partnership should be taxed as partners?

I do not know how many of these concerns we have in Connecticut, not only manufacturing concerns, but business concerns; but I do know that as a general thing they have not large capital; that when a great industry has been established they have gone to the Legislature and secured a special charter.

These joint stock companies in Connecticut are just as much entitled to the consideration of Congress in this matter of taxation as savings banks, as mutual life insurance companies, or as fraternal beneficial associations.

I said I did not know how many of these organizations we have in Connecticut, but I know the rate at which they have been formed of late years. From September 1, 1880, to May 1, 1889, 865 of them were established in the State. I have not the amount of their capital, but from my knowledge of the subject I venture to say that the average capital of these 900 establishments which have been incorporated under our joint stock law within the last ten years, does not exceed $25,000 or $30,000, and probably it is very much under that. My colleague thinks that estimate is too high.

Why should these concerns be taxed directly as corporations? If you are going to have an income tax I do not object to having the money which the individual stockholder may derive from such corporations included within his income; it ought to be; but why tax the corporation as a corporation and not tax a partnership as a partnership? Why tax this business when you do not tax all business?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know whether it is true in Connecticut, as it is in Rhode Island, that mercantile business is now quite largely conducted in the form of corporations rather than of partnerships, for the convenience of the parties interested, and to carry out still further the idea of coöperation among the employés and employers in these mercantile establishments.

Mr. PLATT. Almost the only way in which young men can get ahead in this country now is through the agency of these joint stock commercial companies. I appeal to every business man as to what is the common everyday experience.

For instance, there has been a partnership of merchants, and they have been very successful; those who have been long in the business are quite willing to retire, but they have some bookkeepers and agents and clerks to whom they desire to give a start in the world, and so, withdrawing a part of their capital, perhaps, they turn their mercantile establishments or their trading business into a joint stock company, and they let the bookkeeper and the cashier, and the commercial travelers and the clerks take some stock and manage the concern thereafter, leaving a portion of the funds which they have acquired by trade remain in the establishment. That is the foundation of a new business. From that it begins to grow and thus the young men who used to be received into partnership in the old times, or used to find some way of getting ahead in the world, have the opportunity to grow up with the business which they themselves managed. That is the history of these corporations for which I am pleading.

What does the bill do? It says, first, that the income of all individuals is to be taxed, and, then, that the income of these corporations is to have a tax of 2 per cent imposed annually.

It will be observed when you go to impose the income tax on an individual, you allow him an exemption. If his income does not amount to $4,000, or, as the bill is proposed to be amended, to $3,000, he pays nothing. But here three or four young men who have established a joint stock corporation store, if they have a joint income of $3,000 profit from the business, have to pay a 2 per cent income tax on all the profits of the business. Why should they be compelled to do that any more than if they were in a partnership? There is no reason for it; it is unjust; it is inequitable.

It will stop the development of my State to tax these corporations. Nobody is going hereafter to form a joint stock corporation to carry on business if the net profits of that corporation are to have an income tax of 2 per cent imposed upon them, when business carried on in another way is not required to pay a tax as a business and when a partnership business is not taxed. We shall have no more of these most beneficent corporations scattered all over my State, the hum of whose wheels and of whose industry can be heard the moment you enter the State, as you pass through it, and until you leave it, no matter in what direction you may go.

We shall have no more joint stock corporations formed in the State of Connecticut if business carried on in other forms is to be discriminated in favor of and they are to be discriminated against. If on one side of a street three persons carry on business as partners, making a joint profit of $6,000, no income tax is to be paid upon such income or profit unless the partners have other sources of income which, added to their share of the partnership gains, makes their individual income exceed $4,000. If on the opposite side of the street three persons, having formed a corporation, carry on the same kind of business and make the same amount of profit, the $6,000 profit made by the corporation is to pay an income tax of $120. Is this equal taxation?

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator before he gets through with this line of argument will allude to the fact that there are numerous and annoying exactions aside from the taxes imposed upon people who do business in this form, in favor of those who do business in some other form.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly. They are subject to every inquisitorial feature of this bill, whereas those who do business as a partnership are exempt from very many of them.

But speaking of the tax on corporations generally, it works an injustice in this way: Take the case of a bank. Senators will say: "Well, the income of a bank ought to be taxed 2 per cent; that is all right; these terrible institutions, these national banks which are against the spirit of our institutions, if we can get at them and put a tax on them of 2 per cent we are doing something; we are striking at the banks." Let us see how that operates.

Every individual is taxed under this bill according to the income which he derives from all sources, with the exemption of $4,000, or $3,000, as the case may be; and, if I understand the bill, the individual in reckoning up his income can leave out of it the bank dividend which he has received, because the bank has been compelled to pay a 2 per cent corporation tax. How does that affect the small holder of bank stock? That is true with reference to all corporations.

Take a bank as an illustration. Three-quarters of the stockholders in the national banks in my State are persons who do not have an income of $3,000. They have moderate incomes, perhaps all derived from bank stock; it may be one thousand, or two thousand, or two thousand five hundred dollars; and it will be seen that, whereas the person whose income is over three or four thousand dollars, as the case may be, may deduct the dividends from his bank stock, the person who does not have an annual income of $3,000 has in effect to pay a 2 per cent tax upon his entire income, because when it is taken out by the bank, the bank is so much the less able to declare the dividend, and the loss falls on the stockholders. That is the way all through with regard to these corporations.

This is a scheme by which a person of small means can get no deductions, no exemptions, from the income tax if he happens to have his funds invested in the stocks or bonds of a corporation, while a person of a large income can deduct all this because the corporation has paid the tax. But there is no exemption for the person of small means. Thus the effect of this provision will be to put an income tax as a punishment upon everybody who happens to have any stock in a corporation and who does not have an income equal to $3,000.

Mr. President, I think I have made my plea good that this tax upon corporations is inequitable.

There are very many other matters to which I might refer in this connection. I do not wish to discuss the details of the bill generally; but right along in connection with what I have been saying there seems to be another thing which is wrong and glaringly unjust. I do not know but that it is following the English system; perhaps it is. I refer to the tax upon the income acquired by inheritance or gift of personal property. We have those taxes in the States, Mr. President.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit an inquiry?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to be informed by the Senator as to whether or not this feature of taxing the incomes of corporations is peculiar to this bill, and whether or not it obtains in the English law?

Mr. PLATT. It does not obtain in the English law. I said that when I started.

I ought perhaps to make an explanation, that with a very large tax derived from incomes there are certain features of a corporation tax which yield a very small amount, not more than three or four or five hundred thousand dollars for the entire Kingdom of Great Britain, but I exclude that.

Mr. CAFFERY. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask whether or not the business of the country now is largely carried on under the system of limited liability corporations?

Mr. PLATT. I think it is.

Mr. CAFFERY. And whether that system has not to a great extent taken the place of partnerships?

Mr. PLATT. It has.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask further whether or not this tax would operate very severely upon the holders of shares in all those limited liability corporations?

Mr. PLATT. I think it would. It is not necessary to tax these corporations.

What should be the scheme of an income tax? It should be to tax the personal incomes of individuals which exceed the amount exempted, and in that way you get all the income of the country. But here you will observe that confusion is created by trying to tax the corporation. There is no necessity for it, because, if you put the income tax upon personal incomes, you reach all the earnings of the corporation in the hands of the individuals whose incomes exceed the exemption, but see into what difficulty you are carried the moment you put the tax on the corporations.

There is a provision here that if the tax is paid by the corporation, the individual, or another corporation who holds its securities, need not return them in the income account. Why go through all that? You reach the earnings of the corporation when you put the tax upon the individual, and when you put the tax upon the corporation you get nothing more, but you throw the whole matter into confusion and inexplicable difficulty.

Mr. President, I was speaking, when interrupted, about the feature of the bill which requires a person in making up his income to put in all that he has acquired by gift or inheritance during the year, and I was saying we had that in our State laws for taxing inheritance. They do not, however, undertake to tax an inheritance which descends lineally, or which goes from the husband to the wife; but only the collateral inheritance, generally drawing the line at cousins. If a cousin takes an inheritance, then there is a collateral inheritance tax imposed. But this goes further. This puts a 2 per cent tax upon all gifts and all inheritances of personal property. See how that is likely to operate.

Our people are not all millionaires in Connecticut. Indeed, we have very few millionaires, but a good many well-to-do people, most of whom have but a small competence. Take the case of a mechanic. I have one in mind who never earned more than $2 a day in his life, and he saved by small deposits in the savings banks and the accumulation of interest until he has just under $10,000—nine thousand and some dollars. He has a daughter. I know the man and I know his family. That sum is all he has. He is in feeble health, and when he dies what takes place? A person who has an income of over $3,000 a year is to pay a tax upon the excess of 2 per cent. His daughter, when she takes the $9,000 out in the savings bank as an inheritance, will have to pay $120 to the Government, 2 per cent on the excess over $3,000. Is that right?

This bill is so crude in all its details, Mr. President, that time fails to speak of the provisions which ought to be corrected if we are going to have an income tax.

That is the class of people who are to be largely affected by this legislation in the State of Connecticut. I tell you when this bill comes to be understood among the people, the income-tax feature will be the most unpopular feature of the bill. It is wholly and absolutely unnecessary.

All property acquired by gift is to be taken into account in making up the income. If a young man with a salary of $3,000 happens to get married during the year, his father may wish to set him up in housekeeping. So he makes him a present of the furniture with which to go to housekeeping. Somebody else brings in some wedding presents.

In making up his accounts he has to include all those gifts of furniture and wedding presents. If the bride happens to be the daughter of some wealthy person and has an income of $3,000, she must include in her income the diamond ring with which she was betrothed, and to pay a tax of 2 per cent on its value.

Mr. PERKINS. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Connecticut, there is another feature which suggests itself to me, and one which comes home directly to many of us. There are those who are struggling along to pay premiums on their life insurance policies for the purpose of providing for their children if removed by death. There is no provision made for deducting the amount of this premium from the income during the year. That is an onerous tax imposed on one who is working for his wife and his children, and yet there is no provision made for deducting it.

Mr. PLATT. That is true. The bill is full of such features. It makes a man pay a tax not only on the premiums which he pays to keep up his life insurance for the benefit of his family, but upon all that he gives to charitable objects. But I shall not pursue this matter further. If we must have an income tax, the honest, just, equitable way is to make a small exemption and tax whatever income the individual has above that exemption. By that way you reach everything and make everybody pay in proportion to what he is worth. The whole matter of going outside of it to reach corporations is founded on the idea—I had almost called it an insane idea—that because a business is conducted under an association which is called a corporation it deserves to be struck at by legislation.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be allowed, I should like to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. This is merely a thought suggested by what he has said, and he has said it more emphatically, perhaps, that I can put it. Take the case of the gift of a husband, a young workingman, who wants to put a little property in his wife's name. If the property is over $3,000 in value, it can only go to the wife with the incident of a 2 per cent tax to the National Government, and the same would be the case, as I understand, where a widow came into possession of property left by her husband.

Mr. PLATT. That would depend on whether the entire family had an income outside of that of over $3,000.

Mr. HOAR. I understand, then, that would be exempted in any case?

Mr. PLATT. Exactly.

Mr. HOAR. But suppose the workingman has made $3,000. He is, say, an engineer on a railroad, engaged in a hazardous business, and he wants to give a dwelling-house worth $3,000 as a gift to his wife, for the benefit of herself and her children. All over that he has to pay tax upon.

Mr. PLATT. It does not apply to real estate. It applies only to personal property.

Mr. HOAR. But the inheritance of a widow from her husband is taxed?

Mr. PLATT. Exactly. All personal property acquired by gift or inheritance is to be counted in making up the individual income, and if the whole income exceeds $3,000 the excess is to be taxed. Only one exemption of $3,000 is to be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family. But I do not desire to discuss in detail all the crude, unjust, and inequitable details of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, although many speeches have been made by Senators on this floor against the adoption of the income tax, but few arguments have been employed against it, and I desire to refer to them briefly.

The speech just concluded by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is remarkable for its candor and for its exposition of what he believes the Populist party, which I suppose he considers a very radical party, is trying to accomplish in this country.

I was very glad indeed to hear the Senator express himself so fully, not because his statements contain what I regard as facts, but because they contain what he looks upon as the truth regarding the Populist party, and doubtless what many other people, ignorant of the purposes of that party, believe to be the truth as to those purposes.

The Senator from Connecticut makes one remarkable statement—a statement to which I can not agree at any time or place. He says that in this country property is just as sacred as human life. I do not believe this. I do not believe that there is a government in the civilized world where property is looked upon as sacred as human life. However sacred property may be regarded, the right to live is supreme over all things. The desire to live is the ruling law of our nature. The necessity of preserving human life is a necessarily implied condition-precedent to the enjoyment of property and the enjoyment of all things incident to existence itself.

I do not agree with the Senator from Connecticut that property is equally sacred with human life. I do not by that mean to say that I do not regard the right of property highly, nor do I desire any Senator to infer from what I say on this subject that the Populist party has not full regard for the rights of property.

It has been argued here frequently, perhaps I ought to say that it has been inferred rather than expressed in plain language, that the Populist party desires to destroy all protection to property; that it desires to annul constitutional and statutory guarantees of property.

I do not know whether or not the Senators who have made that statement were sincere and believed it to be true, but I presume they were sincere or they would not have made it. As matter of fact, however, such a statement is entirely unfounded.

There is not a Populist from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, nor from the Lake of the Woods to the Gulf of Mexico, who does not understand and realize as fully as any Senator in this Chamber that the right of property under our Constitution and form of government is absolutely sacred, and there is not one of all the great number of American people belonging to that party who would impair the right of property in the slightest degree. So that insinuations or statements made here that the Populist party desires to destroy the right of property in this country, that its members do not rise to the dignity of patriotic citizenship, or understand our form of government and its constitutional guarantees, are entirely unwarranted on the part of those who make them.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut says, with admirable frankness, that those composing the Populist party—and everything that is not Democratic or Republican, of course, must in his view necessarily be Populistic—are jealous of those who have accumulated wealth, if I remember his statement correctly. There never was a grosser mistake made by any man than this statement by that distinguished Senator.

There is not a member of that party anywhere to-day who has in his breast the slightest degree of jealousy of those who have honestly accumulated wealth. There is not one throughout the length and breadth of the land who would impair in the slightest degree the honestly acquired fortune of any man or any corporation. There is no jealousy upon their part of wealthy men or wealthy corporations.

There is no desire on their part to check any honest man, in the slightest degree, in acquiring an honest fortune to any extent that may be within his power; but, Mr. President, there is a strong desire upon the part of the Populist party that every man who enjoys a fortune in this country shall enjoy it as the result of honest labor upon his part, and that he shall not be permitted, through vicious legislation, to reap the fruits of the labors of others, or to amass a fortune which is the result of fraudulent and dishonest practices upon his part. If that is wrong, then the Populist party is wrong. If that is right, then the Populist party is right.

The Populist party believes that it is the duty of the Government to legislate in the interest of all the people of the country and not in the interest of the few alone. It believes that the rights of the humblest citizen of the land are as sacred in our form of government as the rights of the most gigantic corporation. Is there anything wrong in this belief? Are there any class distinctions in this country recognized by statute, that would exclude any class of our people from the beneficent operation of our laws?

Are we to say that the mass of the people of this country must struggle without the assistance of beneficial legislation, while the very few dominate the action of Congress and make money out of Congressional legislation or by circumstances are suffered to accumulate wealth for the want of proper Congressional legislation? If it be visionary to believe in a doctrine of this kind, if it be criminal to believe in such a doctrine, then the Populist party is both visionary and criminal. If, on the other hand, it be patriotic to so believe, if it be in accordance with the teachings and traditions of our Government so to believe, then the Populist party stands to-day closer to the true history, traditions, and teachings of this nation than any other political party in this country.

Every Senator that has spoken against the income tax has taken occasion to say that it was Populistic. My distinguished friend, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] yesterday said that it was not Democratic, but that it was Populistic. I suppose he intended to leave the impression upon the minds of his hearers that if it were Populistic it was so odious that no respectable man ought to believe in it or advocate it.

Mr. President, the income tax is a Democratic measure. The first income tax that was enacted and enforced in this country was a Democratic measure. The second, third, and fourth were Democratic measures, while the last income tax was a Republican measure.

July 14, 1789, a statute was enacted which imposed a tax upon real estate and a capitation tax upon slaves. August 2, 1813, an act was passed by Congress which imposed a tax upon real estate and slaves according to their respective values in money. January 19, 1815, another act of Congress was passed which imposed the same kind of a tax upon the same descriptions of property—that is, upon real estate and slaves. The act of February 27, 1815, applied the provisions of the act of June 19, 1815, to the District of Columbia. The act of March 5, 1816, repealed the former laws and enacted other provisions to enforce the collection of the small amount of taxes prescribed by that act.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question? Were those income taxes or in the nature of taxes under that clause of the Constitution which are called direct taxes, and apportioned according to population?

Mr. ALLEN. I think perhaps the Senator is right, and the majority of them were of the character he states, at least two of them.

Mr. ALLISON. I mention it for the purpose of calling his attention to the fact that I know of no income tax having been imposed in the United States until 1861.

Mr. ALLEN. On the 5th of August, 1861, an act was passed by Congress which authorized a tax to be levied wholly upon real estate, and both the act of June 17, 1862, and the act of February 6, 1863, authorized the collection in insurrectionary districts of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, and were a part and parcel of the system of direct tax imposed in the early part of the war. I speak of this not for the purpose of entering into a lengthy discussion of the history of the income tax in this country, but for the purpose of showing that when Senators assert that the income tax is peculiarly Populistic, although I wish that were true, it is not historically true. The measure is both a Democratic and a Republican measure, and Populistic to-day.

Mr. President, the income tax is the only respectable inheritance that the Populist party receives from the past. It ill becomes the Senator from New York or the Senator from Connecticut, or any other Senator, then, to stand in his place in this Chamber and denounce the income tax as communistic, as unjust, as inquisitorial, as Populistic, because it was one of the first systems of taxation introduced into the country after the formation of the Constitution in 1787. It has been resorted to from time to time throughout the history of the country when Congress deemed it necessary for the purpose of raising revenue. Senators say that it is a war tax, and I suppose pretty soon we will hear the cry raised from every stump throughout the country by the Republican party that the Democratic party, aided by the Populists, resurrected and put into the law the odious income tax of war times.

Mr. President, that statement is false. The income tax is not a war tax peculiarly and solely. It has been enacted and enforced in this country when there was absolute and profound peace, when this country was not even threatened with war. It was a popular system of taxation in the early days of the Republic. So the statement that Senators make upon this question that it is an odious war tax is not in accordance with the history of this system of taxation in this country.

The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] on yesterday and on one other occasion informed the Senate and the country that possibly the Supreme Court as now constituted would not look upon the provisions of the Constitution as their predecessors looked upon it. Mr. President, in 1796 the Supreme Court of the United States decided this kind of a tax constitutional, in the Hilton case. Ninety-eight years ago the question was settled in this country.

It was settled by one of the strongest benches that ever existed in the country that a tax of this character is a constitutional tax; that it was not a direct tax and therefore in violation of the Constitution. The Supreme Court then held that the only two taxes that could be imposed by this Government which were properly characterized as direct taxation were the capitation or poll tax of the Constitution and a direct tax upon real estate. For ninety-eight years of the existence of this Government that has been the law, and it is the law to-day. Notwithstanding over twenty judges—I think I may safely double that, and say nearly forty judges—have occupied the Supreme Bench of the nation from the time that decision was rendered until this moment, no one of them has ever questioned the correctness of that decision.

It has been reaffirmed on three or four different occasions. It was reaffirmed in the Springer case, a lengthily argued and closely considered case, without a dissenting voice upon the part of any justice of the court. Yet the Senator from New York lets drop the significant remark, and it is significant to the people of this country, that possibly the Supreme Court of the United States as now constituted will not look upon this question as its predecessors have looked upon it. Are we to understand that the Supreme Court of the United States is packed upon this question? Are we to understand that any man before he went upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States prejudged this question and that his prejudging it was a condition-precedent to his promotion? Do 70,000,000 people of the United States hold their constitutional and property and personal rights by a tenure so uncertain as this?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not know that the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska calls for any answer, but I would simply say that I do not think it is probable at all that any member of the Supreme Court has been polled upon this legal question. I simply desire to call the Senator's attention to what we find in history, that the Supreme Court has repeatedly reversed itself.

Mr. ALLEN. The Supreme Court may have repeatedly reversed itself, but I want to say to the Senator from New York that the Supreme Court has never reversed itself upon this question. There have never been two opinions emanating from that great tribunal upon this question. Their decision has been yea, yea, in every instance in favor of the constitutionality of the tax and its enforcement. No one ever doubted that the question was settled and put at rest until the Senator from New York a few weeks ago interjected into the debate a suspicion at least that a different opinion might be expected from the Supreme Court as it is now constituted, and that, too, notwithstanding the rule which exists in our jurisprudence and has existed throughout the history of the common law, that a constitutional and property question once settled must be held for prudential and just purposes to be settled forever.

Mark you, it is not a question of court practice that can be changed at will without doing injury to anyone or any interest, but it is a settlement of the constitutional right that for nearly one hundred years has become imbedded in the very foundation of our Republic. It is a part of the warp and woof of the rights of American citizens. Yet we are gravely informed that the Supreme Court of the United States, as now constituted, may possibly overturn a constitutional ruling that has been so frequently made.

Mr. President, I do not believe it. I do not believe there is any man worthy of wearing the ermine, I do not believe any man placed upon the supreme tribunal of this nation would so far forget himself as to pledge himself in advance and as a condition to his promotion that he would render a decision overruling well-established rules of his predecessor.

Yet, Mr. President, the remark has significance. It has this significance, sir: It shows that the power which is dominating legislation to-day, the power which shows its hand in the Senate every once in a while and in the other branch of Congress, is not satisfied with reaching out its long bony fingers through the legislation of Congress, but that it is seeking to fasten itself upon the supreme tribunal of the land.

The Supreme Court of the United States is the only department of the National Government left to the people. The legislative department of the Government has been under the control of the corporations and of the money power for more than a quarter of a century. No law can pass this body, no important measure has passed this body in twenty-five years that did not first secure the sanction of the great corporate interests of the nation; not one. Senators may indignantly deny it; they may say the statement is untrue; but I challenge any Senator in this Chamber this moment to point out a measure of great importance to the people that has not first secured the sanction of these influences.

It will not do, sir, to denounce me. It will not do to denounce the Populist party. It will not do to make some person a scapegoat. The people believe that Congress is dominated by the money power of this nation to-day. They believe it, and they have a right to believe it when they see iniquitous measures passed here that enable a few men to build up at the expense of the people fabulous and dishonest fortunes.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator oblige the Senate by specifying those acts of legislation passed by Congress which have enabled people to build up vast fortunes?

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be very glad to do it at some future time.

Mr. HILL. Now is the accepted time.

Mr. ALLEN. It may be to the Senator from New York. I think it is; but it is not the Populist's time. Our life is a little longer.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman may take all the time he pleases.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I can enumerate a few. The refunding act took out of the pockets of the people of the United States $700,000,000 wrongfully. That is one.

Mr. HILL. What year was that?

Mr. ALLEN. Since the war; I do not recall the year; along in 1869.

Mr. HILL. At that time the Senator belonged to the Republican party.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator never belonged to any party. I was a member of the Republican party, but not responsible for its legislation. I will not, however, get into any controversy with the Senator upon that point. The refunding act, the resumption act, the constant refunding of the indebtedness of the United States into interest-bearing bonds, the change of law by which bonds payable in lawful money became payable in coin and the Executive interpretation—not disavowed by Congress—by which the word "coin" was unlawfully construed to signify gold coin have cost the people of this country hundreds of millions of dollars. The demonetization of silver in 1873 is another, and the crowning villainy of 1893, by which silver was entirely stricken down, has cost the country directly and indirectly many hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. President, when there went up from this country a universal cry to retain the purchasing clause of the Sherman act until such time as the silver question could be settled, to the end that the people might have more money with which to transact their business, I did not hear the eloquent voice of the Senator from New York raised in their behalf. Why was not that act retained? Simply because it was giving to the people of this country about $50,000,000 of money annually, adding that much to the total volume of their money. It was necessary to answer the purpose of the men in Wall street to strike down that money.

It was necessary to do it without condition. It was necessary to do it so that Wall street could take its money and invest in more Government bonds. Now, they have something like $100,000,000 surplus lying in their banks unused and again the cry goes forth to the country that the gold reserve is being trenched upon, and that there is necessity for the Government to issue more bonds, and pretty soon to please the Shylocks of Wall street and Lombard street more bonds under some subterfuge or some pretense will be issued as a burden upon the industries of this country.

No, Mr. President, I am right when I say that no measure of any considerable importance has passed Congress in twenty-five years that did not first meet the approval of this class of people.

The Senator from New York proposes to have these decisions of the Supreme Court overturned by a new tribunal. He proposes to have the Supreme Court as now constituted, or possibly as constituted at some time in the future, overturn these decisions and hold this kind of taxation unconstitutional.

Mr. President, it is sad indeed to suppose that any man can imagine the time coming when the Supreme Court of the United States will be in the grasp of these corporations and this money power; when there will be no civil power in this country to protect the right of the individual citizen; when every branch of the Government shall have passed over to and be dominated by the baneful influences of the money power and the corporate greed of the nation.

The Populist party stands for the rights of the American people. It would not harm one legitimate interest that any legitimate corporation has in the country. It would not destroy proper corporations, as the Senator from Connecticut seems to infer it would if in power, but it would treat all corporations and all individuals alike, so far as the nature of the two admits of their being treated alike, restraining corporations from invading legislative halls, restraining them from purchasing members of the Legislatures of some of the States, preventing them from using money in corrupting State and national legislation. Sir, if that is wrong, if the Populist party is to be condemned because it condemns conduct of that character, because it would restrain corporations from purchasing legislation, then that party should be condemned; not otherwise.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me for a moment? Does not the Senator know that years before the Populist party was ever thought of, there were laws upon the statute books of the respective States against the bribery of State legislators on the question of the election of United States Senators and all other propositions?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, Mr. President, I knew that quite well, but I do not see its pertinency.

Mr. HILL. I think it is very pertinent.

Mr. ALLEN. I discovered that quite as early as the Senator from New York discovered it.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator to say that one of the great missions of the Populist party is to prevent those things being done, by the enactment of laws which would prevent it, and I simply pointed out the pertinent fact that laws sufficient for that purpose were upon the statute books long before your party was ever thought of.

Mr. ALLEN. Then you misunderstood me if you understood anything of that kind. I said that the corporations of which I am speaking have beaten down laws of that kind and disregarded them; that the laws have become inefficient; that they have been overridden by these corporations and that legislative bodies have been bought up and corrupted. I repeat, sir, that the people of this country believe this to be true. How long ago has it been since it was reported in the newspapers of this country that in a certain legislative hall in a certain State of this Union where a United States Senator was being elected by a joint convention of the Legislature express envelopes in which money came were found opened and lying upon the floor after adjournment, thereby leaving the inference that money had been taken literally into that legislative body, and members of the Legislature corrupted with it.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me to inquire where was that?

Mr. ALLEN. Now, I do not think I will tell the Senator exactly where it was at this time.

Mr. HILL. If there was any such scheme enacted anywhere in this country, and any United States Senator sits here who was elected by any such means, the Senator from Nebraska instead of making complaint should have an inquiry and let the thing be investigated, and not indulge the country these vague insinuations, and when asked to point it out decline to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. The man who was elected by that Legislature is not in the Senate of the United States to-day. The Senator from New York has no occasion to grow so apparently indignant about this matter. If he were reading the newspapers at that time he saw the statement. This is not a revelation, made for the first time. It was published throughout the length and breadth of the country at the time it was said to have happened.

Mr. HILL. I do not know to whom the Senator refers.

Mr. ALLEN. The New York papers and papers of the West and South gave a full account of the transaction at the time.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me? I do not know to whom the Senator refers. I do not recollect any such circumstance. It seems to me that if any such reports were spread broadcast they were investigated at the time and unquestionably exploded. I do not believe that there has been any period in our history when the Senate has permitted any such men to occupy seats on this floor. If the Senator can oblige the country and oblige the Senate by naming such an instance possibly I can name the answer to it.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York understands as well as I do that charges of that kind were made throughout the press. If he does not he is ignorant of the newspaper literature of four years ago. It was charged in the press of the country throughout the length and breadth of the nation. Now, whether it was true or not the Senator from New York will not get me to state, for personally I do not know. I only know that the charge was made at the time and is quite generally believed.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator think it fair to the Senate and to the people of this country to make a statement of that kind, to spread it broadcast before the land, and then not himself, if he has any confidence in those charges, proceed to investigate them?

Mr. ALLEN. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from New York certainly must look upon me in a peculiar light. I am not plastic material to be molded by him.

Mr. HILL. I do—in rather a peculiar light.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator can not get me to make a statement that some particular member had purchased a place in the Senate when I do not absolutely know it to be true, and if he were fair in his treatment he would not attempt to do so.

Mr. HILL. That is precisely what you intended by your insinuation.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator will never get me to do so; and I have not made an insinuation.

Mr. HILL. I do object to the Senator doing by insinuation what he does not seem to dare do directly.

Mr. ALLEN. I have not charged what the Senator from New York says I have charged.

Mr. HILL. But you have said——

Mr. ALLEN. Wait a moment. I had not charged that any man has purchased a seat in this Chamber. I say the newspapers at the time said a certain Senator had purchased his seat in this Chamber. I say so now.

Mr. HILL. The newspapers say a great deal that is not true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLANCHARD in the chair). Senators must address the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. I say so now, and I say if the Senator from New York did not read or hear that report, which was published from one end of the land to another, he is the only man in the Chamber who did not. I have nothing to take back. I stand by what I have said.

Mr. President, if I had the evidence in my possession I would not hesitate to make the charges against any man alive. I do not care who he is, but I speak of this case in this manner because it was current throughout the nation at the time, and because, I say, that thousands of people in this country believe the charge to be true, and I may add that I believe it to be true also. That, sir, is what I am speaking of when I say the people of this country look upon Congress with some degree of suspicion, and they have a right to do so.

Now, I will make a charge for the benefit of the Senator from New York that I am prepared to prove, and I will go into court and prove it if need be. At the very day, or the day after Coxey and his unfortunate followers were taken to the common jail of this District, for tresspassing on the grass of these Capitol grounds a certain railroad magnate of the United States was in a committee room at the other end of the Capitol, guarded by an officer of this Government, and sending into the House of Representatives to get Representatives to come to see him that he might tell them what he would do with reference to certain of the Pacific roads.

That, sir, occurred in a committee room of this Capitol. He sat there as an autocrat. He sat there with a guard over him, a guard in the committee room, and in the pay of the Government. No man was permitted to enter that room at that time except as he was sent for by this man, and they were members of Congress. Now, if you want proof of that I will give it to you. What was he there for, Mr. President? He was there to procure legislation regarding the Pacific roads by which this Government is to be buncoed out of a hundred million dollars if the scheme can be passed through Congress. The same day you sent these poor friendless devils to the jail for trespassing upon the grass, in a disgraced and shamed condition, that lordly railroad autocrat sat at the other end of this building, in one of the committee rooms of the national Capitol, undertaking to dictate terms to a committee of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Nebraska name him?

Mr. ALLEN. I will name him to a committee if it is necessary.

Mr. President, I have no desire to indulge in matters of this kind to an unnecessary or improper extent, but the situation calls for the truth. I could name other instances, but I speak of this simply for the purpose of proving that a great many of the people of this country believe, and I think they rightly believe, that these great moneyed institutions are reaching their hands imperceptibly but surely into the Senate and House of Representatives, and smothering, enacting, or defeating legislation at their own will.

Now, the revelation goes out to the people of this country that the onward march of this power is to be taken up into the Supreme Court room to seize the Chief Justice and associate justices, that the court is to be reconstructed and overturn the holdings of a century, and that the great principle of constitutional law which met the approval of Marshall and the long line of illustrious jurists who have occupied the Supreme Bench is to be overturned and revolutionized and changed by a court either now constructed or to be constructed. That is what we are told.

I hold in my hand the cases to which I have referred, but I will not now do more than give the dates and pages where the decisions may be found. The case of Hylton, plaintiff in error, against the United States, defendant in error, was decided at the February term, 1796, and will be found on page 171 of 3 Dallas, United States Supreme Court Reports. It is a decision that stands to-day, and that has been the law throughout the history of this country to this time. Yet we are gravely told that it is to be overturned by the court. Then I call attention to the case of Springer vs. The United States, 102 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 586. Now, let us see what the court decided upon the question of a tax of this character, it being charged to be a direct tax, and therefore a violation of the Constitution:

> Direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution—

> are only capitation taxes as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate.

The tax that was levied upon Mr. Springer's income under the law of 1861 or 1862 was levied under the Morrill tariff act, and was held to be constitutional, and the law was enforced against the property of Mr. Springer, and his property was sold in payment of it and the title sustained in the purchaser. The point was made there, and argued at great length, that the tax was a direct tax, and therefore in violation of the Constitution; and the court held, Mr. Justice Swayne delivering the opinion, without dissent, in accordance with the Hylton case and three preceding cases where the rule had not been questioned, that the tax was lawful and the act not in violation of the Constitution. It was held that the law was not a violation of the Constitution inhibiting direct taxation, and therefore requiring apportionment among the States.

So, Mr. President, when the Senator from New York intimates that there is any question about the constitutionality of the income tax, when the Senator from Massachusetts intimates that there is question about these decisions covering the point of all income-tax laws, I say that if the Supreme Court of the United States are to be believed, the question was settled nearly one hundred years ago, and has not been disputed in this Chamber until within the last few days.

But, Mr. President, the tax is iniquitous and inquisitorial, it is said; that it compels the man who is taxed to tell the truth, and that is objected to. I saw a short time ago in one of the leading papers of New York City an article written by Ward McAllister upon the subject of the income tax. Mr. McAllister's occupation seems to be that of telling the ultra fashionable ladies of the city of New York whether they should put barnyard fowl or roast beef on their tables first, and he draws a large salary, I am told, for it. Ward McAllister gravely informed the Populist ragtag and bobtail element of this country, as he calls them, that if the income tax is imposed upon the people of New York they will leave the country. They will not pay it; they will go over to Europe, where their surroundings are more congenial, to escape taxation. They will leave the country.

Ward McAllister himself, I suppose, will leave us. He will take to his heels and flee the country because the demands of the nation require him to contribute a little of his own income to support the Government. If there is any citizen of the United States whose sense of obligation to his country is so small, who sees in its noblest history nothing to challenge his admiration, who sees nothing in the story of the Stars and Stripes to inspire patriotism in his breast, and who prefers to flee the country rather than to pay his honest taxes, then as one citizen of this country I say, may his flight from the United States be speedy and his stay be perpetual. We do not need men of that kind in this country. We do not want them here. They are a curse to the country, and the sooner they leave and the longer they stay the better off we shall be.

It is said that some persons will lie if we pass a law of this kind. I suppose some Senators will say that the income law ought to be entitled, "An act to encourage liars," that we will make some man commit perjury to save his property, in escaping his just proportion of the burdens of this nation. Is it possible that there is any American citizen to-day whose sense of manhood is so small, whose sense of obligation to his country is so infinitesimal that he would commit perjury in the sight of his God to escape his just portion of taxation? Sir, I do not believe it.

Suppose a man predisposed to larceny should say, "You ought not to pass a law against larceny, because I have to commit larceny, and therefore I will break the law; you ought not to put any temptation in my road; you should permit me to steal without inflicting any penalty upon me. If you pass a law against larceny, the result will be that I will have to violate it, and therefore I will have to suffer in consequence." What man would listen to an argument of that kind?

It can be said with reference to every law, State and national, that you should not pass it because some man will violate it and be punished as a violator, and that therefore it should not be enacted. The reverse of this is true. You pass laws for the express purpose of restraining men from the commission of crime, and you prescribe penalties for the purpose of restrain-ing violations of acts of Congress and of State Legislatures. This is the purpose of the enactment of a statute.

Now, we are told that this proposed act, if it is passed and becomes a law, will cause many men in this country to violate it by secreting the truth from the assessors of revenue. It is said that it is inquisitorial; that it inquires into a man's business too closely. Let me read to you how they get at taxes in the city of New York. I have some of the official schedules of New York State and New York City. The first one I propose to read is an affidavit which a shareholder in a bank is required to make when assessed for taxation.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
City of New York, ss:

——— ——— being duly sworn, deposes and says, that on the second Monday of January, 189—, he resided in ———, and was the owner of the following described shares of stock:

Shares.	Banks.	Assessed value.
	Shares in all, assessed at a total value of	$

That the full value of all the personal property, exclusive of said bank shares owned by deponent (and not exempt by law from taxation) on the second Monday of January, 189—, did not exceed $———; that the just debts owing by deponent on said date amounted to $———, and that no portion of such debts has been deducted from the assessment of any personal property of the deponent other than said bank shares, or has been used as an offset in the adjustment of any assessment for personal property, whether in this or in any other county or State, for the year 189—, or incurred in the purchase of nontaxable property or securities, or for the purpose of evading taxation.

The affidavit is to be signed by the holder of stock, and he is required to swear to it.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this — day of ———, 189—.

——— ———,
Commissioner of Taxes and Assessments.

Now, it strikes me that that is a little inquisitorial, and yet it is the State law of New York. The holder is required to take that oath. That blank comes from the city of New York, from the office of the City Chamberlain. There the holder of the shares in a bank is required to state the number of his shares in the bank and their value, and is required to take an oath which reveals the true state of affairs. I read another, being the statement to be made by officers of resident corporations.

CITY OF NEW YORK.

DEPARTMENT OF TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS,
Commissioners' Office, Stewart Building, 280 Broadway.

Please state the full name of the corporation.

Statement made and delivered to the commissioners of taxes and assessments of the city and county of New York, for and in behalf of the ———, showing its condition for the purpose of assessment, on the second Monday of January, 1894:

Total gross assets	$
Capital stock actually paid in, or secured to be paid in Amount of surplus earnings
Rate of dividend for last year, or last annual dividend

Indebtedness in detail, as follows: ———.

Has any portion of above indebtedness been contracted or incurred in the purchase of nontaxable property or securities, or for the purpose of evading taxation?

Assessed value of real estate, describing particularly by ward and ward map numbers: ———.

Amount invested in the stocks of other corporations which are taxed upon their capital	$
Amount invested in United States securities

[If the stock of the company is worth less than par, state the actual value, and give the facts under oath which will justify such estimate of its value]: ———

The principal office or the place of transacting the financial business of the said corporation is situated in the —— ward of the city of New York, at No. —— ——— street.

CITY OF NEW YORK, ss:

I, ——— ———, the ——— of said corporation, being duly sworn, do hereby certify and declare that the foregoing statement is in all respects just and true.

——— ———.

Sworn to before me this —— day of ———, 1894.

The Commissioners are empowered to examine, under oath, the person representing the corporation, if they deem it necessary, to obtain any fuller or further particulars as to its property or condition.

That also is required to be sworn to.

Mr. President, the income tax now under consideration, it is said, will be inquisitorial; that it will require the people who are properly taxable to disclose their business, and that, therefore, it will work injury and injustice to that class of people. What can be more inquisitorial than a law which requires the swearing to a schedule of the character I have read? It is inconceivable for any revenue officer of this Government, acting properly under the statute under the proposed income tax, to construct schedules which will be as inquisitorial as these. Yet we are told by every Senator who has spoken on this question in opposition to the income tax that it is perfectly proper for the States to tax these corporations and ndividuals, and require of them schedules such as are in common use. The corporation must give its total assets.

By the returns I have read, corporations are required to give the capital stock actually paid or secured to be paid in. The law which we propose to enact does not require anything of that kind. Again, under the returns which I have quoted, the amount of surplus earnings must be stated, the rate of dividend for the last year, or the last annual dividend, and the indebtedness in detail of the corporation.

Mr. President, every corporation in the city of New York and the State of New York is required to return a schedule of this kind annually. So, sir, if the corporations tell the truth, the assessor of revenue under the proposed act can go to the proper officer and get the schedule and make his assessment against them without ever exacting an oath or without ever making a personal inquiry of one of them. The argument that an income tax is inquisitorial, that it inquires into the private business of the citizen, disappears under the fact that this very information itself in an intensified degree is brought out under the State law.

Mr. President, that is not all. In the city of New York they have a statement to be made by a nonresident corporation, which I will read:

CITY OF NEW YORK.

DEPARTMENT OF TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS,
Commissioners' Office, Stewart Building, 280 Broadway.

Please state the full name of the corporation.

Statement made and delivered to the commissioners of taxes and assessments of the city and county of New York, for and in behalf of the ——— showing its condition for the purpose of assessment, on the second Monday of January, 189—.

The company named in this statement is an organization under the laws of the State of ———, having its principal office at ———. The amount of the capital it has invested in business in the city of New York, including the value of its office furniture, safe, samples, fixtures, money in bank and otherwise used in business, will not exceed the sum of $———.

Has any indebtedness been contracted or incurred in the purchase of nontaxable property or securities, or for the purpose of evading taxation? ———

Office in the city of New York, ——— street.

Is the company assessed by the State comptroller; and, if so, for what amount? ———.

CITY OF NEW YORK, ss:

I, ——— ———, the ——— of the said corporation, being duly sworn, say that the foregoing statement is in all respects just and true.

Sworn before me, this —— day of ———, 189—.

The commissioners are empowered to examine, under oath, the person representing the corporation, if they deem it necessary, to obtain any fuller or further particulars as to its property or condition.

The oath, it will be seen, requires the nonresident corporation to show what property and assets it has in the city of New York subject to taxation under the laws of the State, and to do so with much more fullness than any schedule would require which could be named under the proposed act. Still, that is not all. I come now to the personal property blank used in the State of Connecticut in the matter of the assessment of taxes.

Write your name and address on line below.

Taxable list of ——— ——— for 1892.

Sworn to before me,

—— ——, { Notary Public. / Com. Superior Court. / Justice of the Peace.

Remember that the law requires that every taxpayer shall hand in a sworn list of all property owned on the 1st day of October, 1892; said return to be made on or before the 1st day of November, 1892, after which the assessors will, according to the requirements of law, make a list of all so neglecting or refusing, and add thereto the sum of 10 per cent, from which no appeal can be made or deductions for indebtedness.

GEORGE W. NEAL,
WILLIAM SHANNON,
CHARLES SPREYER,
CHARLES A. BALDWIN,
EDWARD F. MERRILL,
Assessors.

Watches, diamonds, jewelry, and pianos are taxable.

The blank goes through the entire list of taxable property, and requires the citizen to make oath to everything he has upon the face of the earth which is taxable, revealing every solitary fact which would be essential to be revealed in enforcing the income tax which is proposed by the pending bill. When it is declared that the income tax is inquisitorial, the statement is refuted completely by the system of taxing in the States. I cite these schedules from the States of New York and Connecticut because it is said that a large portion of the money derived from the income tax, or the most of it, will come from the Eastern States.

I do not cite them because they are exceptional, for I assert there is not a State or a Territory in this Union where a schedule substantially of the same kind is not required of the citizen. He is required to list his property, that which is exempt as well as that which is not exempt. He is required to list the stocks and bonds in corporations and banks which he owns. He is required to list his mortgages and his money. He is required to list all these things under the State law. Now, is it any greater strain upon his conscience to disclose the truth in behalf of the nation than in behalf of the State?

Sir, such an argument is a mere pretext, a subterfuge to escape honest taxation. If any one is inquisitorial, the State authorities are inquisitorial. This is in substance the same process which is employed in every State and Territory in this Union.

I will here insert the notices sent to residents of New York and to nonresident property owners of that State:

FLOYD T. SMITH, Secretary.

NOTICE.—No deduction allowed for or on account of debts contracted in purchase of nontaxable securities, or incurred for the purpose of evading taxation. Chap. 202, Laws of 1892.

Mr. President, it is said that an income tax is unjust and sectional. It is sectional because the people of a certain section of this country have the greatest number of incomes which are taxable or the greatest aggregate amount of taxable incomes. It is not sectional to make a man perform his duty to his country, wherever he may be. A man who lives in the State of Maine is not entitled to any more consideration than a man who lives in Louisiana or Texas. He is entitled to the same consideration, and to no more. He is an American citizen; no more, and no less. He is entitled to the same measure of protection and no more; and it will not do for him, when he is called upon to pay his portion of the public burden, to raise the cry that the law is sectional.

I am aware of the fact that I am consuming considerable time, but I propose to put some things in the RECORD which the country ought to know. The tariff bill can afford to lose one more day, if necessary, for the truth to be known to the country. The New York World is a pretty fair Democratic authority, I suppose. The Senator from New York will know more about that than I do.

Mr. HILL. The World is good Democratic authority on some things, and on some things it is the organ of the Populists. It does not seem to have very great weight with the Senate, because I observed that on Tuesday last it appealed to the friends of the income tax to listen to reason, and then it proceeded to advocate an increase of the exemption to $5,000. And the Senate turns right around this morning and proposes to reduce it to $3,000.

Mr. ALLEN. If the New York World is a Populist paper, I thank God that the lamp of light is being carried into the darkest part of this country on the question of Populism. It is really a hopeful sign to know that a great metropolitan journal like the New York World is carrying the living truth of Populism into Wall street, where it ought to be known for the benefit of the entire country. I welcome to the ranks of enlightened Populism the New York World. It is a sign to me that this doctrine, which will leaven the whole lump and which will take this country and administer to it in the next decade in the interest of the people and in a more enlightened and just manner than it has been administered for forty years, is gaining strength. I welcome this great journal to the Populist ranks. We are gaining strength daily.

But, Mr. President, the New York World, before it became a Populist paper, told the truth, too. Before it ever became a Populist paper it published a list of the men in the city of New York who possess fabulous fortunes. I suppose it got its information from the return of these schedules I have read. I will ask the Secretary to read the article I send up.

Mr. HILL. What is the date of the article?

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the secretary to read from a reprint in the National Watchman. The article is taken from the New York World of date February 11, 1894.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator know what is the date of the article from the World?

Mr. ALLEN. February 11, 1894.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have had this list read for the purpose of showing that in one city of the United States alone where the income tax operates to some extent there are fabulous fortunes, fortunes which, in my judgment, should bear their equitable and just proportion of taxation. I would not enact a law which would despoil these fortunes at all, nor would I by any kind of legislation take one cent from the persons holding these fortunes which they ought not to contribute to the Government. I repeat my denial of the assertion made upon this floor from time to time that there is a citizen of the United States belonging to the Populist party who would disturb or menace one dollar of these fortunes, whether they were honestly or dishonestly gained.

But I wish to assert at the same time and as a part of the same sentence that the Populist party would, if it had power, prevent the accumulation of these enormous fortunes, by hook and by crook, which to-day defy the Government and menace the peace and prosperity if not the permanency of the Government itself. I am not a socialist, sir. I have no sympathy with any class of people in this country who want to live without honest work for everything they get. I have not the slightest sympathy with any man who wants to confiscate fortunes, great or small. I have not the slightest sympathy with any man who goes through the world upon the supposition that the world owes him a living, regardless of whether he works for it or not.

I believe that every man who enjoys anything on this earth, who is in good health and who is compos mentis, ought to be able to say that it is the result of his honest energy and his honest work. If there is any law in this country, State or national, which permits a man to sit in his office in New York or Boston and take from the farmer of the State of Nebraska or the laboring man of the State of Nebraska a portion of his hard-earned money which the New York man or the Boston man is not entitled to, it is a law of confiscation and spoliation and is unjust; and I am against it and want it repealed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ALLEN. I always yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. What particular law would the Senator from Nebraska repeal?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York wants to know what particular law I would repeal. I think our trouble to-day is due as much to a failure to legislate properly as it is to improper legislation.

Mr. HILL. What particular law would the Senator enact, then?

Mr. ALLEN. I will tell the Senator of one law I should very quickly enact, and then I should like to hear from him. I should enact a law, for instance, by which Mr. Collis P. Huntington should not within twenty-five or thirty years make a colossal fortune out of the people of this country, through crooked legislation, regarding the Pacific Railroad systems. That is one law

I should enact. I should quit donating the public lands of this country to corporations. That is another law I should enact.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, I will ask whether anybody is doing it now?

Mr. ALLEN. Within the last thirty years, or since the railroad grant to the Illinois Central Railroad in 1855, possibly 1853.

Mr. ALLISON. Eighteen hundred and fifty.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it was May, 1853, if I recollect correctly, but I will stand corrected. Since that time there has been given away more of the public domain to corporations of that kind than is embraced in all New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio together.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. If I understand it correctly that was the legislation mainly of the Republican party, of which the Senator was an honored member and in which he remained a member fifteen or twenty years after that legislation was enacted.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York is unfortunate in his history. He would make a remarkable strong argument upon any question if the facts would bear him out. But this giving away of the public domain occurred under the Democratic party or started under the Democratic party. The Democratic party was in power when the Illinois Central Railroad grant was passed, by which hundreds of thousands of acres were given away. The mania seized the Democratic party to give away the public domain. The Democratic party started it, but the Republican party continued it; and they have given away millions and millions of acres of the finest land in this country.

Mr. HILL. In 1853 was the land given to the railroad companies or to the States?

Mr. ALLEN. A great portion of it was given to the States for the purpose of granting it to the railroads; and some was given direct to the railroads themselves.

Mr. HILL. The States could do as they pleased with it.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I will state that no land grant ever passed by a Democratic Congress was made to a corporation. The grants were always made to the States.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere in this adjustment, but I desire to state my recollection as respects these land grants. They were begun in 1850, I think, by the Democratic party, or the party then in power, and were continued in 1856——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, they were begun a little later than 1850, because Mr. Sumner came into public life on the 4th of March, 1851, and he made his first speech in favor of the first land grant.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Iowa will allow me to correct a little bit of the history of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. If I can have an opportunity of stating my little bit of history, I shall be glad to be corrected if I am mistaken.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply wish to correct one statement. Gen. Taylor was elected President in 1848 and was inaugurated in 1849, and for four years thereafter it was not the Democratic party, but the opposing party which administered the affairs of this country. In 1850 I chanced to have been a member of the House of Representatives, and so far as the Democratic party and the opposing party were concerned, that House was composed of 115 to 115, with a Whig Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank my venerable friend for correcting me as to that.

Mr. HARRIS. Emphasize the "venerable."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield to me just a moment further.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps I was misled for the moment, for I remembered that the Illinois Central land grant was championed by Mr. Stephen A. Douglas and received the united support of every Southern Senator, whether Whig or Democrat. It extended from a place opposite where I now reside to the city of Mobile, in Alabama. During the period between 1850 and 1860 the Southern States were gridironed with land grants, which received the support of every Southern Senator and most of the Northern Senators.

The policy of the land-grant system at that time (and I do not wish either to commend it or to disapprove of it at this moment; I only speak of it historically) was to grant alternate sections on the part of the Government and charge the settlers or occupants of the other alternate sections double minimum price for the land. The whole argument and theory upon which those grants were made was that it was for the benefit of those who occupied the distant prairie regions, and the Government was not expected to lose one dollar by giving away the alternate sections and receiving double minimum price for the other alternate sections.

If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me a word more, I will state, in response to my friend from Mississippi, that it is true when the Union Pacific Railroad land grant was made in 1862 the territory over which the grant was made, including the State in which the Senator from Nebraska now resides, was practically a wilderness. There was no State organization and very little Territorial organization embracing that whole region, so that the grants had to be made to the corporations or not be made at all.

Mr. GEORGE. By the courtesy of the Senator from Nebraska I desire to make a statement in reference to these land grants. It may be of some use to the Senate. From the foundation of the Government up to the year 1860 about 30,000,000 acres of land were granted by Congress for the purpose of internal improvements, railroads, and canals. In every instance the grant was made to the State. After 1860, when the Democratic party was no longer in control of the Government, up to a time embracing, I believe, a period of about fourteen years, the Republican party granted 180,000,000 acres of the public domain for railroads, or an area about five or six times as large as the State of Indiana. The Democrats granted six sections per mile; the Republicans granted ten and twenty sections per mile. In addition, I may say that they granted about $60,000,000 of bonds of the United States for two railroads across the continent.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi states, as I understand, that the Democratic party always made grants of land to the States and not to the railroad companies.

Mr. GEORGE. Always.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Where is the Republican party, as he states, made the grants direct to the corporations or the companies. I wish the Senator from Mississippi to state whether he knows of a single instance in which, through the influence of the Democratic party, a grant was made to a State where a corporation did not eventually get the benefit of it.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer the question. I understand that the grant by Congress to the State of Illinois for the Illinois Central Railroad was so disposed of by the State of Illinois to that railroad that the State gets a certain percentage of the gross earnings of the road. The Senator from Iowa can state whether or not that is right. I understand, in addition to that, and the Senator can correct me if I am wrong, that a very large sum is paid into the State treasury of Illinois every year by virtue of the reservation by the State of a portion of the gross proceeds of their land grant to the Illinois Central Railroad.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask one other question, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the Senator from Iowa answer and see whether I am correct.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I will state that the State of Illinois, having this grant, granted it in turn to the Illinois Central Railroad Company on the condition that 7 per cent of the gross earnings for all future time should be paid into the treasury of the State of Illinois.

Mr. GEORGE. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. And the people of the State of Iowa have been paying a large portion of that income for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sorry for the people of Iowa.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think the Senator from Nebraska will allow me to ask one more question.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I can not do it. I can not have my remarks interrupted further by this colloquy.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly I should be permitted to ask one more question after the statement of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask merely one question.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not yield to the Senators to go into the question they desire to discuss.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe I have not interrupted the Senator from Nebraska in any of his remarks——

Mr. ALLEN. It would interrupt me to have the Senator from Illinois talk now.

Mr. CULLOM. And I only wish to make a statement of the exact facts with relation to the State of Illinos and the Illinois Central Railroad, so far as concerns the land grant.

Mr. ALLEN. This matter can come up at some other time.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I do. I did not yield for the purpose of discussing the entire history of the land-grant system in this country. I simply said that one of the laws which I should pass would be one to prohibit granting any more of the public domain in the nature of subsidies to railroads or other corporations. I should have every acre of the public domain held sacred for actual settlement by actual settlers in this country. That is one thing I should do; that is one law I should pass. Then, to answer the Senator from New York further, I should pass a law by which no corporation doing an interstate business, as many of these great railroads are, should overcapitalize or recapitalize itself and issue watered stocks and bonds to drain the fields and mines of this country of their wealth, as they have been doing for a quarter of a century past. I should pass and rigidly enforce a law of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. May I interrupt the Senator just to correct a little statement, or rather to enforce the statement he is making? What he says he would do now was done by Congress in 1872, and since that time no lands have been granted to any railway company or to any State for any railway company.

Mr. ALLEN. I am speaking now of the question of capitalization. I will make this statement, and it is capable of proof, that at least three of the great transcontinental railroad companies, which are doing an interstate business in this country, I might say five of them, the greatest railroads in the United States, are capitalized at 50 per cent more than the actual money paid in.

Now, what does that mean to the people of this country? It means that the farmers and producers of this country are compelled to pay interest and earnings upon the capital stock of these corporations at 3 or 4 per cent per annum upon pure, absolute water. By that means these corporations are reaching out into the wheat fields and corn fields in my State and Kansas and all the great grain-growing States and robbing the people of a portion of their money. That is another law I should pass. I wish to see if there is a Senator in this Chamber who will stand up here and undertake to justify that kind of business, who will say that it is not perfectly proper for this Government to take the commerce clause of the Constitution and upon it base a proper law prohibiting the overcapitalization of corporations, thus preventing them from robbing the people of the country. I should pass that kind of a law.

I would by that means save to the people of this country millions upon millions of dollars annually, which are now taken from them by this system of legalized robbery. But the moment you do that, the moment any Senator stands in this Chamber and raises his voice in behalf of the producers of this country and against that system of spoliation and robbery, that moment some Senator gravely rises in his place and says, "Oh, that is Populism," and therefore unpopular. Or, if he does not do that, he classifies every Populist as an agitator and himself as a conservative statesman!

This country is suffering more to-day from the so-called conservatism in business circles—which means simply the do-nothing policy, for that is all it is—than it is from any form of agitation. Conservatism, as these so-called "conservatives" interpret it, means rust; it means decay; it means stagnation; it means let things go as they will regardless of the consequences. Agitation, rightly interpreted, means life, energy, progress, justice eventually, if pursued in the proper spirit and with the proper motives and intelligence. I have no patience with these self-asserting conservative persons who hide injustice and cupidity under assumed conservatism.

Mr. President, I did not have the list of millionaires in the city of New York read for the purpose of saying one harsh word of them. They have their fortunes, whether they were honestly earned or not, and I care not, so far as I am concerned, how they were obtained. But I should pass another law which would prohibit the building up of fortunes like those in the manner some of them were made by their owners. I would have every man who earns a fortune be able to face the world and say: "This fortune is the result of my own industry, honesty, and labor, and is not the accumulated earnings of thousands of my fellow-citizens throughout the land, which I have been able to reap by vicious or rotten legislation, or in consequence of an overconservative Congress failing to legislate in the public interest."

I say let every one of those fortunes be held sacred, whether they were earned honestly or not; let every piece of property in this country be held sacred which is gained by honest means, but do not let us, under this cry of conservatism, suffer 20 per cent of the people of this country to own 80 per cent of the property and total wealth of the nation.

A few years ago—I think it was in 1890, or possibly in 1891—Mr. Blaine, in an article published in the North American Review in his discussion with Mr. Gladstone—made the assertion that less than 50,000 people of the United States owned over one-half of the total wealth of the nation. Less than 50,000 people own $30,000,000,000 of the $60,000,000,000 of property in this country, according to that great leader of the Republican party. The same year Mr. Thomas G. Shearman, in an article published in the Forum, declared that 30,000 people owned over one-half of the total wealth of the United States.

From many a stump ex-Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, reiterated the statement of Shearman that 30,000 people owned over one-half of the total wealth of this nation. Will any Senator stand at his desk in this Chamber and assert to the world that 30,000 men could, in a lifetime, by honest means accumulate one-half of the total wealth of a great nation of continental magnitude and proportions?

How many years will it be until the total wealth of this nation shall have passed into the hands of a very few thousand men, and the great masses of the people, male and female, become a vast agricultural and mining peasantry, practically slaves?

How long will it be until that deplorable event shall occur, if things are to go on as they are going on to-day? Yet, sir, if a Senator stands in the Senate of the United States and asserts these great truths, the batteries of the corporations, the batteries of the money power, are opened upon him, he is characterized as a Socialist, as a Populist, an anarchist perhaps, because he preaches the doctrine of the rights of the humble and the poor of his nation. No, sir, we would not disturb one of these fortunes. We would hold them sacred, but let no fortunes be accumulated after this which are not honestly accumulated.

Why do Senators refuse to have a reasonable tax put upon incomes? I see in this list two preachers of the gospel who have about $250,000 a year income. They are preaching the gospel of Christ; they are preaching the doctrine of peace on earth and good will to men, and yet they enjoy princely fortunes. Should they not pay an income tax? If the Senator from New York is a fair representative of their interests, they do not wish to be taxed upon their incomes.

Mr. CULLOM. How did the ministers referred to get those incomes?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know. I hope properly. They may have inherited them; they may have earned them in the pulpit; they may have earned them by speculation upon the stock exchange for aught I know—in sugar stock, or something of the kind.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought from the tone of the Senator's voice that he was attacking those two ministers because they had such incomes. I simply wanted to know how they got them.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Illinois did not think anything of the kind. He did not think I was attacking these men. I have distinctly told the Senate that I did not attack them or any other persons. The assertion is entirely gratuitous, when the Senator rises here and says I am attacking them.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not happen to have the honor of hearing the preliminary remark. I just chanced to hear the Senator talk about the enormous sums of which those two preachers had gotten possession. There seemed to be some feeling about it on his part, and I therefore very innocently asked him how they got the money.

Mr. ALLEN. How did the Senator come to think that I was attacking them if he did not hear?

Mr. CULLOM. The manner of the honorable Senator indicated that.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. I have seen the Senator from Illinois much more earnest at times than I am at this moment, and I never thought anything bad of him for it.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Nebraska was only attacking the ministers in a Pickwickian sense.

Mr. ALLEN. No. It is part and parcel of the policy of the Republican party to cast odium upon the Populist party and every man who represents it. It is a part and parcel of a systematic policy to bring that party and its representatives into disrepute. That was the inspiring motive of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I will state that I had not the slightest disposition or feeling to attack the Populist party, or the Senator either. I hope the Senator will not do me the injustice to say that I was attempting to cast a slur upon him or upon the party he represents.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the incident pass. It is of no consequence, anyway.

Mr. CULLOM. I think not.

Mr. ALLEN. But I wish to know why these great fortunes should not bear their portion of taxation. It is said that they are compelled to bear heavy taxes in the States. Is that not true of every citizen of the nation who has property? Does not the man who uses the plow in the field pay taxes upon his property and bear his ratable proportion of the public burden as well as these great fortune holders?

Every State and Territory in the Union recognizes the rule that equality of taxation consists in the taxing of property according to its value, and the contribution of property to the public tax fund according to its value, and nobody complains; and yet, sir, when we undertake to invoke this universal rule of the States and Territories, and the rule that exists in the District of Columbia itself, if I am correctly informed, and enforce it in national taxation, then this cry comes up that the tax is unjust, iniquitous, and inquisitorial.

Senators say they favor indirect taxation—indirect taxation to let these great fortunes go scotfree. They have been earned, it is true, in this country and under the laws of the country; the law has protected these individuals in the accumulation of their fortunes, protected their persons, protected their homes, protected their property, and it is protecting them to-day; and yet it is said that these tremendous fortunes should be permitted to escape national taxation because it is unjust and burdensome. The Senator from New York used that argument yesterday, and he used it a few months ago. Is it not perfectly proper and just that every man should pay according to the value of his property, according to the interest he has in the preservation of the Government, State and national?

Is it not perfectly proper that the same rule we recognize as just and right in State taxation, should be applied to national taxation? Certainly the rule is as just in the one case as in the other; but there must be some subterfuge invented by which these tremendous fortunes may escape taxation; and, therefore it is said, that the taxation that is levied in this country outside of war times should be the indirect customs tax of the Constitution.

But, Mr. President, what does that mean? It means simply that a poor man with an annual income of perhaps not to exceed $1,000 or $1,500, who has a family of five—a wife and three children—is compelled to pay through the operation of that indirect tax, as much to support the National Government as the man whose annual income is $7,000,000. Upon every article which that poor man and his family consume he is compelled to pay as much to support the National Government as the man with that tremendous fortune; and that, sir, according to the argument of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Connecticut, is equal and just taxation!

No, sir; it is the law of selfishness that prompts this argument. If these men can escape with their tremendous fortunes from bearing their portion of the national burden of taxation, they are perfectly willing that that burden shall rest upon the tax-ridden and upon the poverty stricken people of this country.

I heard a Senator say the other day in the discussion of this question that it was placing a tax upon prosperity to impose an income tax. Mr. President, where should you place it? If you do not place the burden of taxation ratably upon the prosperous, in God's name where would you rest it? Would you rest it upon the poverty stricken people of the nation, and make them bear the burden of taxation? Sir, for one I will not be guilty of such an act.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. HILL. The Senator a moment ago spoke very feelingly of the poor man with three small children, and I understood that he expressed the desire to aid that poor man in his struggle in life. I could point out to the Senator one way by which he might aid that poor man; and that is to give him free sugar, and yet the Senator voted to put a duty upon sugar.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if that should occur in a court room it would be called pettifogging. You can not put down a great question by a remark of that kind.

Mr. HILL. Whether it is pettifogging or not, I should like to hear the Senator's answer to it.

Mr. ALLEN. When the Senator from New York stands in this Chamber and says that the sugar tax is the only thing to be considered, I am sorry for him. He betrays more ignorance than I supposed he possessed.

Mr. HILL. I do not say that the sugar tax is the only thing to be considered, but I say it is one of the things to be considered.

Mr. ALLEN. I say it is surprising to me that the Senator should stand here wanting to know what the poor people of this country are going to do without sugar.

Mr. HILL. Of course, they can not live entirely upon sugar.

Mr. ALLEN. No; of course, they can not live entirely upon sugar. Then, why talk about the sugar question when it has no pertinency to the question under consideration?

Mr. HILL. Because sugar is one of the several articles that go to make up what a man lives on.

Mr. ALLEN. Why talk about free sugar for the poor man when he never has had free sugar since the day George Washington was made President? When Senators talk about giving the poor man free sugar, a thing that has never been, why not give him something else free that is equally, if not more important to him? If necessary, a man can get along without sugar. There are some of us in this Chamber who remember the days of the civil war when we had to get along without sugar, sometimes for months and sometimes for almost a year.

You can get along without sugar, but you can not catch the poor people of this country with that taffy argument much longer. They can not get along without clothing, fuel, shelter, and money. They must have something to shelter them from the blasts of winter, they must have homes; they must have clothing. The little bodies and the little hands and feet in this country must be clothed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the poor man were not compelled to pay an extra cent a pound on sugar, he might be enabled to buy clothing.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not want to tax sugar, and yet he is in favor of taxing the flannels and shoes that cover the little bodies, hands and feet of the children of this nation; and then the Senator talks about free sugar for people of that kind. Out upon such nonsense!

Mr. President, the people must have the absolute necessaries of life; they must have shoes and clothes, cheap they may be, and cheap they are, in consequence of their poverty, but they must have these things, yet the persons who talk about giving them free sugar, which is a falsity in its statement, tax these absolute necessaries of personal consumption almost 100 per cent when they have taxed the lumber that goes into the construction of the homes of the people, when they have taxed everything that they consume, everything that is to shelter them, everything that is to warm them, and the few pitiful coals which go into their stoves and their ranges, but we must give the poor people free sugar!

Now, the Senator wants to know why I voted for a tax on sugar, and I will tell him why I did it. I voted for a tax on sugar because when Benjamin Harrison left the Presidential chair he left a practically bankrupt nation; the $100,000,000 which had been accumulated under the previous Administration of the distinguished friend of the Senator from New York [laughter] had been absolutely depleted, and the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Foster, had gone to New York for the purpose of issuing bonds just a few days before the close of the Harrison Administration. Every prop that could be used was put under the recent Administration to hold it up until Cleveland and his party came into power, that the crumbling structure might not fall upon Harrison, and it was held by sheer force until Harrison went out and Cleveland came in.

I say this, and I am not a very strong friend of the present Administration, either.

What became of the $100,000,000 that Mr. Cleveland left in Treasury when he went out? In some form it disappeared, and all the tax money that was acumulated during the Administration of Mr. Harrison was paid out.

Mr. PLATT. Surely the Senator can not be in earnest in asking what became of the $100,000,000 which was in the Treasury when Mr. Cleveland went out, when the Senator must know the fact that during the Harrison Administration bonds of the Government were paid to the amount of $259,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes, I know that quite well; but I know that about one-fourth of that amount consisted of premiums paid upon those bonds; that nearly $25,000,000 of the $100,000,000 surplus went out in premiums upon the bonds.

Mr. PLATT. But I thought the Senator was inquiring where the money went. There was more than $200,000,000 paid upon the principal of the public debt.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not talking about the $200,000,000, but about the $100,000,000 surplus. I say that that was practically gone, and all of the proceeds of the taxes accumulated during the Cleveland Administration were practically wiped out, and about $25,000,000 of the sum was paid out in premiums upon bonds.

"We have got a little surplus in the Treasury of the United States," it was said, "and we can reduce the taxes upon the people. Will we do it? No. When we get rid of this surplus, what will we do? We will go down to New York City, and pay to the Shylocks there a premium upon their bonds and will take the money out of the Treasury, and pretty soon we shall have to issue more bonds."

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to put in a fact of history just there. The famous, or what I suppose the Senator would say the "infamous," but what I call the glorious McKinley law reduced taxation about $60,000,000, and perhaps overdid it a little.

Mr. ALLEN. It may have done so, but I do not believe it did.

Why was not that surplus money placed in a sinking fund and applied to the discharge of the national indebtedness as rapidly as it matured, and not to pay the fictitious prices fixed by Wall street as premiums upon these bonds?

I propose at the proper time to offer this proviso to the bill under consideration and to see how many Senators will vote for it:

Provided, That all surplus revenues derived by the Government under the provisions of this act shall be held as a sacred fund with which to pay the national indebtedness as rapidly as it matures.

Do you suppose that this amendment will get a majority of the votes here? Not at all. It will get a few, but it never will be permitted to pass the Senate; it will never be permitted to become the law of this land. Why? That would shut off the opportunity of Wall street to invade and loot the Treasury of any surplus that may arise under the operations of this bill. If you will take that surplus and put it in the Treasury Department as a sacred fund with which to discharge the national indebtedness as fast as it matures, you will cut off the possibility of the money sharks invading the Treasury Department and looting it again, and therefore this proviso will never be permitted to pass this body and become a law.

Mr. President, I insist that the argument made by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Connecticut that the income tax is unjust and inquisitorial is an argument which finds no support in logic or in reason. It is the argument of the man whose love of fortune is greater than his love of country. I would regard it as a glorious thing if I had an income to be taxed to enable me to contribute more to the support of this Government. I do contribute anyhow so far as I have anything on which to pay.

I should like to be able to say, if I had an honest income sufficiently large, that I pay my just proportion of the expenses of the Government burden of taxation, and instead of taking my money and fleeing the country, and deserting the flag of my nativity and my obligation to my country, in preference to discharging an honest obligation to the Government that fostered and protected me, I could contribute to the common fund of taxation.

No, sir; it is the argument of avarice; it is the argument of cupidity; it is the argument of the man who loves his lucre better than he loves his country, who wants to escape with his whole fortune, who wants to shirk his responsibility as a citizen, who wants to cast the burden of conducting the Government upon the poor and distressed and those least able to bear it.

That is the argument used here. True, it is not put in that language; it is not so prominently stated; but that is where all this subterfuge and rot that we hear about the income tax being inquisitorial and unjust leads to. It leads to the road by which the man who has a fortune may escape bearing his just proportion of the national burdens.

Mr. President, I propose to call the attention of the Senate a moment to a few significant facts. I will read an extract from an article in the Political Science Quarterly of December, 1893, entitled "The Concentration of Wealth," by Mr. George K. Holmes, of the Census Bureau.

Wealth distribution by classes.

1,440,000 farm-hiring families, worth $150 above debts of indefinite amount	$216,000,000
2.
752,760 families owning incumbered farms worth less than $5,000, deducting incumbrance and other debts of indefinite amount, and allowing $500 for additional wealth	1,359,741,600
1,756,440 families owning free farms worth less than $5,000, allowing $1,000 for additional wealth above debts of indefinite amount	5,309,589,600
4.
5,159,796 home-hiring families, worth $500 above debts of indefinite amount	2,579,898,000

That refers to those who hire their homes, who rent them.

720,618 families owning incumbered homes worth less than $5,000, deducting incumbrance and other debts of indefinite amount, and allowing $500 for additional wealth	1,142,531,550
6.
1,764,273 families owning free homes worth less than $500, allowing $2,000 for additional wealth above debts of indefinite amount	6,749,076,593
11,593,887 families worth	17,356,837,343

In other words and stated in other language, 91 per cent—just think of it—of the 12,000,000 families of the country own no more than about 29 per cent of the wealth and 9 per cent of the families own about 71 per cent of the wealth.

That is a startling statement. I believe it to be a true statement. It comes from an authentic source that 91 per cent of 12,000,000 families in the United States own only about 29 per per cent of the total wealth of the nation.

Mr. President, it can not be said that this is the result of improvidence upon the part of the great mass of the people, and excessive business acuteness, prosperity, and honesty upon the part of a few. It will not do to make that argument. It is untrue. The people will not believe it. Sir, it is in consequence of vicious legislation of the nation and the failure to legislate in the respects that will bring prosperity and justice to the homes of our people. I am not a believer in the doctrine that legislation will supply the necessity of brains or the necessity of labor; but I will say that it is the duty of this Government to keep the opportunities of life open to every American citizen equally with every other American citizen, and not suffer them to be foreclosed by legislation or by the accumulated circumstances which legislation ought, in the interest of justice, to remove.

Mr. President, the income tax is just; it is honest. No man is crying out against it in this country, except the man who is compelled to pay it. No other person says it is unjust. It is held to be a just system of taxation by our courts; it has been the law of every one of the States of the Union from its organization down to this moment, and no man has ever charged that it has worked unjustly in the States and Territories.

There is no other form of taxation there, and no one complains of it; but the moment the General Government says to certain citizens, "You must perform your part in bearing the national burdens as well as other American citizens," that moment, sir, they cry out that the tax is unjust, iniquitous, inquisitorial, and the like, and their advocates stand in this Chamber to re-echo the sentiments which echo in their offices in Wall street and elsewhere.

The American people are not asking anything that is unjust; the American people, and especially that portion of them who belong to the Populist party, which has been spoken of by the Senator from Connecticut, do not believe in putting a tax upon a corporation simply because it is a corporation. No man advocates that. When the Senator from Connecticut charges that to the Populist party he makes a grave mistake. No one believes in it. I would not put upon an honest corporation doing an honest business a burden that I would not put upon an individual under like circumstances—not one. When the honest corporations of this country perform an honest business, they need have no fear of the Populist party.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. I can not yield further. I am about through with my remarks.

When the corporations conduct their enterprises as pure business enterprises, when they keep their hands out of the politics of the State and of the nation, they need have no fear of any honest American citizen. They will be treated with perfect fairness and propriety. There is no prejudice against corporations per se in my section of the country or in any section of this Union of which I know anything.

It is only when these corporations undertake to control the legislative branches of the State or National Government that the people cry out against them. No, sir. Any business enterprise that is honest, whether it be associated capital in the form of a corporation, or in any of their various forms, will always meet with fair treatment on the part of the American people.

But, Mr. President, the great reason why these men and these corporations do not want to see the Populist party come into power is that the power which they use and abuse against the American people will be wrested from them and restored to the people where it rightfully belongs.

Mr. JARVIS. Mr. President, I dislike at this late hour of the evening to participate in this discussion, yet I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I express some thoughts in favor of this system of taxation.

I believe, sir, since the days of Horace to the present, in poetry and prose, by male and female, it has been sung that "It is sweet to die for one's country." Panegyrics have been pronounced upon those who have died for their country; monuments have been erected to them, and their memory held sacred; but I have never yet heard it said by anybody that it is sweet to be taxed for one's country. That seems to be a duty that men and sections feel at liberty to evade if possible. Men will go to war at their country's call, and risk and sacrifice their lives; but when it comes to meeting this duty and obligation of national taxation they and their property are ready to hide away.

The question that we are now discussing is simply and purely a question of taxation. There is, as every Senator knows, a certain amount of money to be raised for the support of the National Government, and I believe each year, as time rolls on, the amount to be raised increases rather than diminishes. Where and how shall that money be raised is the question.

The Senator from Ohio says put the burden on sugar. The Senators from New England say put it on manufactured goods. The Senator from New York, I believe, would say put at least a reasonable portion of it upon the cuffs and collars that the poor people wear.

Mr. President, my idea is that, in imposing these burdens of taxation, the heaviest burdens should be put upon those best able to bear them, and the least burdens upon those least able to bear them. If you are going to make any distinction in imposing these burdens upon any class of our people, those who strive and toil in the shop and in the field, the 80 per cent of people who, the Senator from New York says, own neither real nor personal property—I say if any class of our people are to be favored in our system of taxation, it does seem to me that they ought to be the favored class, because of their inability to bear the burdens.

Then they ought to be the favored class, because I believe it is this 80 per cent of people in this country, who have been delving in the mine and working in the shop and in the field, on the farm and in the factory, who are creating the wealth of the country. I know when the honor of our country is threatened it is from this 80 per cent of people without property that the soldiery will come which is to defend the honor and the glory of the country. So, I say, if any class of our fellow-citizens are to be favored, it does seem to me that they ought to be the favored class.

But we are told that this proposition to tax incomes is a sectional proposition. I will admit that it has been made sectional, and it has been made sectional by one little section of our common country. It is from one section of our country from which we see this opposition come, and I can properly describe that section by saying that it lies east of the Alleghany Mountains and north of the Potomac River. I do not mean to say that every man in that territory is opposed to this proposition to tax incomes, nor do I mean to say that everybody outside of that territory is favoring this proposition; but I say that the advocates of that proposition living within that territory are few, and the opposition, so far as I know, of people living outside of that territory is feeble. All the great newspapers in that territory are thundering against it. The Senator from New York, as the mouthpiece of that sentiment, occupied hours of the time of this Senate thundering against it.

That section of the country, Mr. President, occupies a unique and peculiar position. It embraces, I believe, only about 6 per cent of our entire territory, and yet it contains 35 per cent of all the wealth of this entire country. It embraces 47 per cent of all the banking capital of this country; and I heard the Senator from Massachusetts tell us that in his own State even the laborers, the common laboring people, had in the savings banks hundreds of millions of dollars. How comes it that this little section of our country, embracing only about 6 per cent of the area of our country, has within it so much of the wealth and so much of the capital of this country?

I want to give the people living in that territory credit for being intelligent, economical, industrious, full of energy, full of perseverance, and setting up a helpful and proper example to the balance of the country in these respects. Yet they are no more industrious and hard-working than the people of other sections. But it comes about, in my opinion, because they have enjoyed in a peculiar degree the advantages of class legislation. With a great tariff wall behind them, they have sent their manufactured products out over all this great country of ours, all the merchants of the country have been instrumental in gathering up here and there, little by little it may be, but for thirty years under this legislation they have been gathering and bringing this wealth home into their territory.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JARVIS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator whether, during all that time, North Carolina has not had greater advantages for doing the same thing?

Mr. JARVIS. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. They have raised the cotton close at hand, they have their streams and their abundant water power, and they are very much nearer iron and coal than we are. What advantage have we had that they have not had?

Mr. JARVIS. Mr. President, I shall answer that question very briefly. We were complete wrecks at the close of the war. You had your splendid factories then open and in progress. In natural advantages North Carolina, and Georgia, and Alabama are not only equal but are far superior to Massachusetts and the other New England States. The day may come by and by when North Carolina, and Georgia, and the other Southern States, and the Western States will be the equal of those other States in prosperity and in property. I trust that it soon may come.

I would not, Mr. President, take from New England or New York one dollar of their prosperity or rob them of one ray of their glory; but what I stand here and ask for is that the people who are thus fortunately situated and have these great accumulated fortunes shall bear their just proportions of the burdens of the Government, under whose laws they have been able to accumulate these great fortunes.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me? I do not wish to interrupt the Senator's argument, and I shall endeavor not to do so again?

Mr. JARVIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator cited what either I or my colleague or both of us said about the $400,000,000 in the savings banks of Massachusetts. Those $400,000,000 are the property of 1,260,000 depositors, or thereabouts, I have not the fractions. So they represent deposits of $360 apiece by the depositors. They are not the great fortunes of which the Senator speaks. The framers of this income-tax provision have respected the suggestion made by my colleague and myself, because they propose to exempt incomes under $5,000 when they are not in corporate hands, and I think the committee themselves have agreed to exempt the savings banks where they are banks merely of deposit.

So the argument which the Senator is making of this accumulation of $400,000,000 by the working people of Massachusetts, 1,260,000 of them having $360 apiece in the savings banks, is an argument which nobody is now adhering to, unless the Senator still adheres to it.

Mr. JARVIS. But here is the fact: The Senator himself admits that he lives in a country and in a section which is so fortunately situated, and which has had the enjoyment of a peculiar kind of legislation, that the laborers of that State alone have a bank account of $400,000,000.

Mr. President, in the section of country from which I come not only the laborers have no bank account, but if the farmers at the end of the year can possibly get both ends together they are peculiarly fortunate; yet on every proposition which has been made here during the progress of this bill to take some of the burdens from those people of North Carolina and the other agricultural States who have no bank account, and to leave in their pockets a little of the money which has been gathered up year by year, and month by month, and day by day, and which has been carried into the banks of New England, the Senator has stood here with all his might and energy and fought.

Mr. President, it has been my fortune to stand upon the deck of a great ship as it ascended the great Amazon River. When we entered that river, looking far to the south, no land could be seen, looking far to the north no land could be seen; yet if you pursued it 3,000 miles up you came to the source of that great river. All along for 3,000 miles on the eastern slope of the Andes, in Peru and Brazil and Bolivia, little streams were coming up from the mountain sides and from the earth, that flowed on and on, each converging and directing its course to the other, until by and by they united in the waters of that great river and formed a great sea upon which the navies of the civilized world might meet, maneuver, and fight out ther battles and have room to spare.

So, for twenty-five years, North Carolina and South Carolina and all the Southern States and all the Western States have been flowing their money steadily for the purchase of manufactured goods from this favored territory. On and on the stream has flowed, until we see in this little corner of our great country, having only about 6 per cent of its area, nearly one-half of the accumulated wealth of the country.

When we come and ask our friends in that section to tear down, or at least to lower this wall of protection, so that the people living in other sections may have their goods cheaper, they say "nay;" when we come and ask them to unloose the tight strings of the money purse, they say "nay;" when we come and ask them to shoulder a fair proportion of the burdens of taxation, they say "nay;" when we come and ask the Senators representing that section to take from the farmer and the laborer some of the burdens of taxation and put it upon the accumulated wealth of the country, the Senator from New York rises in his place and says that is an iniquitous proposition; it is an inquisitorial proposition.

Mr. President, it may be inquisitorial, or it may not. I undertake to say that it will never be inquisitorial to those who honestly comply with the law. If there is any inquisition instituted, it will only be for those who seek to evade the law; and I submit that they are not entitled to the sympathies of the Senate.

Ah; but, says the Senator from New York, this is undemocratic, and he warns us that we are incorporating into the pending bill a provision which will sound the death knell of the Democratic party. Mr. President, after fifty-eight years of life in that party, and after thirty years of faithful service in that party, I undertake to say that if it has no higher mission than to bow at the footstool and worship at the shrine of the accumulated wealth of this country, the sooner it dies the better. [Applause in the galleries,]

The Vice-President rapped with his gavel.

Mr. JARVIS. Mr. President, as I understand Democracy it means sympathy with the struggling people of this country; as I understand Democracy it undertakes to protect the property of the country; but at the same time it goes out into the highways and into the byways, and puts its great arms around the laboring people, who create the wealth of the country, and undertakes to lift them up into a higher and a better life.

I thank God, for one, that the Democratic party to-day is in the hands of those who have the courage to take some of the burdens from the people and put them upon the accumulated wealth of the country, and instead of this bill sounding the death knell of the Democratic party, I believe it is but the first step onward to a higher prosperity and a more glorious career. If it shall only have the courage to move farther on the line which has been selected, I believe, instead of our Republican friends in 1897 seeing a Republican President inaugurated, that the standard of Democracy will be advanced still higher, and that our banners will again float over the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the White House when the next President shall be inaugurated.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to inquire what is the pleasure of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS rose.

Mr. HILL. I desire to reply at some length to the speeches which have been made in support of the income tax.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, we have been nearly three months debating the merits of this bill, and the income tax has consumed a large proportion, or at least its reasonable share, of that debate. For two days we have been considering the income-tax features, and we have had read but five or six, possibly eight lines of that part of the bill. So far as I am concerned, I beg to appeal to Senators that we had better subject ourselves to some degree of personal inconvenience, go on with the consideration of the bill, and allow the business of the country to know what the tariff taxation of the country is to be in the future, than to consult our personal comfort and prolong indefinitely the consideration of the bill. So long as I can keep a quorum here, up to a reasonable hour, I am in favor of going on.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. Let the Senator test the question. He has been delaying invariably when he could, and as he could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair.) The Senator from New Hampshire having suggested the absence of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,
Allen,	Daniel,	Kyle,	Quay,
Bate,	Dubois,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	George,	Martin,	Turpie,
Brice,	Gibson,	Mills,	Vest,
Caffery,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Call,	Harris,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Carey,	Hill,	Peffer,	Walsh,
Chandler,	Irby,	Perkins,	White.
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Proctor,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators having answered to the call, a quorum is present, and the Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not insist upon going on to-night. Nearly all the debate to-day has been addressed towards answering the argument I made yesterday and in presenting some additional arguments in favor of the adoption of the income-tax provisions of the bill. New points have been brought out especially aimed at New York and aimed at myself. I addressed the Senate yesterday at considerable length. Other matters have been brought up in which I was interested, and I was obliged to participate in the discussion, although I had not in the first place intended to do so.

I am interested in this question, and my State is interested in it. On the 9th day of April last I spoke two hours and twenty-five minutes on the income-tax question and upon the tariff generally. With the exception of a brief debate on placing raw material on the free list, I have not opened my mouth in the Senate. I am not responsible for the delay of the bill. I represent a pretty large constituency affected by this bill, and I desire to answer to-morrow, as briefly as I may under the circumstances, the arguments which have been addressed to the Senate to-day. The thermometer marks 85° in this Chamber; we have been here since 10 o'clock this morning, and I have not participated in the debate to-day to any extent except to ask a few questions.

I certainly hope that our friend from Tennessee, who has conducted this parliamentary fight so admirably during these long three months, will at least give me this additional indulgence nearly at the close of this debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Tennessee just before I suggested the absence of a quorum honored me by the remark that I had been delaying the business of the Senate, as I understood him. I think the Senator did me an injustice. I have, I believe, not spoken upon the income tax.

It is several days since I have spoken upon the bill. I have upon my desk a few memoranda in connection with the income tax, but I have refrained from speaking, and think I shall refrain from speaking upon that subject. I have not at any time since the debate upon this bill began purposely delayed the Senate, unless it may have been on one evening when the Senator from Tennessee was not in his usual gracious mood and undertook to force an unreasonable session of the Senate.

I have not even exhibited to the Senate, as I have been tempted to do, and have been at all times ready to do, the record of the Senate at the executive session in the spring of 1881, when I find that there were one hundred and forty-three dilatory motions made, which were voted down by the majority of the Senate, and of those motions the Senator from Tennessee made nine to adjourn, seven to table, six to postpone, and twenty-two that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, making forty-four, out of one hundred and forty-three motions, which stand credited to the Senator from Tennessee. Now, he criticises me simply because at ten minutes past 6 o'clock I ventured, not having the fear of the Senator from Tennessee or anybody else before my eyes, to suggest the absence of a quorum. I think the Senator did me a great injustice, and I look for a generous apology from him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I can not make the apology the Senator expects. There is no Senator on this floor who is more opposed to the passage of the pending bill than the Senator from New Hampshire, and while he may not have consumed very much time, if any, upon the income-tax phases of it, the RECORD will show that he has unnecessarily consumed about as much time as any other Senator, if not more. I adhere to the remark I made awhile ago, that he has habitually and continuously delayed the passage of the bill in every reasonable and sometimes every unreasonable way.

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the qualification.

Mr. HARRIS. Therefore I can not make the apology. I should be glad to do it if it were due the Senator, but it is not, and I decline.

Now, Mr. President, since the 2d day of April this bill has been under consideration. The income tax, with other phases of the bill, had been elaborately and extensively debated prior to the last two days. The so-called debate has been upon the income tax for the last two days, but perhaps the greater part of the time has been spent upon everything else rather than that. The country has some rights as well as Senators.

I am a little scrupulous for the rights of Senators, but I feel that the country has a right to know at the earliest day we can inform it what the fate of the bill is to be. The waste of the time (and much of to-day and yesterday have been wasted) is hardly excusable. For that reason, inconvenient as it is to Senators, inconvenient and uncomfortable as it is to myself, and with extreme regret that I can not with my sense of duty yield to the appeal of the Senator from New York (whom I would gladly oblige if I could consistently do so with my sense of duty, and I can not), I think we ought to go on. We have not read a dozen lines of the bill in the last two days. We ought to go on to an approximate completion.

We ought to find an end; and the only way to find it is to stay here and give every Senator his opportunity, his day in court. Let him exhibit his learning and his rhetoric to any extent he desires. Let us stay with him, and let him do it. As far as I am concerned I shall not move to adjourn as long as there is a quorum here or I can find any means of getting a quorum here to go on with the business of the Senate up to a reasonable hour. I do not ask Senators to stay here always, or all night even, but I do ask them to stay here longer.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I regret very much that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, who has charge of the bill, has seen fit to refuse my request. Possibly in some way or other he holds me responsible for the delay which has occurred in the passage of the bill. I decline, sir, to accept any responsibility in that regard.

I have been anxious since the bill was first brought in to bring it to a speedy conclusion. I have not sought to delay it for a single moment. I have not voted upon some of the propositions the majority have seen fit to propose, although some of them did not meet my approval.

I have been willing, so far as the details of the bill were concerned, with a few exceptions, to allow the majority to prepare the bill and pass it exactly as they pleased. As I said a few moments ago, I had not spoken a single word upon the bill since the 9th day of April last, except a few moments on the subject of free raw materials. I trust I was not raising my voice in vain when I struggled for a few brief moments to hold this Democratic majority to Democratic principles. I think that the country will not hold me responsible for the delay of those few moments when I sought to put upon the bill a few Democratic principles that might save it; and I am to be told now that I am in some way responsible for the delay in the passage of this measure.

Mr. President, I have attended the sessions whenever I could. I was called away, and during a portion of the time I have been away you have proceeded in your own way. You have made your amendments substantially without much opposition. Some of them affected my State considerably. I have made no suggestion to you to save those interests. You have placed upon the free list manufactured articles of my State that affected the people of my State, as they think, considerably. I have offered no protest. I have made no suggestion. I believed that in those respects you were following a part of the Democratic policy and I acquiesced.

Now, at this time, after three long months, when the delay is nearly terminated and you keep your patience and your temper, it is proposed to be exercised against me because, forsooth—I can interpret it in no other way—I see fit to antagonize this portion of your scheme, an income tax. When I pleaded for free raw materials you seemed to be nervous and anxious about it. You could not listen patiently to me. Have I delayed this bill an hour since the 9th day of April? Not at all. Sir, I decline to be held responsible for this delay. It was last fall that other men were filibustering here to prevent the passage of a bill which would relieve somewhat the business interests of the country, a bill we were pledged to pass—not like this bill.

That bill we were pledged to pass. It was contained in the Democratic national platform. It was a bill for the repeal of the Sherman silver law. Then many gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber were engaged in a determined and bitter contest at filibustering against that bill, a bill recommended by the President, a bill recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, a bill that the Democratic party was in honor bound to pass. I sat here doing my duty to my party, my State, and my country in endeavoring to pass it; and I met with opposition from the men who now, after nearly half past 6 o'clock, want to crowd me to reply to the half a dozen speeches which have been directed at me and my State and the argument I made yesterday.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the Senator that I was one of the most determined opponents of the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, but I deny in the most emphatic terms that I have ever made a motion or ever was guilty of an act that can be truthfully characterized as filibustering against it; neither have I charged the Senator from New York with filibustering in respect to this matter. I do not quite see why the Senator assumes that he is charged here, by my declining to move to adjourn at 6 o'clock, with having sought delay.

Mr. HILL. Inferentially, sir, the charge is made. You spoke when I made the request, simply a request that ordinarily would have been granted, having a desire to reply. We were told then that the business of the country had been delayed. We were told that I could not be granted this privilege.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me again?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. If we had made anything like decent progress to-day the Senator would have been answered differently.

Mr. HILL. Who is the judge, sir?

Mr. HARRIS. When we have spent two whole days in worse than waste, when the country suffers, neither my regard for nor my desire to accommodate that Senator or any other Senator would control me for the millionth part of a second.

Mr. HILL. The Senator says that the day has been wasted.

Mr. HARRIS. It has.

Mr. HILL. There are some Senators who think that when they themselves do not participate in a debate all the time is wasted. I say time has not been wasted. I do not say that every argument adduced here to-day has been exactly pertinent to this portion of the bill, but mostly the time has been consumed in the argument of other questions by gentlemen who favor the income tax, and not by those who oppose it. I think that the argument of the past two days has not been wasted. Yesterday I presented an argument to show that your $4,000 exemption was wrong, unjust, founded upon no principle, but every thousand dollars that you put on it made it worse and more iniquitous.

You sat here ready to vote the $4,000 in the bill yesterday, if the roll had been called. To-day a change has come over the spirit of your dreams. The clouds are breaking. To-day the Senator comes in and says $3,000 is a proper exemption. We know not what you will do to-morrow. We can not tell what other changes you may make in the bill to-morrow.

Yesterday I pleaded for the entire and complete exemption of your savings banks. You have introduced an amendment which I think covers it. I pleaded for an absolute exemption of mutual life-insurance companies. To-day or yesterday the Senator from Missouri introduced an amendment which I think substantially covers those points, if I am advised rightly.

We are making progress, sir. We are making great progress, I think, with this matter. This is an important matter. As I said yesterday, it involves one-fifteenth of the whole Federal taxation of the United States. It is conceded here upon all hands that 30 per cent of this tax is to be paid by the State that I represent. And after the argument I made then and the argument made yesterday, I am to be cut off now and compelled to go on with my argument to-night. I say it is cruel; I say it is unjust under the circumstances; I say it is unworthy of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Tennessee takes the responsibility most cheerfully and gladly.

Mr. HILL. Because he can not avoid it.

Mr. HARRIS. Because he chooses to do it.

Mr. HILL. I will place some other responsibility upon the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. Proceed.

Mr. HILL. I will, but I shall not be ordered around about it. I shall not have plantation manners exhibited here in regard to it. I shall take my time in my own way.

Mr. HARRIS. Perhaps the manners of the slums of New York would suit the Senator better.

Mr. HILL. That may be, sir; but they are better than those from the plantations of Tennessee.

Mr. President, I said that I had desired to facilitate the disposition of the pending bill. I was honest and sincere in that desire. What did I do? I saw this debate coming last December; I had an experience upon the question of endeavoring to get a bill passed last fall. We had an important election in the country coming on. I felt as though it was necessary for the salvation of our party that we should pass that bill. I criticised nobody's motive who differed from me. I spoke respectfully of those who were upon the other side.

Yet I saw delay after delay, and month after month until the last few days before the election the bill was permitted to pass. It had lost its effect. Democrats in the North had become disgusted with our party. It did not have the effect that it was supposed it would likely have. The long delay had frittered away the good effect. The country had gradually recovered from the panic to some extent.

Therefore, with that experience in view placed before me, I introduced, I think, on the first or second day of the December session propositions for the amendment of the rules of the Senate. What were those amendments? Those amendments were to provide, first, that there should be given to a majority of this body (of which I have heretofore been proud to constitute myself a member) the right to determine when a bill shall be brought to a vote. It was a principle that had been discussed at the September session, because the bold announcement was then made that a majority had no right to change the rules of this body.

I introduced another amendment, which was that when a Senator rose in his place and announced a pair he should be counted for the purpose of constituting a quorum—a proper rule which I did not think ought to have met with any objection. It was a part and parcel of a course of procedure that I hoped the Senate might adopt for the very purpose of having the majority control the date when this bill might be put upon its passage. I desired to avoid honestly and sincerely all the delay which has been occasioned.

But, sir, what was done? I introduced those amendments to the rule which would have facilitated the disposition of this measure. They went to a committee of which the distinguished Senator from Tennessee was a member. Where are they now? In the hands of that committee, sleeping the death that knows no waking. They have been kept there from that day to this. The Senator desired, I suppose, to smother them in some way or other. Mr. President, they could have been presented. They could have been passed. The constitutional right of the majority to make rules to suit themselves exists. The power to make implies the power to amend, and that prior power implies the right to stop debate on the very subject of the amendment.

Those simple rules, I think, would not have met with serious opposition upon the other, side because they were substantially committed to them last fall. They were substantially committed to them in 1890 when the force bill was here. They could not seriously have opposed them. Those rules, in my judgment, were necessary for the proper procedure in facilitating the business of the Senate.

Now, sir, with that record before the Senate, with those proposed rules there before them, smothered in the committee of which the Senator is a distinguished and controlling member, he rises here to-night in his place and refuses me the little courtesy of an adjournment until to-morrow that I might have a little time to prepare myself to answer the gentlemen whose argument has been aimed at me to-day.

Mr. President, it does not lie in his mouth to say or to insinuate or to have an inference drawn from anything that I have done that I am seeking to delay the passage of this bill. I am ready at any moment to fix a day. I shall be glad when this contest is over. This proposed income tax, as I said, affects the people of my State peculiarly. I am ready now to adopt those rules. I will go as far as any Senator here in procuring their adoption.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a petition of policy holders and others in the city of New York in favor of the exemption entirely of the funds, etc., of life insurance companies. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that the first name upon the list is William B. Hornblower, of 45 Williams street, New York.

I present a similar petition, numerously signed by many distinguished gentleman of New York, among others, Governor Hoadley, formerly of Ohio, Clarence A. Seward, Judge Dillon, and last but not least Wheeler H. Peckham.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, sooner or later the Senate will be obliged to change its rules for the purpose of avoiding the very procedure that we are encountering to-night. Yet I am not here to blame those upon the other side who have discussed possibly at too much length the issues involved in this bill. I do not say that they have done so. Aside from one evening at a time when I was not here, when the session extended, as I am informed, to some late hour, there has been no filibustering, I understand, and I do not think that the charge can properly be made against the gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. There has been no speech made to-day upon this question that was not made directly to the merits of it, without a waste word.

Mr. HILL. That, of course, is a question of judgment. I think so. I agree with the Senator that in the main——

Mr. HAWLEY. I speak of the speeches on the Republican side.

Mr. HILL. Yes; I think that is so. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] represents, with two or three others, the Populist party. It being a very small party, of course it requires a great deal of argument; and he went out of his way possibly, in discussing the income tax, to talk about the principles of the Populist party.

There are many very wonderfully and fearfully made, and of course they require a great deal of explanation. He went into the question of the giving away of the public lands, and endeavored to show that it was the Republican party and the Democratic party that had given away the public lands. I am free to say that was rather foreign to the subject under discussion, and in that respect possibly the criticism of the Senator from Tennessee was well taken. But aside from that it strikes me that the argument has been addressed very properly to the discussion of the income-tax feature of the bill. I think so, Mr. President.

Nevertheless, whether it has or not, I am free to concede the necessity of an amendment of the rules of the Senate so that when a great question like a tariff shall come before the American Senate it can be disposed of earlier than three or four months. I think that is so. I think it would have been better if at the outset of this discussion there could have been some time fixed by common consent whereby some day in advance could have been set down for a disposition of the bill.

I saw an interview with some Senator published in Western and Southwestern papers, in which it was said that the Senator was in favor of an amendment of the rules; that he was not in favor of it now, but that at some other time when there was no great measure pending before the Senate he would then be in favor of an amendment of the rules. In my humble judgment the time to amend the rules is upon the threshhold of the presentation of a bill. The statement that these amendments can not be made during the pendency of an important bill reminds me of the story of a man who was asked why he did not put new shingles upon his roof. He said that when it rained he could not do it, and when it did not rain he did not need them. [Laughter.]

So it is with the Senate. When we have no important bill pending, when there is no attempt to delay any measure, then of course there is no necessity for an amendment of the rules. But we need such an amendment when an important measure is before the Senate.

I know it is said that if the rules are amended a majority may act arbitrarily. I think the proposed rule which I submitted to the Senate carefully guarded the rights of the minority. It provided that no time should be set earlier than thirty days, and then only by the votes of a majority of all the Senators elected to this body. That sufficiently protected all the rights of a minority. It gave no undue advantage to the majority. In my judgment, as we move along together we shall find that some such rule is essential to the progress of the business of this body.

I know there are some Senators here who seem to object to this policy of an amendment. Some of my Democratic friends, I regret to say, seem to think that we should keep the rules as they are because, forsooth, we are always going to be in a minority. I think, sir, we should not proceed upon any such basis. We should proceed upon the theory that we are the majority party; that the people intend to stand by the Democratic party; and as we expect and hope to be the majority party, that we need this power to make our legislation effective.

Speedy legislation is what we want—not hasty, it is true, in one sense, but legislation which can be closed in due time and in due season. How much better it would have been for the country last fall if the repeal of the Sherman law could have been passed within thirty days after we had assembled. Our distinguished President pleaded with us in a special message asking us to pass that measure, but there were those who were deaf to his appeals. The Secretary of the Treasury came up to the Capitol day after day and had interviews with us, in which he desired the prompt passage of that bill to relieve the Treasury, and yet, sir, it was not passed. That simply illustrates the point I am making, namely, that sooner or later, and the sooner the better, we must make the amendments which have been suggested.

Mr. President, I do not like to belong to a party that always proceeds upon the assumption that it is going to be the minority party. Let us proceed upon the other assumption, namely, that our measures will commend themselves to the American people and will keep us in power in the Senate. I know the specter of the force bill is always held up to us. I know it is always said, "If you had had those rules you might have had the force bill." Yes, and we could have repealed it afterwards.

Sir, if a majority of the American people, with the President and both Houses of Congress, fairly and honestly elected, wanted that bill they were entitled to it. The truth about it is they did not want it. There never was a time when a majority in the Senate wanted that bill. There never was a time that it would have received the votes of a majority of the Senate. The good sense of some Senators upon the other side always prevented its passage. Therefore we are simply unduly and unnecessarily alarmed.

I say that the American people have a right to have the measures which they desire passed in reasonably good time. You can not pass them under the rules of the Senate. What did the House of Representatives do? They drifted along. The public business was delayed. They could not keep a quorum. Finally, what did they do? They put away all questions of pride, after having fought against it for three straight years. They found themselves powerless to pass the very measures which the people of the country wanted, and then they turned around and adopted rules to facilitate the passage of bills.

Mr. President, we might take the House of Representatives as a model for us. I desire to say that they are dispatching their business promptly under their new rules. No injustice is done to anybody. The Democratic party is not placed in a false position. On the contrary, I think—I may be mistaken, the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will correct me—nearly all the appropriation bills have been passed by the other House and sent to this body.

Mr. COCKRELL. All with one or two exceptions.

Mr. HILL. With one or two exceptions the Senator says they are here, ready for action, so that as soon as this contest is over we can proceed to dispose of them and adjourn for the relief of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that we go on and vote upon some of the amendments. We would not reach the important ones to-night probably, and he can proceed with his speech to-morrow when those amendments are reached.

Mr. HILL. The only point about that is that several Senators spoke to me and asked me whether there was going to be a vote to-night. I told them no. They wanted to see me before the vote should be had upon these amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the amendments now pending and soon to be reached are not of such importance that I think the Senators who are absent would desire particularly to be present when they are disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senators who are absent will find no fault.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senators who are absent will find no fault.

Mr. HILL. What amendments would the Senator like to have disposed of?

Mr. ALDRICH. We can take up the pending amendments, whatever they are.

Mr. HILL. I wish to move an amendment. I will move an amendment by striking out "1895"—and it is an amendment which I desire to offer also for the information of the Senate—and inserting "1896." I will explain it for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York kindly state the line and page of his amendment?

Mr. HILL. It is in section 54, line 7; strike out "1895" and insert "1896."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Now, just a word of explanation of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment for the information of the Senate, and then the Senator from New York will proceed.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, section 54, strike out "1895" and insert "1896," so as to read:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1895, until the 1st day of January, 1900, etc.

Mr. HILL. My amendment, of course, if adopted would have to be followed by another amendment making it 1901, so as to complete the five years. The point to that amendment is simply this: By the terms of the bill the tax is to be based upon this year's income. The bill is to go into effect, it is supposed, about the middle of July or the 1st of August of this year.

Mr. HARRIS. The time has not yet been fixed when the bill is to take effect.

Mr. HILL. I presume it will be the middle of July or the 1st of August, so that we are substantially making a bill with a retroactive effect. The income next year, starting with the 1st of of January, payable in July, is to be based not from July to July, giving a year, but from January to January. So by the terms of the bill corporations and individuals are to pay next year upon the income which they began to receive on the 1st day of January last. Therefore this is virtually a retroactive bill. It is unprecedented in the history of legislation, in my judgment.

I do not propose to detain the Senate any further upon the question. I move the amendment for the purpose of honestly and in good faith preventing, as I think, a manifest wrong, that we should be obliged to pay next year's tax upon the whole year's income, including six months before the bill was passed. Books are to be kept, by the terms of the bill; other things are to be done by the people who are to pay the taxes. They do not know what to do now. It is utterly inoperative for a portion of the time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator from New York, as that is rather an important amendment, whether it would not be better to withhold it until to-morrow and vote on some of the amendments that propose mere verbal changes in the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. The committee amendments, anyway, are first in order. The Senator will have his opportunity as soon as the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HILL. May we not then vote on the question of striking out "2 per cent" and inserting "1 per cent?"

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the pending amendment of the committee be voted on.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire insist upon the motion?

Mr. HILL. Nobody wants to kill the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, if we can have a vote I will withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment which is near the close of the fifty-fourth section, namely, to insert after "assessed" the words "by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and"

Mr. FAULKNER. What is the pending amendment?

Mr. HILL. That is the amendment, I understand.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that two amendments of the committee precede the amendment the Senator from New York has indicated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the pending amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 22, after the word "property" insert "owned," so as to read:

And income from all property owned and of every business, trade, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the question be taken on that amendment.

Mr. GRAY and others. Question.

Mr. HILL and Mr. ALDRICH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]; I have a right to vote to make a quorum, and as it is evidently necessary, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], with a reservation of the right to vote to make a quorum. As it is apparent that a quorum is not present, I exercise my right to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], with the right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], but under the terms of the pair I have a right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL (when his named was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] having been transferred by agreement to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I have the privilege of voting to make a quorum, and I vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I am paired on all political questions with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. He reserved the right to vote to make a quorum. I suppose there can be no doubt that that gives me the right to vote to make a quorum. So I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON]. I have reserved the right to vote whenever it is necessary to make a quorum, and consequently I will vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. I have reserved the right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea." If my vote shall prove not necessary to make a quorum I will withdraw it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], who is absent from the city, but I have reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], with whom I have a general pair, favors that part of the bill which proposes an income tax. I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. As he is absent I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but we are agreed upon this question. He desired me to have him paired in favor of the amendments of the committee. I therefore announce his pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TURPIE. I will vote for the purpose of making a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS. I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. Is the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is not recorded.

Mr. QUAY. As I am paired with that Senator, I withhold my vote unless it is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. DUBOIS. I inquire if the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will withhold my vote.

Mr. ALDRICH (after having voted in the affirmative). I have been informed that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is absent without a pair. I will announce a pair with that Senator and withdraw my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am at liberty to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. I am allowed to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS. I will vote to make a quorum if necessary. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 0; as follows.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not move to send for absent Senators to-night, but I give notice that to-morrow I shall appeal to the Senate to stay here until we can report the bill into the Senate, whether it be early or late. I give the notice, and I hope Senators will not say to-morrow evening that notice had not been given. In view of the present condition of the Senate, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 23, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 22, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. THOMAS O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following communication was read:

JUNE 22, 1894.

SIR: I hereby name the Hon. JOSEPH W. BAILEY, a Representative from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair for this day.

CHARLES F. CRISP, Speaker.

To Hon. JAMES KERR,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SPECIAL AGENTS OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to the resolution of the House of Representatives, January 22, 1894, a list of the special agents of the Department, together with a statement of their work and the salaries received for the four years and six months ending December 31, 1893; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M'ADAMS VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William McAdams vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Senate bills of the following titles were severally laid before the House by the Speaker pro tempore, and referred as below:

An act (S. 1546) authorizing a commission to draft a code of laws for the district of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

A bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1827) to define the boundaries of the three judicial districts in the State of Alabama and to regulate therein the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States and the powers and duties of the judges thereof, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1259) to amend section 2 of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. CROIX RIVER.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6529) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MILITARY PARK AT SHILOH.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6499) to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Shiloh; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT PAYMASTERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (S. 1954) to amend section 1379, chapter 1, Title XV, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the appointment of assistant paymasters in the Navy; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The House bill on the same subject was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 3439) providing for a public building at Ann Arbor, Mich.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN AND INDIAN WARS PENSIONS.

Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7414) granting an increase of pension to survivors of the Mexican and Indian wars and to their widows; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REAL-ESTATE ASSESSMENTS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COBB of Alabama, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6415) to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real-estate values in the District of Columbia; also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896 and every third year thereafter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 2371) was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs for the correction of the report.

FEDERAL COURTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6447) to fix a term of the Federal district court of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does this bill provide for the appointment of any officers?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Only a deputy clerk and a deputy marshal.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AGREEMENT WITH YUMA INDIANS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with an amendment (as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1651) a bill (S. 1919) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians in California for the cession of their surplus lands, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The House bill (H. R. 1651) for the same purpose was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4961) granting certain rights over Lime Point military reservation, in the State of California.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 4701) to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia; asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1490) to pension Mollie Crandall;

A bill (S. 1343) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Joseph G. Utter;

A bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday;

A bill (S. 447) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of a certain land warrant to Emma A. Ripley;

A bill (S. 313) appropriating funds for investigations and tests of American timber;

A bill (S. 211) for the relief of St. Charles College; and

A bill (S. 199) for the relief of E. R. Shipley.

ANTIOPTION.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have addressed the committee, or may do so till this bill is finally disposed of, may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Why not ask leave to print for all members?

Mr. HATCH. I would very gladly do so; but I have been told it would be objected to. [A pause.] Well, Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request, and will ask that all gentlemen who desire to print remarks in the RECORD, or to extend remarks actually delivered, have leave to do so, provided that such remarks are furnished to the Printer within ten days from to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that those gentlemen who have submitted or may submit remarks be permitted to extend them in the RECORD, and that all gentlemen desiring to print remarks in the RECORD may have the privilege of doing so, provided that remarks printed under this leave be furnished to the Public Printer within ten days from the termination of this debate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union [Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair], and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining options and futures, and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the special order adopted yesterday may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the order of yesterday limiting debate on House bill No. 7007 be so modified as to permit amendments and debate in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule for two hours immediately after the morning hour on to-morrow; the bill to be then reported to the House, the previous question to be then ordered on the bill to its passage; the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture thereupon to have one hour in which to close debate in the House, and the vote or votes then to be taken: that so much of the order of yesterday as was inconsistent herewith be rescinded; the remainder thereof to remain in full force.

Mr. HATCH. Now, I ask that the bill may be read under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the first section of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if the time to be consumed in the reading of this bill will be taken out of the two hours allowed for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HATCH. The bill, under the order of the House, must be read by sections, that amendments may be offered.

Mr. BURROWS. But it is in order now to offer amendments as the sections are read.

Mr. HATCH. Of course; as soon as a section is read an amendment can be offered to it.

Mr. COX. I wish to make this inquiry: Two hours were allotted for the consideration of amendments to the bill. Now, is any part of these two hours to be consumed in the reading of the paragraphs of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Why, of course, Mr. Chairman; it can not be otherwise, because the order expressly states that the bill is to be considered under the five-minute rule. There is no other orderly way of proceeding. It will take but a few minutes to read first one paragraph and then another.

Mr. COX. It will take about an hour to read the bill; and that leaves but an hour for the offering and consideration of amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The first section was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act the word "options" shall be understood to mean any contract whereby a party thereto, or any person for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, acquires the right or privilege, but is not thereby obligated, to sell and deliver to another at a future time, or within a designated month or other period, or any contract whereby, as vendee, a party thereto, or any person as vendee, for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, acquires the right or privilege of demanding and receiving from another, at a stipulated price, at a future time, or within a designated month or other period, but is not thereby obligated to receive and pay for any of the following articles, namely: Raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, or pickled meat.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, after the word "hops," in line 15, add the word "flour."

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that there will be any objection to the insertion of the word "flour" in this bill, and therefore, in order to avoid if possible the necessity for debate, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask why, if it was thought best to include the term "flour" in the bill of two years ago, it should not be done now? I have prepared no special argument in favor of this amendment; but as the time for debate is very limited, I will ask the Clerk to read a letter bearing upon this subject for the information of the committee, and then I will ask what good reason may exist why the amendment should not be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, June 2, 1894.

MY DEAR MR. ALDRICH: I am in receipt this morning of your esteemed communication of the 31st ultimo, inclosing a letter from Mr. Bloss, president of the New York Cotton Exchange, upon the antioption bill, with special reference to the flour feature of that document. To my mind this feature of the bill and its elimination after having been inserted therein is very significant. I think the whole subject may be stated in a few words.

The antioption measure, from its inception, had the enthusiastic and studied support, founded, as I believe, in absolute selfishness, of Mr. WASHBURN and the great flour interests which he represents, interests which were identified more particularly with Englishmen to whom the Minneapolis Washburns et al. sold out. The motive was very potent on the part of those who sold the immense flour interests in Minneapolis, to show to the foreign capitalists that the investment, at least for a time, was a good one, and to justify the presumably large salaries paid to those who conduct the enterprise on the part of stockholders in Great Britain. The flour interests of those immense mills in Minneapolis depend almost entirely upon foreign markets.

The sales of flour in these great milling corporations are made for future delivery, so that it will easily be perceived that the interest of the great flour syndicate is preëminently to have the wheat market for itself, and to be perfectly untrammeled in the sales of flour to English and other foreign markets for future delivery. Their sales, of course, are based upon the cash price for wheat, and they are substantially without competitors for selling their product for future delivery. The price for future delivery being based, of course, upon the cash value of wheat, upon the cost of manufacture, upon allowing a large margin for profit to English stockholders, and upon expenses for transportation, etc.

In this field the flour mills of Minneapolis have little or no interference or competition. Were the Hatch bill to prohibit the sales of flour for future delivery it would be a disastrous blow to the great flour syndicate owned by foreign capitalists, and presided over by the Washburns in America. To be sure, Mr. WASHBURN occupies the honorable position of Senator of the United States of America, but we may safely infer that his personal interests are exceedingly great and ever present in all his activities, in his deliberations, in his speeches, and in his views. He can not escape the obligations under which the vast foreign syndicate has placed him, and he is bound by legislation and by personal effort to further the enterprise committed mainly to his control and conduct.

Were the Hatch bill passed, restricting the market for the purchase of wheat, and leaving the same substantially under the control of the syndicate, and no interference with negotiating sales of flour in immense quantities for future delivery, the interest of the great foreign syndicate presided over in America by Mr. WASHBURN, would be promoted vastly to the benefit of that great syndicate. Legislation would be made to subserve the interests of the syndicate, and the agricultural interests in this country would be subordinated to the prosecution of the enterprise, and all things connected with the agricultural and industrial interests of this country would be secondary to the success of this immense milling—I was about to say—conspiracy.

We may certainly be justified in designating it as an immense monopoly. HATCH has evidently coöperated with WASHBURN in the prosecution of this great enterprise, antagonistic in all its features and in every respect to the interests of the agriculturist and to the facilities which boards of trade and chambers of commerce, etc., have provided for the accommodation and for the profit of the agriculturist, and for the economical marketing of the agricultural products of the West. I need not further elaborate the argument

I think that I have sufficiently indicated the controlling features of the elimination of flour from the Hatch bill. Its insertion in the bill in the Senate was made in view of consistency, and in view of exposing the real animus and essence of the bill, and afterwards eliminated to secure the unremitting diligence of Mr. WASHBURN in its promotion in the Senate.

I take this occasion to express the obligation of this board and of kindred commercial exchanges of this country to yourself for your studious persistence, and for thorough examination of this bill, and your arraignment of the policy and methods and aims of its originators and promoters. You will have rendered great service not only to the agricultural interests of the country, but to its commercial exchanges.

Very truly, yours,

GEORGE F. STONE, Secretary.

Hon. J. FRANK ALDRICH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Extract from letter received from Mr. J. O. Bloss, president of the New York Cotton Exchange.

NEW YORK, March 29, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of the 28th instant at hand and contents noted.

By this mail I send you a copy of the Carter and Choate opinions, as requested. I also send you a copy of the protest of this exchange, which may be of service to you, in that it contains the volume and page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which the various speeches against the bill in the previous Congress can be found. The speech of ex-Senator White contains a great deal of statistical matter, more particularly in reference to cotton, but is also a strong constitutional argument. The speech of Senator VILAS, as I remember it, deals more particularly with grain, but is chiefly a constitutional argument.

You of course are aware that in the bill as originally prepared the article of flour was included. It has now been eliminated. This was brought about, as I understand it, at the special instance of Senator WASHBURN in an interview had with Mr. HATCH. In the fights that have been had on antioption in the past Senator WASHBURN has insisted that there was no objection to the incorporation of flour in the bill, and accepted an amendment whereby it was included, his contention being that there was no trading in flour that the bill affected, their business being all legitimate. It seems, however, now that this bill is objectionable enough even to his legitimate flour business to lead him to quietly take Mr. HATCH aside and have his own article stricken out. This undoubtedly was done in order to secure WASHBURN'S support of the measure in the Senate.

Hon. J. FRANK ALDRICH, Chicago, Ill.

Before the conclusion of the reading of the above the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the remainder of the letter be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. That letter ought not to go into the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER] in opposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, but that letter which has just been read, or a portion of it, I submit should not be printed in the RECORD. I object to printing the letter. We have no right to put into the record assertions of that character impeaching the action of the members of another branch of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. You are too late. Leave has already been granted not only to those who may make remarks, but to those who have not made remarks to extend them in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. My objection was not on that ground. I object because it is out of order under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The letter will go into the RECORD.

The letter is published above.

Mr. HATCH. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to take the floor to state why it was that flour was left out of this section and out of this bill. Gentlemen have stated on the floor of the House, in Committee of the Whole, that the word "flour" was in the bill of the last Congress. It was not in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARNER. Was it not in the original bill as presented by the gentleman himself at this Congress?

Mr. HATCH. Now, if the getleman will be still for a moment, I can make a five-minutes statement that even the gentleman from New York can understand; and I am going a long way when I say that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon order on the floor. I can not hear a single word the gentleman from Missouri has said.

The CHAIRMAN. Neither can the Chair. [Laughter.] The Chair will endeavor, with the aid of the officers of the House, to preserve order on the floor, and hopes it will not be necessary to appeal to the committee again for that purpose.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was inserted by the Senate, and the bill came back to the House in the Fifty-second Congress in that form. When I introduced the bill in the beginning of this session, I simply took the bill that was last printed, being the House bill with the Senate amendment, and introduced it for consideration by the committee to whom it was referred by the House.

That bill contained the amendment of the Senate. I stated to the committee my reasons for a motion to strike out the word "flour" from the bill, simply because flour is not gambled in on the boards of trade by option sales as these other commodities are, which are specified in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Flour being a manufactured article made of wheat there was no good reason why the principle upon which these farm products are placed under this system should include the article of flour.

Now, I have no interest in the world except simply as a matter of principle in opposing the amendment. You may take any other manufactured article, made of cotton or anything else, named in the bill, and insert it with the same propriety that you could the word flour. I have never heard a complaint of any commercial body in the United States, or any miller in the United States, or any manufacturer of flour, or any grower of wheat, that flour was the subject of ordinary option sales on the boards of trade such as wheat and these other commodities are. That is why the committee struck it out from the bill.

Mr. HEARD. Will my colleague allow an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has declined to be interrupted.

Mr. HEARD. I do not understand my colleague as objecting. If the Chair will submit the request, I ask if he will yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HATCH. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired and debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer a substitute for the pending amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order now. The gentleman from Texas has the floor to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the first word of the pending amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I deem it to be the duty of a Representative in this House to vote in accordance with the sentiment of those who sent him here, whenever any question is under consideration which has been publicly debated and discussed before the country and upon which his constituents have expressed their desires by public declarations, and to vote according to the dictates of his own judgment, after a full investigation of their merits, upon all measures submitted to the House upon which those whom he represents have not expressed their opinion. I have carefully read this bill, which I am sure has not been seen by fifty men in my entire district, and have given to its provisions a great deal of thought and investigation.

Lack of time will not admit of any discussion of the constitutional questions involved in regard to the power of Congress to interfere with contracts entered into by citizens of a State, and to be carried out within the territorial limits of the same State, or to invade the police jurisdiction of the States over the subject of the suppression of anything which may be deemed immoral, either in practice or tendency; and therefore I shall content myself with calling attention to the objects sought to be obtained by the framers and supporters of this bill. In order to act intelligently in casting my vote I consulted, after reading this complex and intricate bill, the report of its framer, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, knowing very well that after the patient investigation, exhaustive study, and laborious research bestowed by him upon the subject of the bill for so many years, he would be able to shed more light upon it than any other member of the House upon his side of the question.

I read in that report that the first object of this bill is "to obtain revenue." The report states one of its objects to be—I am reading from Mr. HATCH'S report—"to obtain revenue:"

At this time additional revenue is desirable and imperative. Unlike former bills reported to the House covering the subjects embraced in this measure, it will more surely and steadily provide a constant revenue to the Government, and that without an additional corps of revenue officers, and at a minimum cost for its collection.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I need go no further in the reading of the report or the investigation of this subject in order to vote intelligently. The bill seeks "to obtain revenue." This being admitted by the chairman of the committee, it is confessedly a legalizing, by the Government of the United States through its Representatives, of a system of gambling if passed by this House. My people know that we need revenue; my people may be willing that I should vote for a revenue reform measure, which will produce revenue, although all of its features may not commend themselves to their judgment.

But I believe that my people are unwilling that I should vote for any measure which will tolerate gambling, which will license gambling, which will legalize gambling, and which will produce revenue by gambling, which the contracts covered by the bill are denounced to be by its framers and supporters.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRAIN. I can not be interrupted. Now, Mr. Chairman, if these gentleman really desire to suppress this species of gambling, why do they not follow the declaration of the platform which I shall proceed to read:

2. We demand that Congress shall pass such laws as will effectually prevent the dealing in futures of all agricultural and mechanical productions; providing a stringent system of procedure in trials that will secure prompt conviction, and imposing such penalties as shall secure the most perfect compliance with the law.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] declines to yield.

A MEMBER. What platform is that?

Mr. CRAIN. I have read from the original Ocala platform, as contained in the National Economist of June 9, 1894. Now we, as Democrats, are called upon, at the behest of the Committee on Agriculture, led on by their distinguished chairman, to half way try to do what the Populists say ought to be done, namely, to suppress gambling in futures in the States of the United States and in the Territories thereof.

But this bill confessedly does not do that. It raises revenue, because the report of the committee says that the raising of revenue is an object of the bill, that revenue is needed just now, and that the bill will produce a large amount of revenue at very little expense to the Government. The report denounces "future contracts" and "options" as gambling devices which injure the farmers of the country, but in order to put money into the Treasury of the United States the supporters of the measure are willing to let them go on, for they say the taxing of them will produce revenue.

If these future and option contracts are simply gambling upon the products and misfortunes of the farmers of the country, they ought to be suppressed if Congress has the power to suppress them. But this bill does not suppress gambling, for the report declares that it will produce revenue; and it is plain that that which produces revenue is not suppressed. In other words, the framers and supporters of the bill assert that gambling in futures and options lowers the prices of agricultural products, but that as the Government needs revenues the gambling must be permitted to go on if the gamblers pay the license dues and other taxes provided for in the bill. The bill simply says, according to the committee's report, that although the gamblers in wheat, beef products, and cotton futures injure the producers of these commodities, still they must be allowed to continue to ply their vocation because the Government needs revenue, and by licensing the gamblers the Government will obtain revenue. Tax the gamblers and let the farmers suffer, says the bill. I say suppress the gambling if we have the power, but do not let the Government go into partnership with gamblers, first, from a moral standpoint; and, secondly, because not even "to obtain revenue" ought the Government to license a business which is said to lower prices to the real producers of the country. Save the farmers. Do not license the gamblers. [Applause.]

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TERRY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. I understand that under the general rule, when a bill is taken up by sections, an amendment can only be offered to a section after it has been read, but if I recollect correctly it was stated or agreed the other day that when we came to amend the bill amendments might be offered to any part of the bill—because we may not reach the last sections of this bill at all.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not included in the order as finally agreed upon.

Mr. COOMBS. That was agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It was merely a suggestion previous to the agreement.

Mr. TERRY. I understood that it was agreed upon. Some of these sections of the bill may never be reached.

Mr. BURROWS. We can get to them if the committee will vote on the amendments as they are offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is recognized.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have a vote on these amendments, and then we can go on.

Mr. CRAIN. I withdraw my substitute.

Mr. TERRY. I wish to read from the RECORD, page 7804, to show what the agreement was:

Mr. COX. I suggest that the gentleman ask that in offering amendments under the five-minute rule it shall not be necessary to read the bill in detail.

Mr. HATCH. I will accept that suggestion, that amendments may be offered to any section of the bill and voted upon in the order in which they are presented, so that the time will not all be consumed upon any one section of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was clearly the understanding.

Mr. HATCH. That was distinctly my proposition when I asked to close this matter in one hour, but after that it was suggested that I make it two hours, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. But you did not withdraw this proposition.

Mr. McMILLIN. My friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] did not suggest that he was going to exhaust one-half the time in reading the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I am not going to exhaust one-half or one-tenth of the time. The time is being exhausted in offering amendments and debate.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that it was clearly the understanding of all gentlemen here that any part of the bill would be subject to amendment during the two hours.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TERRY. In order to have a direct ruling on the subject, I offer an amendment to section 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman now, having agreed to recognize another gentleman. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] asks permission to withdraw his substitute. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is recognized.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer an amendment to the second section of the bill.

Mr. BOATNER. Has the second section of the bill been reached?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending to the first section, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH]. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COOMBS demanded a division.

Mr. ALDRICH. A parliamentary inquiry. Members do not understand what they are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I was to be recognized in opposition to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman now. The Chair will recognize the gentleman on the next amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. COOMBS. I called for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was dividing.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But, Mr. Chairman, the members did not understand it. This matter is not to be driven through in this manner without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state what his proposition is.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. My proposition is to renew the substitute which has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota will be recognized in due time. Debate is exhausted on this amendment, and the committee is dividing.

Mr. BURROWS. Report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, is that the amendment that the vote has been had on?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment that the vote is now being taken on.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word, and I want to be heard on that a minute or two.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If I understand correctly the position of the gentleman in charge of the bill——

Mr. ALDRICH. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I hope I can have order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please take their seats and cease conversation on the floor.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. If I can get just one minute I think we can get out of this trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not in any trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Do I understand the Chair to rule that upon a motion to strike out the last word the two hours' debate on amendments can be consumed?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I can not be taken off the floor this way.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in the rules contrary to that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I trust the members of this committee will not hastily force a vote upon this matter. I think the amendment offered by my colleague ought to be adopted. If there is any reason for legislation of this kind affecting wheat, the same arguments and the same reasons will apply to flour. In the letter which was read from the Clerk's desk the charge is made that the reason flour was left out of the bill was to enable a British syndicate that has purchased the Washburn and Pillsbury mills to control the wheat markets of America, bear the price of wheat, and thus make profits on the flour they manufacture.

Now, I am not prepared to say that the charge in that letter is true, but I do state that the writer, Mr. Stone, is a man of integrity and standing in the city of Chicago. He states unequivocally that this whole scheme is for the purpose of depressing the price of wheat that is raised in America for the benefit of an English syndicate. I happen to know, Mr. Chairman, that these great Washburn and Pillsburry mills that are operated in Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota——

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (continuing). Are to-day under the control of and operated——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (continuing). By English capital.

Mr. COX. If I can get the gentleman to stop I will state my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. COX. When the gentleman took the floor we were dividing upon a question; and of course when the committee was dividing on an amendment the gentleman can not take the floor and address the committee on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No one made the point of order against the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COX. I make it now.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Tennessee that when the gentleman from Illinois gets off the floor the Chair will hear the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope these interruptions will not be taken out of my time.

If the charges made in this letter are true, the members of this House ought to incorporate this amendment in this bill. Whether the charge is true or not, there is no reason upon earth why flour should not be included in the bill the same as wheat, rye, barley, or other products raised upon the farm. If there have been no dealings in futures on flour, that is no reason why there may not be in the future; and if the argument presented by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture relating to the articles included in the bill be correct, then I say that the same reason would require that flour be placed in the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota says that these mills are not operated and controlled by an English syndicate. I say the gentleman is mistaken; and I will give my reason. Within six weeks I have defended a flour operator who resides in my State from a suit that was brought by this same English syndicate, attempting to control the flour market of the city of Aurora and various portions of the State of Illinois.

It was alleged in the bill, and the attorneys who appeared in the United States courts charged, that those mills were owned and operated by an English syndicate who are not only attempting to "bear" the wheat market of this country, but also to control the flour trade throughout every section of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

The amendment was again read, as above.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order that no further amendment is in order.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from Minnesota. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 93, nays 33; so the amendment was adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 2 of the bill.

Mr. BOATNER. I make the point that section 2 has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 2 has not yet been read. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract whereby a party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, contracts to sell and deliver to another, at a future time, or within a designated month or other period, any raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, or pickled meat.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out section 2. The purpose of my motion, Mr. Chairman, is to eliminate from the bill all reference to the term "futures," so that the bill, should it become a law, will deal with trading in "options," and "options" only. There should be no objections to the bill as it would then read, and there ought to be no objections to the amendment by the authors of the bill.

Speculation in "options" is the purely gambling feature of trade in these products indulged in, I regret to say, by some members of our boards of trade. It is the canker sore or wart upon legitimate trade, and speculation and the element which has brought down so much condemnation upon these commercial organizations. These two terms, "options" and "futures," are thoroughly explained in sections 1 and 2 of the bill.

The latter term is employed to denote the actual buying and selling of commodities for delivery at some time beyond the moment at which the trade is made.

I will not take the time now to go into a further argument of this proposition, nor to reiterate the advantages which this system brings to our producing classes, but that it is legitimate there can be no doubt, and the mere fact that speculation in these goods happens to be active is no reason why it is not only legitimate but rational. Why, there is hardly any article of manufacture to-day that is not bought and sold when in large quantities for future delivery.

The great harvester companies purchase their lumber, their steel and wire and their cotton duck and binding twine months in advance of their actual needs for these articles, and the trade is a rational and a beneficial one to both seller and buyer, and the same is true of other lines of goods. The mere idea, therefore, of trading in futures, should cut no figure nor be any element of consideration by those who favor a bill for the suppression of option trading.

As I have said before, all trading in options by members of the Board of Trade at Chicago, such as Mr. HATCH has referred to, and so justly condemned, has occurred after the hours of the board, and outside of its Exchange hall. The rules of the board do not countenance such transactions nor recognize them in any way, and the violators are subject to the operations of the State laws, and should be prosecuted for their offenses. But while trading in options is prohibited by the laws of our State, trading in futures is not, and the rules of the Chicago Board of Trade are upheld and recognized by our courts in every case brought before them.

This amendment, therefore, is a most reasonable one and should be adopted.

First. Because it has been clearly shown in this discussion that whatever the evils which may exist through this system of buying and selling of the products named for future delivery, they do not begin to overbalance the advantages derived therefrom.

Second. Because the market in which the greatest trading in futures takes place, viz., Chicago, the average price of wheat is from 1 to 3 cents above New York and from 3 to 6 cents above Liverpool, thus indicating that this system, so far as it affects values, is at least not inimical to the interests of the great farming community tributary to Chicago.

Third. Because speculative gambling is for the most part confined to the vicious practice of trading in privileges, and is completely covered in those provisions of the bill which refer to options.

I can only say in conclusion that I regret that the chairman of the committee which has reported this bill has not seen fit to publish the testimony taken before his honorable committee. Rumor has it that this testimony was so unanimously against the bill, and so little was said in favor of it, that prudence dictated that the evidence should not be published. However this may be, I make the prediction now that the bill will never become a law, regardless of the vote taken here to-day.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read as follows:

Insert after the word "meat," on page 2, line 8, the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to apply to contracts entered into for future delivery of the aforesaid articles if at the time of contract of sale of any of said articles the vendor is the actual bona fide owner of the article to be delivered in the future, or has the power and authority to sell and deliver the same as agent for another, the principal owning the property at the time the contract is made by the agent."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for that amendment.

Mr. COX. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. Now, if I can have the attention of the committee for a few moments I feel satisfied that I can explain the amendment so that it will meet general approval. The main idea of this bill is to prevent men from selling property which they do not own or control. The second section of the bill as it stands undertakes to define futures, and, taking that in connection with the section which exempts farmers from the operation of the bill, another class of legitimate business transactions is brought within the range of the bill, so that instead of punishing fictitious sales, or compelling such sales to pay revenue, you really embarrass and retard a large class of transactions which belong to legitimate business—transactions in which thousands of men throughout the country are engaged.

Let me put the case so that it can be understood.

Say that my friend here [Mr. COOMBS] is a merchant and I am a farmer. I owe him $500. I say to him, "I will give you 500 bushels of wheat for my debt." He accepts the proposition and I turn the wheat over to him. Next day he goes to the miller to sell the wheat, and the miller requires him to deliver it within three days. Now, in those transactions contracts arise such as are covered by the provisions of this bill, and I submit that to have the bill operate upon transactions of that kind is a hardship and tends to retard legitimate business.

I am in favor of this bill, but my object is to strike the men who sell what they have not got, not to retard the operations of men who sell what they have got; and the amendment I have proposed to section 2 provides for such cases as that which I have stated. Where a man has what he sells, it is an outrage to place such restrictions upon his business as this bill does. While the bill permits the farmer to deliver his wheat exempt from this tax, yet whenever the merchant, the lawyer, or anybody else gets hold of that wheat, even though he has to deliver it within three or four days, he is subject to the tax under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that on page 17 you let the farmer sell the growing crop——

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have only five minutes in which to present this amendment, and I can not yield to interruptions. I will read the amendment again, so that members may understand it exactly.

Mr. COX again read the amendment, as above.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will indulge me just a moment I think I can save time by a very brief statement. I do not agree with the gentleman from Tennessee as to the importance which he attaches to this amendment, but I am satisfied that he earnestly believes it is necessary to cover a class of cases that occur occasionally in his section of the country, if not throughout the land.

Mr. COX. Such things occur a thousand times every month.

Mr. HATCH. I believe the gentleman thinks the amendment necessary. I am not willing myself to reject any fair amendment of this bill, any amendment which, in my judgment, will not destroy its efficacy. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. COX. Thank you. [Cries of "Vote! "Vote!"]

Mr. FLETCHER was recognized.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is not in order.

Mr. BOATNER. I am in order. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment which is now pending, and that is strictly a parliamentary motion.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment already pending, and therefore the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the Chair say that I am not in order in moving to amend an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state to the members of this House that the letter which has been read here and the statements which have been made by the gentleman from Illinois are entirely unwarranted by the facts of the case.

About 35,000 barrels of flour are made per day in Minneapolis. Of this quantity the Pillsbury-Washburn syndicate, as it is termed, or the great English syndicate, does not produce over 10,000 barrels. A few agents of the English syndicate have been put as their representatives into the Pillsbury-Washburn concern in order that they may have a better market for their flour on the other side. But the English syndicate does not control and never did control the majority of the stock of the Pillsbury-Washburn concern.

I have been a miller in the city of Minneapolis for fifteen years and I know whereof I speak. I make the assertion right here, without fear of contradiction by any man on this floor, that there is not a miller in the city of Minneapolis, or Winona, or Duluth, or West Superior, or Mankato, and in this statement are included all the large mills of the Northwest—not one of those men, unless it be Mr. Pillsbury or Senator WASHBURN, is in favor of the passage of this bill in any sense of the word. I was at a meeting of the millers of Minnesota week before last, and every miller there except Mr. Pillsbury condemned this bill from beginning to end.

Now, when men get up here and undertake to tell us about this great syndicate of millers controlled in Minneapolis, and that Minneapolis is controlled by England and the English syndicate, there is not a word of foundation for the statement. There are some parties in England connected directly or indirectly with the Pillsbury and Washburn concern; but it is altogether a mistake to suppose that the Pillsbury-Washburn men are the only millers in that section. They have not a capacity of over 10,000 or 10,500 barrels a day out of the 35,000 barrels manufactured. The Washburn, of Washburn, Crosby & Co., is another Washburn entirely, and represents the estate of the late C. C. Washburn.

I repeat, that every miller in the great mills at Duluth, West Superior, Mankato, and Winona is opposed to this bill. As for Mr. Pillsbury, the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge, will bear out my statement when I say that Mr. Pillsbury himself did not favor this bill, but in company with another gentleman wanted amendments put upon it to eliminate some of its bad features. And now to come here with this mass of misstatement and that misleading letter which Mr. ALDRICH had read from the board of trade is simply a trick to fool the members of this House.

I represent the milling interests of Minneapolis; I know every man in the Northwest who is engaged in the milling business; and I know that there is not one of them, unless it may be some man with a small mill, producing two or three hundred barrels a day—there is not one important miller in all that section of the country who favors the passage of this bill or ever did.

Let me say further that the millers have never made any money on low priced wheat. You can not make money in the milling business on low-priced wheat. Low-priced wheat produces low-priced flour. Flour has not netted within the last two years on the average more than 5 to 7½ cents a barrel net profit. When wheat is worth a dollar or a dollar and twenty-five cents a bushel, there is a demand for flour throughout the country and the miller makes more money. I repeat, that more money is made by millers on high-priced wheat than on low-priced wheat.

[Mr. FLETCHER took his seat amid applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] for the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] will be read.

Mr. BOATNER. I rise to a question of order. My point is that a motion to amend the amendment takes precedence of a substitute. In other words, we have a right to perfect the original amendment before the substitute is in order. I therefore insist upon my right to offer an amendment to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman's amendment to be a substitute.

Mr. BOATNER. No, sir. My proposition is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I insist on my right to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. They are both amendments; but the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] is first in order.

Mr. BOATNER. I understood that was a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute is nothing but an amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Any gentleman desiring to offer an amendment to perfect the text has the right to do so before a substitute is in order. The gentleman from Louisiana, I submit, is clearly right in the point he has made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that he has directed the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] to be read, in order to ascertain whether it is a substitute or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read, so that we may know what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2:

"Provided, That any contract or agreement for the future delivery of any of said articles where the time specified shall not exceed thirty days from day of contract; and that any person, firm, or copartnership dealing in any of said articles who buy and sell the same for spot delivery, or to be delivered within thirty days from day of sale, shall not come under the provisions of this act."

Mr. BOATNER. That is clearly a substitute for the original proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Louisiana, after the reading of the amendment, that it is clearly an amendment and in order.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not take the gentleman from Pennsylvania off the floor now. He is entitled to five minutes, and is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the provisions of this bill they would compel a person dealing at a small station on a railroad, for instance, who buys up the grain and produce of the neighborhood for the convenience and accommodation of the farmers themselves, to pay this tax and take out a license as a broker under this bill.

I have in my hand a letter sent to me by a person living in my district, Mr. John Hood, a dealer in produce of all kinds, and who is very competent to judge of what the effect of the bill will be on this trade in the event of its enactment into law. I desire to have this letter read in my time in support of the amendment which I offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

PITTSBURG, PA., June 20, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I notice the Hatch antioption bill is before your body and I inclose an amendment I wish you to offer to section 14, line 45, as the bill was reported March 23, 1894.

There may be some amendments incorporated in the bill since then that would change the sections, but we wish to have all contracts or agreements made for future delivery within thirty days from day of sale, and all persons who confine their business to selling spot goods or to goods they agree to deliver within thirty days shall be entirely exempt from the provisions of the bill, same as persons who contract to deliver to persons engaged in manufacturing, as provided for in section 14, commencing line 21 and ending line 45.

I had made some suggestions similar to this amendment to Mr. SIBLEY and he suggested some time ago that we have our representative offer amendments in accordance with our wishes and they would receive favorable consideration.

With this amendment incorporated in the bill all dealers at country stations or in cities that are buying and shipping the goods enumerated could make contracts for spot delivery or ten-day or thirty-day delivery and not be required to take out a license and be annoyed with the many provisions contained in the bill, and all who wish to speculate and sell goods for two, six, or twelve months' delivery can take out their license and transact business in conformity to the law. I consider it a gross outrage to inflict the provisions of the bill on bona fide dealers who do not want to speculate.

Please confer with Mr. HATCH and Mr. SIBLEY and they may join with you on this amendment.

Truly,

JNO. HOOD.

Hon. W. A. STONE, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This amendment that I have offered was drawn by Mr. Hood.

I now desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this bill, without that amendment, does not affect that class of people as suggested by Mr. Hood? It seems to me that the amendment will do away with the objection which he makes; and that it is entirely proper that this class of people, who do a small business at the railway stations, and pick up a little grain for the accommodation of the farming community, ought to be exempted from the operations of the bill. The bill without the amendment, in my judgment, will do a great deal more harm than good; and the real friends of the farmer on this floor will vote for the amendment I have offered.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. HATCH. I desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I wish to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will listen, the Chair will state that there is an amendment now pending to an amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. But I want to offer a substitute to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. On my amendment being proposed to the committee, I understood the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to say—he having charge of the bill—that he would accept the amendment; and no one made objection. Now, is not that amendment a part of the bill at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri could not accept the amendment without a vote of the House. It is for the committee to accept the amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered an amendment to the bill, and to that amendment the gentleman from Illinois offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Now, I want to ask if I have not the right to offer a substitute for both of these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to offer a substitute for the entire section.

Mr. BOATNER. Not for the entire section, but a substitute for the amendment to the amendment. I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I ask if I have not a right to offer the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the right now.

Mr. SNODGRASS. When will I have the right?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indicate when. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the Committee for a moment, I desire to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has been suggested by a very prominent banker of the city of New York, who sent out this suggestion not only to the members of the committee, but to other members of the House, and it has gone all over the country. It is a very ingenious scheme to rob this bill, if it becomes a law, of all force and effect, and I hope every friend of the bill on the floor will vote against the amendment.

I desire to read what a very prominent merchant of St. Louis wrote me on this subject on the 24th day of May. He says:

Referring to the communication on options from the exchange of this city, published in this day's Republic, I wish to call your attention to the effort now being made by Henry Clews & Co., of New York, to get the consent of the different exchanges of this country to restrict the sale of options to sixty days. He gives the reasons for this change, but not the true one. The true reason is that business, during and since the panic, has been so small together with the custom of regular speculators to deal in the far-off options, that he makes this effort to force the renewal of deals every sixty days—every ten days would be better from his standpoint, so far as his commissions are concerned—and this is all the interest he has in the custom.

This proposition if carried out would knock into a cocked hat the position that this article assumes, namely, that this custom is in the interest of legitimate business. Clews's effort defines the custom to be strictly a gamble, purely in the interest of the dealers for the commission only, and as a matter of fact this custom would die out, and shortly at that, if the people would refuse in future to gamble in options, while legitimate buying and selling would continue as long as the world lasts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not a new proposition. It is perfectly understood by the committee that framed this bill, and if it is adopted, you might just as well defeat the bill. It would destroy the force and effect of the entire measure. It would simply redouble these sales from day to day and month to month, and I hope every friend of the measure will vote against the amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment pending. We will take a vote on that.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I propose to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, I want to read the Chair this rule.

The CHAIRMAN. It makes no difference how many rules you read. The Chair has ruled that it is not in order. Those who favor the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] will say "aye."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 74.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it, and the amendment is adopted.

Mr. HATCH. No quorum has voted. I demand tellers.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. HATCH. I have been trying to get the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of no quorum?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

Mr. SNODGRASS. He is too late. The result has been announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize any gentleman who states that he endeavored to get the attention of the Chair. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 92.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] is recognized to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 14——

Mr. SNODGRASS. I ask the Clerk to strike out the words "amend section 14." I wish the amendment to come in at this point.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FUNK. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now.

Mr. FUNK. When will it be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. When we get some of these others out of the way the gentleman's amendment will be in order. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 14 as follows:

Mr. SNODGRASS. Strike out the reference to section 14 and insert the words "amend by adding."

Mr. COX. Is this offered as an amendment to my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell until it is read. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the words:
"And none of the provisions of this act shall apply to any person making a sale of said commodities for future delivery, who is the owner of the property sold at the time of the sale, or the agent of such owner."

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman propose that that amendment shall come into the bill?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Right at the end of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order, if it is intended as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my colleague——

Mr. SNODGRASS. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposed the gentleman [Mr. COX] wished to make a point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] has the floor, unless a point of order is made.

Mr. COX. I am trying to raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. COX. This amendment, offered by my colleague——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order now.

Mr. COX. I wish to make a point of order. I will make it if the Chair will hear me. The Chair can not tell whether it is a point of order until he hears it.

Mr. FUNK. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to know if it is now in order to make the motion to strike out section 2?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I understand I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee desires to make a point of order the Chair will hear him.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the very terms of the amendment offered to the amendment which I proposed to the bill by my colleague, is a repetition precisely of the amendment I have already offered. How can an amendment to an amendment be offered when it is the same thing?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

Mr. COX. Read them both and you will see they are the same.

The amendment offered by Mr. SNODGRASS was read, as follows:

Amend by adding the following at the end of the said section: "And none of the provisions of this act shall apply to any person making a sale of said commodities for future delivery who is the owner of the property sold at the time of sale, or the agent of such owner."

Mr. COX. Now read my amendment. It is exactly the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Insert after the word "meat" on page 2, line 8:
"Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to apply to contracts entered into for future delivery of the aforesaid articles, if at the time of the contract and sale of any of said articles the vendor is the actual bona fide owner of the article to be delivered in the future, or has the power and authority to deliver the same as the agent of another, the principal owing the property at the time the contract is made by the agent."

Mr. COX. That is just the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the House alone has the right to determine which of these amendments it prefers, and whether both mean the same thing it is not the province of the Chair to decide. The Chair will recogize the gentlemen from Illinois to move to strike out this section after the section is perfected. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] is recognized.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the largest liberty and least government compatible with the preservation of life, liberty, and property. I do not concede that this Congress has the power to say to the citizens of my State, in their domestic trade, whether their contracts shall be oral or in writing. I believe that a proposition of this kind is paternal in the extreme. I believe that my constituents have the right to buy their neighbor's crop and to sell that when it becomes their property for future delivery without being shackled, without being trammeled by an assumption of power by this House that they shall reduce that contract to writing and put a stamp upon every package of their produce and upon every hog they purchase and deliver upon a future contract.

I do not agree with my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] that whenever a supposed emergency or expediency or necessity arises that this Congress has a right to tear apart the Constitution and to trample it under its foot for the purpose of relieving what he or any other member of this House may suppose is a necessity. If a public necessity arises the framers of the Constitution have provided a remedy; and we may amend the Constitution, but we have no right to stultify ourselves by tearing off parts of the parchment and consoling our consciences on the ground that an emergency existed.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that if we have the right to say that every contract between the citizens of a State shall be reduced to writing, we have the right to say that they shall make no contract unless they pay it in cash, or unless they pay a specific currency, pay in gold, or pay in silver, or pay in greenbacks, or in any other currency they may please to specify as a consideration.

It is a power that is unauthorized. It is a usurpation on the part of this House that every member who understands the organic law ought to be ashamed of. If it is conceded there are no restrictions or limitations upon Congress, then we have not a republican form of government, but a despotism of the worst order.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him with a suggestion?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. Is the gentleman aware of any possible construction of the Constitution by which Congress is authorized to interfere between citizens of the State of Tennessee in their contract relations with each other?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No, sir; and Congress has no such power. I state that without fear of successful contradiction; and not only that, but if Congress has the power to do this, why then it has the power to destroy every reserved right of the people of the States, and it has the right to take charge of their domestic relations and regulate them according to its own will.

If this provision of the bill is retained it will force our farmers, if they buy their neighbors' crops and sell for the future delivery of the same, to reduce two contracts to writing and pay stamp duties on the two contracts.

This would be an unwarranted assumption of power on the part of Congress, and an infringement of the right of the States and the people thereof. I am opposed to the sales of options. It is in my judgment a wrong, but it is a proper subject for the States. If this amendment is adopted, as the bill purports to be for the purpose of raising revenue, I shall vote for it; and if it is not adopted I shall waive my opinion and support it, trusting future legislation to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COX. I demand a vote.

Mr. BOATNER. I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], to be added to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That none of the provisions of this bill shall apply to a bona fide sale for actual delivery of any product in due course of business.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the committee for a few moments I want to point out how the far-reaching provisions of this bill affect everyday business and commerce.

The committee will find by looking at the bill that the second section defines what constitutes a contract for future delivery. The ninth section says that those contracts shall be recorded in the office of the contractor on the day they are entered into; that the contracts shall be stamped then and there, and that in default of recording and stamping the contracts according to the provisions of this act certain penalties shall be incurred.

It is further provided that if, for any reason whatever, there should not be an actual delivery of the articles which have been sold, then the additional taxes shall accrue. Now, it will occur to anyone who knows anything about actual business that commercial houses, under the present system of doing business, send out their drummers or agents, who sell their goods far in advance of delivery—corn, pork, lard, oats, meat, almost all the articles mentioned in this bill, especially corn, oats, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meats, or pickled meats.

Under the provisions of this bill no drummer could sell a carload of any of the goods mentioned in the bill, unless he was able to telegraph to the merchants whom he represented, on the day he made the sale, giving all the terms and conditions of the contract; and if, for any reason, the goods should not be delievered within the time stipulated in the contract it would be necessary that a written agreement of extension should be entered into, otherwise the tax would accrue. Now, I apprehend that it is not the object of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], or of the the other friends of this bill, to interfere with the legitimate operations of commerce.

I apprehend that all they want to accomplish by the bill is to destroy gambling, and the amendment which I have offered provides that the provisions of this bill shall in no case apply to contracts for sales for actual delivery in the due course of business. I can not see any possible objection to that. If the bill is to become a law it ought not to accomplish any more than its object, which, as I understand, is to destroy gambling. It certainly ought not in any event to prevent the conduct of legitimate trade between the large cities and the country that is tributary to them.

It is a common custom and practice where I live for merchants of the city of St. Louis (from which city we get most of our supplies) to send out advance agents to sell corn, pork, flour, lard, all these articles, the contracts being made long in advance of delivery. The orders are taken and are sent to St. Louis and the goods are shipped down by steamboat, to be delivered to the parties for whom they are intended and paid for on delivery. Now, under the provisions of this bill, that business can not be conducted except under such restrictions as will make it almost impossible.

Mr. TERRY. Is it not claimed by the New Orleans Board of Trade that all their future contracts contemplate actual delivery?

Mr. BOATNER. I do not know whether they make that claim or not. I think they do. I think the contracts are all drawn in that way. But if the gentleman will observe the language of the amendment which I offer he will see that it would not apply to cases of that sort. A sale in due course of business is a sale by one who is engaged in the handling of the commodity in question.

Mr. TERRY. But a sale by a man who conducted the bucket shop would be a sale "in due course of business" in a bucket shop.

Mr. BOATNER. Oh, no; because such a man does not pretend to own or deliver anything.

Mr. HATCH was recognized.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois later.

Mr. HATCH. The members of this committee may as well understand now as at any future time in the consideration of this bill, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana is very adroitly drawn for the purpose of killing the bill. The gentleman might as well make a motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. This is not an amendment in good faith. It is not an amendment to perfect the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] and adopted.

Mr. BOATNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that my amendment is not offered in good faith?

Mr. HATCH. I say it is not an amendment in good faith to perfect the bill; it is in good faith to kill it.

Mr. BOATNER. I can assure the gentleman that it is just the contrary. The amendment was offered for the purpose of at least preventing this bill from interfering with the legitimate operations of commerce.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, the gentleman is too good a lawyer and knows too well the effect of this bill not to know that every single contract made upon a cotton board or a board of trade of any kind in the United States would be claimed to be made "in due course of business."

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield to the gentleman. I did not take up any of his time.

Mr. BOATNER. Just one moment.

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield. I have promised three minutes of my time to another gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I can say about this amendment. If it is adopted by the committee and by a yea-and-nay vote in the House, I would just as lief that gentlemen would vote against the bill and kill it in a direct and reasonable manner, and not do it by indirection by putting on such an amendment as this. I do not think it possible that the committee will adopt this amendment; but if they do, I shall certainly ask for a yea-and-nay vote on it in the House.

Mr. BOATNER. And I will demand a yea-and-nay vote in the House if the committee do not adopt it.

Mr. HATCH. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume more than a moment's time. The Committee of the Whole has now before it a straightforward proposition that wherever a man is the owner of any property—whether he be a farmer, a lawyer, a doctor, or what not—he shall have the right to make a contract as to when he will sell it and when he will deliver it. The only legitimate object of this bill or of any legislation of this kind is to prevent men from selling what they have not. Whenever you open the door so that a man may sell what he does not own—when you call that "legitimate business" or "due course of trade"—you will never be able to stop these gamblers from undertaking to sell something when they have nothing.

What fairer proposition can be submitted than the one now before the committee? If a man has property, let him sell it without any restriction and deliver it without any restriction; but when he has nothing to sell, then tax him and thus throw obstruction in the way of such speculation and gambling. There can be no objection to an honest proposition like that. I do not want to attack any legitimate business or interfere with it. But when a man undertakes to sell that which he has not, I think it proper he should pay for the privilege of thus speculating upon the ups and downs of the market, and thus imposing upon honest men who own property. The amendment I have offered absolutely allows anyone to sell what he has and deliver it whenever he may please. And this is all that we ought to be expected to sanction in this matter.

Mr. BOATNER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COX. I do not think the gentleman can get an additional five minutes by a motion of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] has half a minute remaining.

Mr. COX. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] wants to make another speech on a motion to strike out the last word, I believe I will move to strike out the last two words and so double my time.

Mr. BOATNER. You can not do that.

Mr. COX. How are you going to do it, then?

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] recognizes the injustice of those provisions of the bill which prohibit the owner of property from selling it for future delivery. Acknowledging the injustice of any such provision, he seeks to correct it by an amendment; and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has stated that he will accept the amendment. In adopting such an amendment, gentlemen overlook another class of cases and another system of dealing, just as much entitled to consideration at the hands of this House as the class of cases referred to in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Do the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Tennessee know that under the provisions of this bill the wholesale merchant who sends an agent to sell goods for him must have at the time of the sale the wheat, the flour, the corn, the oats in his warehouse, otherwise the agent can not sell them without incurring the penalties provided by this act? I say that such provisions will impose unnecessary, burdensome, and vexatious restrictions upon legitimate commerce, unless the amendment I have suggested be adopted.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee says that under the amendment which I have proposed the very system of business which he and his friends are seeking to destroy must continue to exist. I say such is not the case. How will this amendment operate? Why, sir, if I undertake to sell to the gentleman a thousand bales of cotton to be delivered in the future I would be subject to the tax, because I am no cotton dealer or cotton raiser; I have no cotton to deliver; I am not in the habit of selling cotton for actual delivery, and that fact could be made to appear. If, on the contrary, I am a cotton-planter or am in the habit of dealing in any one of these commodities—if I make my living by buying and selling them to the actual consumer—the law ought not to, and if my amendment be adopted will not, interfere with this class of business.

It is perfectly clear that such business would have no analogy to "bucket-shop" transactions. Could the keeper of the bucket shop or the man who makes the offer to sell through a bucket shop testify that he had in his possession or expected to have in his possession or intended to deliver the property involved in the transactions? Could the person buying at such an establishment say he expected the goods to be delivered to him? It is perfectly apparent in the nature of their business that a settlement based on the mere difference of price is to be the outcome of the transaction.

You can not pass this bill in its present shape without breaking up a legitimate class of business which prevails in this country—the making of contracts in advance of the ownership of the products which are sold. If you go now to the South you will find the advance agents of the manufacturers, the wholesale dealers of the East, selling goods for next winter's consumption.

The men for whom they are selling do not yet own the goods; the goods are not yet in existence; they are to be manufactured and are to be delivered in accordance with the terms of the contract. So an agent goes out and sells corn, or wheat, or lard, or products of any kind, which at the time of the sale are not in possession of the seller or owned by the person he represents, but are to be bought in the markets and be delivered at the maturity of the contract. I say, sir, the amendment is absolutely necessary to protect legitimate commerce of the country from the obstructions which would otherwise be thrown around it.

Mr. FITHIAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have in.

Mr. BOATNER. I demand a division.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 75, noes 75.

Mr. BOATNER. Let us have tellers.

The CHAIRMAN announced the appointment of Mr. BOATNER and Mr. COX as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 82.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. FUNK. I now offer an amendment.

Mr. COX. Is it not first in order to take the vote on the amendment as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BOATNER. But more than one amendment to an amendment is not in order. I make the point of order that one amendment has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be amended if necessary. Your amendment has become a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, and the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair thinks, is in order. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2, line 6, page 2, by inserting after the word "hops" the words "sugar, refined or unrefined."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not an amendment to the pending amendment and will be disposed of after the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not in order as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the question of order hereafter. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee as amended.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LACEY. I understand the Chair to hold that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is not now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LACEY. I will offer an amendment which is in order now, to perfect the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point of order that the Chair had begun to submit the question to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Iowa had proposed his amendment before the Chair did so. The gentleman was on his feet to offer an amendment, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in case a seller, described in the act, shall in fact be the owner of the property contracted to be sold, at the time of the sale, or at the time of time fixed in the contract for delivery, the failure to deliver the same, when caused by delay in transportation or fault of the carrier, shall be sufficient excuse for nonpayment of the final stamp tax provided for in this act.

Mr. COX. I make the point of order on that amendment. It relates to a different section of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman now. There is a point of order pending.

The Chair thinks the amendment is in order as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to explain the amendment, Mr. Chairman. It is the position of the framers of this bill that this matter is provided for in section 14, but it is not; and a provision of this kind ought to be inserted to govern cases of the kind referred to in the amendment.

An elevator man, for instance, in one of the grain-producing States sells his grain for future delivery. At the time of the sale he may have the grain in stock, or he may not have it. If he goes out and buys the grain afterwards—that is, if he has the grain on hand by purchase or otherwise at the time fixed by the contract for the delivery, and the delivery is prevented by a failure to get cars, or by a delay in transportation, he ought to be excused from paying the tax.

There is a provision in section 14 that if the delay is caused by an accident, such as a washout, or a casualty, such as fire, he will be excused; but there is no provision covering cases where the mere delay in the carriage of the goods causes a failure to comply with the contract, and where such failure is not the fault of the party making the contract, but the fault of the common carrier whose duty it is to transport the goods.

That is the reason I offer the amendment, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. SIBLEY], who will oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is not a condition stated by the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa that this bill does not provide for. If a case of the kind suggested by the gentleman should arise the bill makes provision for it. There can be (in the event suggested by the gentleman and which he proposes to cover by his amendment) ample provision found in the bill to afford relief. There may be delays, of course, without penalty, where such delays arise because of flood or fire or other unavoidable cause.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman tell us if he has got "contango" in there——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] is not in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] has the floor.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the friends of the farmers want to pass an antioption bill protecting their interests from the gamblers in futures, or if they do not wish to protect them, let them say so when this bill comes to a vote; but I ask gentlemen not to emasculate the bill, and make it something that is unworthy either of the committee or of the judgment of this House. Some of the gentlemen who offer these amendments evidently have not read this bill through. If they have, they have not read it with sufficient care to comprehend its provisions.

We have had amendment after amendment, offered or suggested to the committee, and we have been able to turn to the page and the line and show that the proposed amendments were already provided for. The committee took months in the preparation of this bill, heard the representatives of boards of trade, and I will submit the case to my friend from Missouri [Mr. COBB], who opposes this bill, and ask him if this very feature, now proposed as an amendment, is not provided for in the present bill?

Mr. COBB. I think so.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. COBB. I think it is entirely covered.

Mr. SIBLEY. There is not a reasonable doubt in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LACEY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to move to strike out the last word when there is an amendment to an amendment pending. This is an amendment to an amendment now pending.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask that the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Tennessee be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is not now before the committee. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is before the committee.

Mr. COOMBS. Read that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That in case a seller, described in this act, shall be the owner of the property contracted to be sold at the time of the sale, or at the time fixed in the contract for the delivery, the failure to deliver the same, when caused by delay in transportation or fault of the carrier, shall be sufficient excuse for nonpayment of the final stamp tax provided for in this act.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is not the amendment which I wished to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment now before the committee. When the other amendment comes before the committee it will be read. The proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, which has just been read, is now before the House.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. LACEY, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. LACEY. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 68, noes 78.

Mr. LACEY. I call for tellers on that vote.

Mr. FUNK. Is an amendment now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. LACEY. I call for tellers.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. LACEY. I make the point of no quorum, then.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was on the floor, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN].

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 87.

Accordingly, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COX. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] as amended.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HATCH. Division.

The committeee divided, and there were—ayes 107, noes 24.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give notice that I shall ask a division on this amendment in the House, and a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, under the order adopted, the time for the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule has expired, and the committee will now rise and report the bill back to the House.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to submit a proposition for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] has an amendment, simply to perfect the text of section 14, and I ask unanimous consent that he may present these amendments, to be voted on without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HATCH. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. DENSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded. The regular order is that the committee shall now rise and report the bill back to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7007, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with certain amendments, favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Missouri for one hour, to close the discussion.

Mr. WARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. Does this report, made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, include pending amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It included only amendments, as the Chair understood, which the committee had adopted.

Mr. WARNER. I understood that under the unanimous consent given by the House pending amendments were also to be included.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the general order to the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The general order did not include pending amendments.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FUNK. I rise for this purpose: I understand the amendment I offered was pending when the committee rose. It was so stated by the then Chairman. I understand, then, it comes up when the bill is being passed upon in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the precise point involved in the parliamentary inquiry which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] now makes, before deciding which the Chair will inspect the order adopted by the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That can be decided after the gentleman from Missouri has concluded his remarks.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest that that point remain in abeyance until the gentleman from Missouri consumes his hour, as he is quite unwell. I hope the House will extend that favor to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the order presented to him by the Clerk does not provide for pending amendments; but the Chair will withhold a decision on the point until the gentleman from Missouri concludes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I call the attention of the Chair to page 7747 of the RECORD, where the request of the gentleman from Missouri is recorded, in which he suggests that the debate shall be considered as closed at the adjournment to-morrow evening on the bill and any pending amendments, to be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inspect the RECORD carefully in the mean time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the matter.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether an amendment which was attempted to be offered in the Committee of the Whole may now be submitted to the House, by unanimous consent, and considered as pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course the House can by unanimous consent permit an amendment to be submitted at this time.

Mr. TRACEY. Regular order.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection. The gentleman from Missouri.

[Mr. SIMPSON appeared on the floor of the House, after a long and serious illness, and was loudly applauded.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I am not physically in a condition to-day to occupy the hour allotted to me, by the courtesy and unanimous consent of the House, in such a manner as I had desired to do in closing this debate.

No measure that has been presented to the House of Representatives in the past twenty-five years has elicited a keener interest or been more universally discussed throughout the public press and through public gatherings than the bill now about to be determined by the vote of this House.

As I stated in my opening remarks on Monday, it was to some extent a new departure in legislation, but for the past ten years, during the last five terms of Congress, the Committee on Agriculture have been receiving communications from every section of the land, North and South, East and West, invoking the aid of Congress in the passage of some measure that would give relief to the producers of the commodities named in this bill from a system of trading that was deemed by them exceedingly detrimental to their interests.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] does me too much honor in stating that I am the originator of this legislation. I want to say very frankly to the House that for several years after this proposition was first submitted to the Committee on Agriculture I was in grave doubt as to the propriety of any legislation upon this subject, and not until I had studied it carefully and earnestly, and with all the ability I possessed, did I bring myself to the position of being willing to report such a bill from that committee to the House.

And I want to correct another exaggerated statement that has been made by more than one gentleman on the floor of this House, namely, that I believe this bill is to become the panacea for all the ills of the agriculturists of the United States. I have never made such a statement. I do not believe it; nor am I authorized by any body of agriculturists in the United States to make any such claim upon this floor. This is simply an invention of the enemy. It is an exaggerated statement without any legitimate foundation, that the intelligent farmers of the United States believe that in the passage of this bill there is to be found a panacea for the low prices of farm products.

But the farmers do claim and do believe that in the passage of this bill there is to be found a remedy for one of the potential causes of depressed prices on the markets of the United States, which control to a large extent the markets throughout the world. I wish that in the provisions of this bill there was contained an adequate remedy for the depressed and unhappy condition of the agriculturists generally throughout the United States. I wish I could say that I believed there was any such remedy in this measure. My friends, in my judgment, we are simply enacting a law that will not only do some good in the interest of the farmers of the United States, but will do still more good in the restoration of that honest and honorable system of trade upon the great marts of the country which prevailed down to the hour when this system of gabbling in fictitious commodities was recognized and adopted by the boards of trade.

It has been suggested to me by several friends on this side of the House since I made my opening remarks on Monday that there was a probability, or at least a bare possibility, that this measure, if it should be placed on the statute books, would be declared unconstitutional, for the reason that it requires every contract made for the future delivery of the products mentioned in the bill to be in writing; these critics assuming that the Congress of the United States has not the power to say that a certain contract or contracts of a certain kind shall be in writing; that if a contract is made verbally and under the law of the State in which it is made it is a valid one, then the Congress of the United States can not by a Federal enactment change that State law.

For my own part, I am perfectly satisfied with my own position on this question, and every intelligent lawyer in this House must determine his position upon it for himself, but I pity the intelligence or the ignorance of that gentleman here who has had the opportunity, since this bill has been under discussion during the last five or six years, and who, if he has investigated the subject at all, has not found that the Supreme Court of the United States, in every single case that has ever been determined involving the power and the right of taxation by the Federal Government, has declared that when that power was fixed in the Constitution the power to provide all needful rules and regulations for carrying it into effect went with it.

Gentlemen might just as well claim that the law which provided that within the State of Alabama, or within the State of Missouri, a State bank should not accept and pay over its counter a check of one of its own depositors unless that check had a 2 cent stamp upon it, was an interference with the law of the State, and therefore void. Where did Congress get the power to say that the officers of a State bank in the State of Missouri should not pay to a depositor having money in its vaults a dollar of his own money upon a written order unless that order bore an internal-revenue stamp on its face? It got it from the power given by the Constitution to levy taxes, and in no other way.

Not only is every single provision of this bill in accord with existing law as far as the present revenue laws are concerned, but there is not a provision in it that has not been carefully drawn and tested with reference to the decisions of the Supreme Court. My friends, I have had this contention over and over again. I have worn out about fifteen years of the best part of my life upon the floor of this House in advocating legislation, not in the interest of a class—because I have never advocated class legislation on this floor as I understood it——

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. I have never interrupted a gentleman during this entire debate, extending from Monday down to the present hour. Mr. Chairman, I do not plead guilty to the charge made here so flippantly by gentlemen whose only knowledge of an agricultural district or of a farm has been obtained in passing through the country in a Pullman palace car and looking out of the window—I do not, I say, admit the justice of the charge which such gentlemen make that any legislation by the Congress of the United States which benefits the farmer is class legislation.

When the Congress of the United States enacts any law that helps in the slightest degree that class of men who lay the foundation for every other business in the country, they are helping all the people. What has built up the city of New York? What has made her the great commercial emporium of this great nation? Have her lawyers done it, or her doctors, or her preachers? Aye, have her commercial men done it? Have you got in that city to-day, gentlemen, a dollar which has been accumulated from any honest business that did not come primarily from handling the commodities produced by the farmers of the United States?

Let the blight of one season destroy the crops of this country and the grass would grow on Broadway in the city of New York. Agriculture is the foundation of all your trade and of all your prosperity. Can you have cotton mills without cotton? Can you have flouring mills without wheat? Can you have tobacco factories without tobacco? Can you have any of your great manufacturing industries or any of your great commercial houses to handle these products unless somebody first raises the raw materials? Agriculture, I repeat, is the foundation of all the business and all the welfare of the nation, and it has been recognized as such by every writer on political economy for the last three hundred years.

Every now and then some gentleman breaks into Congress whose presence here is like that of the Senator that we read about some years ago. Coming upon the floor of the Senate, he was asked whether he had ever been in a legislative body before. He replied to his inquiring Senatorial friend that he had not. "Well," asked the other, "how in the world did you ever happen to be sent to the Senate?" "Well," was the reply, "I thought a great deal about that until I came to the Senate; now I am inquiring how some of the rest of you fellows got here." [Laughter.]

But every now and then some man breaks into Congress who will get up on this floor and say that any legislation which benefits this great industrial class is simply "class legislation" and un-Democratic; and such declarations usually come from the Republican side of the House, although I am sorry to say that occasionally a gentleman on this side takes the same position, and he is simply the subject of my supremest pity.

"Class legislation!" Class legislation in the interest of more than one-half of the people of the United States, and two-thirds of all the rest being directly interested in the productions of this vast class! Why, sir, every day I get letters from the retail country merchants in my district—the merchants of the little towns and villages, and at the cross-roads. These men write to me that no such season of absolute paralysis and stagnation in business was ever known in the Mississippi Valley as during the last six months.

And let me propound a single thought to my honored friend [Mr. HENDRIX], who honors me by listening to me now. You may wear your brain out and that of all the bright men in your city in attempting to start the great manufactures of the East and through them to infuse prosperity into your great commercial houses down to the retail merchant; but unless you do something that will give to the consumers of those goods the ability to purchase them when they reach the retail merchants throughout the length and breadth of the land, your efforts are absolutely futile. If you would give prosperity to the country you must commence with the consumers and give them the ability to buy.

Our retail merchants are not inactive and paralyzed because of any want of energy on their part or any inability to supply the demands upon them. They will not buy of the merchant in St. Louis, in Chicago, and New York, simply because they can not sell goods to the consumers as in times past. Your wholesale merchant in these great Eastern cities can not buy of the importer and the manufacturer, because he can not sell to the retail merchant. You can not pile the shelves of the retail merchants throughout the length and breadth of the land with goods that can not be sold. This legislation, as I have before stated, is in my judgment in the interest of the buyers and consumers of these goods.

We have heard a good deal since this discussion commenced on Monday last, and we heard a good deal more when the tariff bill was before the House, iterated and reiterated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], to the effect that the farmer can produce his bushel of wheat now for so much less money because of improved machinery, and that thus he can afford to sell his wheat at half the former price.

Notwithstanding all the vagaries of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I have a very high personal regard for him; I would not say anything personally offensive to him. If he should make a statement about manufactured goods in Massachusetts—the cost of manufacturing cotton goods, for instance—I would have to accept his statement, because I know he knows more about such matters than I do. But he knows as little about what it costs the average farmer in Illinois or Missouri to raise a bushel of wheat as he knows about what is going on in this new valley in the moon that the astronomers have recently discovered. Laughter.]

Now, what are the facts in regard to the cost of raising wheat now as compared with the cost of raising it twenty-five or thirty years ago? I admit that upon great farms like those the gentleman from South Dakota has in his State and like those in portions of Minnesota and California—wheat farms measured by thousands and tens of thousands of acres—this improved machinery, steam plows, steam harrows, and various steam appliances, enable the farmer upon such a vast tract to produce his wheat crop for less than the average farmer can do with his farm of forty or fifty or a hundred acres in Kansas or Missouri. But the great wheat crop of the world, and especially of the United States, is raised by farmers who sow and reap farms of less than 40 acres each. Forty acres is above the average of the wheat farms of Missouri; certainly 50 would be, and I have seen it stated that it is even a fraction below 40.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for less than 80 or 100 acres the farmer, you know, can not buy the improved machinery of to-day. His business will not justify it; and consequently wheat, to produce it all through that great middle wheat belt of the United States, costs almost or just about as much to raise it and put it on the market now as it did twenty-five or thirty years ago. I do not know about cotton, and therefore I will not undertake to make any statement about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It costs just as much.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from North Carolina says it costs just as much, and I know he is a cotton-raiser, and accept his statement as accurate. My friend, who is a large wheat-grower, a larger wheat-grower than I am, knows how much it costs him to put his wheat on the St. Louis or the Chicago market even after he has raised it. I have a hundred acres of wheat in Pike County, Ill., now being harvested, as my foreman wrote me on the 18th that he would commence harvesting either on the 20th or the 21st. This land is situated on the east side of the Mississippi River, with no bridge toll to pay, situated almost as close to the market as my friend from Illinois with his wheat farm, about 60 miles north of me.

With a branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad running right through my farm, and being able with my own teams, at a mere nominal cost, to take my wheat from the thresher and put it in the cars, yet it costs me 7.1 cents a bushel to send that wheat to Chicago and sell it on that market. Therefore when you see wheat quoted, spot wheat, in Chicago at 57 and a fraction, it means 50 cents to the farmer of Pike County, Ill., and you can not send your wheat to the Chicago market for less than probably within a cent of that price.

If I should send my wheat to my colleague in St. Louis and have him to sell the wheat for me, I could deliver it in the market for four and a fraction cents, making a difference of 3 cents a bushel to me, but the Chicago market as a rule is about 2 or 3 cents higher than the St. Louis market, and so whether I ship to the one market or the other, the price is about the same. Or again, I may take it across the bridge in my own wagons, or ferry it across the Mississippi River and sell it to the millers in my town and get nearly the Chicago price for it, less the seven and a fraction cents that I pay for freight, or less the four and a fraction cents that I pay in St. Louis.

They will not pay any more for the wheat than that, because they know I can not get any more for it in the great central markets than that price.

Now, my friends, the farmers throughout the length and breadth of the wheat-growing districts of the United States, and the cotton-producers as well, are brought down to this simple proposition, that one of two things must come and that in the near future, either that there shall be an absolute cessation of the attempt to raise wheat or cotton or, at present prices, there will come absolute bankruptcy. I will make a proposition now to any of these New York gentlemen and furnish him the facts and the figures, the bills of sale and all that: On these magnificent bottom farm lands—as good as any in the world—these rich Illinois bottom lands, I have grown three crops of wheat in the last three years, including the one which I have not seen, and which is just now being harvested. I do not know what it will yield. The one last year was a miserable failure; the one the year before that was less than half a crop; but without regard to what the present crop is, I will sell this year's crop and the last two years' together, and give him $500 if he will pay for me the amount I have paid out of my salary for labor to the farmers in my absence there to produce these three crops.

Mr. QUIGG. You want to sell it before the bill passes.

A MEMBER. And make the contract in writing and put a stamp on it.

Mr. HATCH. If this bill passes, let me say to the gentleman from New York, I am just as sure that when the conditions of trading in the United States conform themselves to the honest and honorable methods provided for in this bill, that every farmer's product named in the bill will be enhanced.

Mr. FUNK. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HATCH. I decline to yield.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope my friend will allow a gentleman who is so thoroughly familiar with this subject, to ask a question for information.

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield to one gentleman without making a discrimination, and that I will not do on this floor. I am tired now, as it is, without any interruptions, and my time is limited. I have a duty here to perform to-day that is higher than any matter of mere personal consideration.

Nothing in the world but the sense of duty I feel to the committee that has intrusted me with this bill, and the interests of the people of the United States, would induce me to take the floor at all to-day, feeling as I do.

Now, it has been said that this bill would so interfere with legitimate trading throughout the country that the farmer and planter would be injured. Why, friends have come to me in the last hour and asked me if the farmers and planters were exempted from the provisions of this bill.

I have replied to them by asking them to go and read for themselves the fourteenth section of the bill. I doubt if any bill was ever presented to this House that had one section in it that had closer scrutiny in the committee reporting the bill than this section had in the Committee on Agriculture. There are the two gentlemen from Illinois, one upon this side [Mr. FORMAN] and the other upon the other side [Mr. FUNK]. There is the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ALEXANDER]. There is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. There is the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SHELL]. There is the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES].

That committee embraces all these great agricultural States, and every single one of those representatives was alive to every word and every punctuation mark in that section; and when it was agreed upon, they were satisfied with its provisions, that it would protect every farmer and every planter in the ordinary business of his farm from any charge, or regulation, or restriction of this measure.

But these gentlemen tell us that there is no need for this legislation; that nobody has demanded it. Well, I have answered that time and time again; but I want to repeat it once more, that it may go to every cabin and to every farmhouse in this land, from the Canadian border to the Gulf, that every single farmer's organization in the United States, of any name or description; every single agricultural paper, weekly or monthly, in the United States; every single semiagricultural paper in the United States, has advocated for years the passage of this measure, and begged and prayed Congress to adopt and pass it.

Every single association that has represented the farmers of the United States has pleaded for its passage. And, my friends, do not think because these farmers are not coming here in squads and in committees to lobby Congress that they are not alive to this legislation. They will be heard from as soon as the telegraph carries back to the three hundred and fifty-six districts in the United States the names of those members on this floor who voted for and those who voted against the bill. And for fear I forget it, I want to state now, for I want it to go on record, that the only two votes in the Committee on Agriculture against the passage of this bill came from New England, from the two greatest manufacturing States of New England, Massachusetts and New Hampshire. I only make that statement because the gentlemen themselves have made it. Not one single vote was cast against it in the committee from the broad prairies——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HATCH. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. HATCH. There was not a vote against it from Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK] was not present when the vote was taken, but he has had the opportunity during this entire discussion, and he will have an opportunity in a very few moments, to record his vote upon the bill. It was not recorded in the committee. I am talking about the votes that were actually recorded, on the last yea-and-nay vote on the passage of that bill by the committee, authorizing the chairman to report it to the House. I am not mistaken in any statement I make to this House, for I would not purposely mislead the House for my own life.

No protest has ever come to that committee against the passage of this bill, except from the boards of trade of the United States and their representatives. Never, since I have been chairman of that committee, has an agricultural community or any number of agriculturists protested against the passage of the bill. The protests have come from the men who are to be regulated in this system of option gambling, and not from the farmers and the great body of the people of the United States.

I wish I had time to read one one-hundredth part of the letters I have received from every State in this Union from representative men, praying and begging for the passage of this measure; but in reply to that burst of eloquence on the part of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] I want to read a letter from a Texan farmer. It is on very plain paper. It has no embossing marks or great monogram distinctions upon it. It comes from the home of a plain farmer, and it is even written in pencil.

Mr. HUDSON. It is not perfumed?

Mr. HATCH. No, my friend; there is no perfume on it. The only odor there is about this letter is that it comes from an honorable and honest hard-working Texas farmer. Let his letter answer the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]. As I read the heading it is from Quanah. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] if that is in his district?

Mr. CRAIN. No; it is not.

Mr. HATCH. Well, it is in Texas, and the gentleman ought to be glad it is not in his district, for after his speech he would have one manly farmer on his pathway to future success in the great Lone Star State.

Mr. CRAIN. And my district would have a dead Representative, I suppose.

Mr. HATCH. Not by any means. That district will never send anybody but a live Representative to Congress. I may differ with the gentleman, but I honor him for his great ability. This was written in March. I will read it:

QUANAH, TEX., March 19, 1891.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed find clipping from Journal of Agriculture.

I beg leave to state that this expresses our sentiment. For my own part, I have no more confidence in the statements of the market manipulators than in any blackleg you might select. The farmers are too poor and too much scattered to send lobbyists to Washington. Aside from this, when men are sent to Washington to enact laws for the whole people, we can see no place for lobbying. The very idea has a bad savor.

The only plea they have made which seems to catch the Congressman's ear, is that they can not handle the grain, etc., unless they deal in futures. Well, is it a law that the "boards of trade" MUST—handle farmers' products? Shall a few men huddled together in the large cities (who follow tricks that are vile) have their own way against the millions? Why, sir, the farmers believe that they would fare incomparably better if there was not a board of trade in existence. Whose business is it if the farmers suffer for the want of boards of trade? They only ask to be allowed to suffer. Shall the boards of trade tell the farmer what he needs? Or shall the farmer be allowed to speak for himself? They have spoken by every mode of conveying thought. Are they now asked to speak again?

* * * * * * *

The farmers know what they need, but if they did not they would have sense enough not to ask their enemies to become their guardians. But to return to the point mentioned. How a sensible man can be honest and claim that dealing in "wind wheat" helps the handling of the real product is hard to understand.

I think it is.

It is about the same as the claim that the foreigner pays the tariff tax. Now every sensible man knows that if there were no real product there would be no wind product, and that the real product is handled independent of wind. It is, however, an established fact of the history of "pit" trading, that the real product can not be sold on its merit when ten times as much of the wind product is put on the market. There has been so much said on the subject that one feels that patience is about threadbare. No one need to be informed how Texas farmers stand. Their instructions through the Legislature is enough to show that they are a unit, so to speak.

Your own Legislature indorsed and approved the provisions of a similar bill to this, but not so good a one.

Every argument of these gamblers has been answered. If they have anything new will the committee please publish the same in some of the leading agricultural papers so that farmers may answer the new also?

It is sincerely hoped that the bill as published in the papers will pass, and if the boards of trade can not deal in real articles let them dissolve and go into some other business. Let demand and supply come in vogue again. The farmers are not afraid. Some of us know something of this way of doing business, and we know that there will always be a way to carry it on.

Very truly, but plainly,

——— ———,

Congressman HATCH,
Chairman Agricultural Committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is my reply, not only to the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], but to many others that have been made on this floor. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eleven minutes. The gentleman began at twenty minutes after 2, the Chair understands.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Give him all the time he wants.

Mr. HATCH. I will not speak much longer. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for his courtesy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe I simply have vanity enough to think I am the only gentleman upon the floor who could have conducted this bill from the beginning of this struggle down to this hour without losing not only his patience but getting mad enough to say some of the hardest things that ever were said upon this floor in reply to what has been said about this bill.

I told my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] just a short time before I began this address, that if he had been in charge of this bill since last Monday morning, with all the mean things that have been said against it, absolutely without warrant and outside of any parliamentary struggle or bearings, that he would have had an "affair of honor" at Bladensburg every morning during the week in spite of all the laws on the statute books. [Laughter.] But I do not intend to be "roped into" saying anything half as bad as those gentlemen have said about the bill.

I regret it very much that the young gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] had to rush into print far in advance of the consideration of this measure and stigmatize it, if he was properly reported, as a combination of "ignorance and anarchy." Well, now, I am very sorry that he said it. I have been expecting him to get up here and withdraw it, because I happened to be in the Chair——

Mr. QUIGG. Will you give me the time to do so? It will only be a moment.

Mr. HATCH. No, sir; I can not yield. The gentleman had opportunity when he made his speech. If the gentleman will simply state to me that he never used that language I will have nothing further to say.

Mr. QUIGG. I never used that language, nor used that language attributed to me.

Mr. HATCH. Then that is an end of it. I accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. QUIGG. I do not indorse either of those terms, whatever I may say about the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Now, my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. WARNER] made one of his characteristic speeches, which I always listen to, because no man inside of the Capitol can get beyond the sound of his voice when he gets started, and especially on an antioption bill. [Laughter.] But he so far forgot himself in this matter during debate that he went away outside of the bill and undertook to conjure up men of straw to fight, as if he had not enough in the real meat and provisions of the bill to occupy one man's attention for an hour and a half. In discussing this bill on the floor he built up houses in New York that are built by future contracts.

I felt sorry for that gentleman; sorry for him because he had underestimated the intelligence of the audience that he was addressing—the House of Representatives. That speech must have been made for circulation in the Five Points of New York. I know of no other place in the United States where it would get a respectful hearing. Everybody knows that there is not a single thing that enters into the construction of a house that is embraced in the provisions of the bill.

Failing to answer my opening statement, he or any of those gentlemen, they get off into the lane of their fancy or misrepresentation and undertake to fight it in that way. But you can not escape it. You have got to vote in a few moments upon this measure as a whole, and you have got to record your votes as representative of your people one way or the other.

My distinguished friend, who always tries to be amiable, always tries to be witty, and never, never makes anything but a failure at the last, my friend, the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. HARTER. Hear, hear! [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Ohio tramps around his seat and in the aisles and takes this bill and crushes it in his hand and slings it, as he says, into the wastebasket of the literature of legislation, and then proclaims that nobody in the world knows anything about this but him. [Laughter.] The gentleman thinks that there is a great deal of ignorance in this bill. That gentleman's greatest misfortune is his own egotism. [Laughter and applause, in which Mr. HARTER joined.]

I have never heard him before speak otherwise of any proposition that he did not indorse and approve. Nobody has any common sense but the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HARTER. That is right.

Mr. HATCH. When that gentleman leaves this House, as I understand he has elected to do of his own volition on the 4th of next March, there will be a bigger void in the House than has ever been in it in the fifteen years I have been a member of it; more egotism and less ability will go out of it then than ever went out before in the person of one man. [Laughter.]

When a man comes here and claims that nobody has any sense but himself, that nobody knows anything about the farmers of the United States but himself, and in fact, that nobody knows anything about anything in the world but HARTER, it is too much. That is the gentleman's platform. He gets up with it in the morning and goes to bed with it at night, and then he invites a moderate and modest man like myself, an old-fashioned Democrat, to go and lie down in his political bed. My friends, I would rather go to bed with a rail-fence. [Laughter.] I would rather lie down politically with any Populist, or any Greenbacker, or anybody else that ever held a seat on this floor, than with the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Of all the abominations of policy and of principle that I abhor the worst are those which the gentleman advocates, which would bring ruin and disaster to the great body of my people and would build up more and more millionaires in the United States. I would trudge in the heat from here to Georgia to sleep in the same political bed with Tom Watson before I would stretch my limbs in the political bed where the gentleman from Ohio lies. [Laughter.]

I indorse and reiterate what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] said the other day. If I had to choose between the harmless vagaries of Coxey and his followers, between tramping the balance of this season through the land under Coxey's banner, eating small rations of dry bread and Potomac or other river water—if I had to choose between that and indorsing the doctrines of the gentleman from Ohio, which, in their operation, would produce more followers of Coxey in one lump than all the followers of Coxey can breed in a hundred years, I would go in the ranks and tramp with the commonwealers rather than follow the banner on which is inscribed: "Ruin to nine-tenths of the people! Down with the industrious workingman, and up with the golden calf of single gold monometalism." [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for just a moment more in which to thank the House for its very polite attention, and to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] may be permitted to offer two amendments to the fourteenth section of the bill simply to improve the verbiage. There is nothing substantial in the amendments, in my judgment, and the gentleman thinks so himself, but he believes that they will make the meaning a little plainer, and I beg the House to give unanimous consent that they may be offered.

Mr. TRACEY. Let them be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend section 14, page 17, by adding after the word "by," in line 26, the words "or with," and in line 27, by adding after the word "delivery" the words "or purchase."

Amend section 14, on page 17, by striking out all after the word "or," in line 30, down to and including the word "productive," in line 31, and inserting the following: "are to be grown or produced within fifteen months from time of such contract."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that the gentleman from Arkansas be allowed to offer these amendments?

Mr. QUIGG. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. Before submitting the question upon the amendments, the Chair, in response to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER], as well as by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK], would state that the original agreement made in the House on Tuesday provided that on yesterday evening the previous question should be ordered on the bill and pending amendments, but that order did not provide that amendments could be offered, and under the order no amendment could have been offered unless the House had previously terminated general debate. Therefore, under that order, unless the House had terminated general debate, no amendment could have been pending.

The next day there was an agreement to terminate general debate, and in modification of the other agreement it was provided that the general debate should close with the adjournment on yesterday, and the House, after the expiration of the morning hour to-day, should proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. In the effort to reach that agreement it was suggested by the gentleman from New York himself that permission should be given to offer as many amendments as members might desire, and that those amendments should be considered as pending.

To that suggestion the gentleman from Missouri objected, and after some discussion in which several members participated, an order was finally adopted to proceed for two hours this morning under the five-minute rule. The Chair is therefore of opinion that no amendment could have been pending under the order that would not have been pending in the absence of the agreement and under the regular rules of the House.

Mr. WARNER. I have no question as to the entire correctness of the ruling of the Speaker. I had understood that to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] there was an amendment pending proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK]. I may have been mistaken in that assumption; but it was upon that assumption—that such an amendment was regularly in order under the five-minute rule, and was pending at the time the Committee of the Whole rose—that the parliamentary inquiry was made by me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands. The question, then, is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HATCH. I demand a division of the question so that the amendment offered in Committee of the Whole by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], may be voted upon separately.

Mr. TRACEY. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, upon the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] that this demand is not in order must rule that an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole as an entirety is not divisible.

Mr. HATCH. What is the statement of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In support of the ruling just stated the Chair would refer the gentleman from Missouri to the decision which has been made not once, but several times. On page 362 of the Digest the gentleman will find the ruling stated in this language:

On an amendment reported as a single amendment from the Committee of the Whole a division of the question can not be had.

This was decided in the Twenty-eighth, the Twenty-ninth, the Thirtieth, and the Thirty-seventh Congresses.

Mr. HATCH. But the amendment coming to the House from the Committee of the Whole is in the nature of two amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But they have been reported to the House as a single amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Then I demand a separate vote on the whole amendment, which includes that of the gentleman from Louisiana, and on that I ask the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri demands a separate vote on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. As I understand the position of the matter is this: I offered an amendment; to that an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], and another by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. Both of those amendments to my amendment were adopted.

Mr. BOATNER. No; the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] was rejected.

Mr. COX. Oh, no; it was adopted. Now, the point I am trying to get at is this, that upon both those amendments to the amendment a yea-and-nay vote was demanded, and notice was given——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee will perceive upon a moment's reflection that in the House the question will be on the adoption of the amendment as a whole—not as in Committee of the Whole, first upon the amendment to the amendment and then upon the amendment as amended. The whole amendment is reported to the House as a single proposition.

Mr. COX. I see. That is exactly right.

Mr. HARTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. At what time will a motion to recommit this bill be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After the third reading.

Mr. HARTMAN. I give notice, then, that after the third reading I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 15, section 1, after the word "hops," add the word "flour;" so as to read:

"Raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, flour, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, or pickled meat."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the second amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after word "meat," on page 2, line 8: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to apply to contracts entered into for future delivery of the aforesaid articles, if at the time of the contract of sale of any of said articles the vender is the actual bona fide owner of the article to be delivered in the future, or has the power and authority to sell and deliver the same as agent of another, the principal owning the property at the time the contract is made by the agent: Provided, That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the bona fide sale, for actual delivery, of any product in due course of business: Provided, That in case a seller described in this act shall in fact be the owner of the property contracted to be sold at the time of the sale or at the time fixed in the contract for the delivery the failure to deliver the same, when caused by delay in transportation or fault of the carrier, shall be sufficient excuse for nonpayment of the final stamp tax provided for in this act."

Mr. HATCH. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. LACEY to act as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 129, answered "present" 1, not voting 111; as follows:

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania, on the antioption bill. Mr. BROSIUS would vote for the bill, and Mr. ADAMS against it.
Mr. COOPER of Indiana with Mr. DUNPHY, on the antioption bill. Mr. COOPER would vote for it, and Mr. DUNPHY would vote against it.
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. MCCLEARY, be excused from attendance, as he is sick.
Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same request in behalf of my colleague, Mr. STONE, who is confined to his room by sickness.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, these requests will be granted.
There was no objection.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.
Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Would it be in order now to move to recommit?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That might be in order now, but it will be equally in order after the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.
The question being upon the passage of the bill——
Mr. BLACK of Georgia. I submit this motion to recommit the bill with instructions.
Mr. HATCH. I desire to raise the point of order that under the special rule adopted by the House a vote on the final passage of the bill must be taken under that order, and it prohibits the consideration of a motion to recommit. The rule itself specifically provides that the vote shall be taken on the passage of the bill without intervening motions.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the special rule could operate with no more force than does the previous question, and under the previous question a motion to recommit with instructions is in order.
The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia.
The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report a bill prohibiting interstate dealing in what is commonly known as "futures," and which have been held by the courts to be gambling contracts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the motion should be to commit, inasmuch as this bill has never been before the Judiciary Committee. It comes from the Committee on Agriculture.
Mr. HATCH. I want to raise another point of order on the motion that the instructions are not in order, and would not have been as an amendment to the bill. You can not do by indirection what can not be done directly.
I make the point of order that the instructions are not germane to the bill and would not have been germane as an amendment to any section of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Missouri is correct thus far, that a motion to recommit with instructions would not be in order if it embraced a proposition which would not be in order as an amendment. The Chair is of opinion, too, that the motion would not be in order as an amendment to the bill.
Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Would it not be in order to amend the bill to confine its operation to interstate transactions?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that this has been considered and treated as a bill to raise revenue. Similar bills have been held by the regular occupant of the chair, as well as his predecessors, to be revenue bills. The Chair thinks it would not be in order to commit a bill raising revenue to the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of making it a penal statute.
Mr. HARTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HARTMAN. If the Chair has sustained the point of order made against the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, will another motion to recommit with instructions be in order?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. This motion having been ruled out, the Chair would treat it as no motion.
Mr. HARTMAN. I now offer the motion to recommit with instructions which I send up and ask to have read.
Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. WARNER. I wish to speak upon the former motion.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled upon the question, but will hear the gentleman from New York.
Mr. WARNER. I wish to suggest, with the permission of the Speaker, that though the suggestion of the Chair may be in every respect correct, I think it does not affect this point, that whatever might have been the natural course of this bill, yet the House itself, by virtue of a power which is frequently asserted, and has been on this very bill, has the undoubted right to commit it to any committee which it may see fit to put in charge of the measure.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York——
Mr. HATCH. That can only be done under the rules of the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore (continuing). That in the Digest, on page 501, he will find this ruling:

A motion to recommit with instructions to report a certain amendment is not in order if the proposed amendment is not in order as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. WARNER. It may be, Mr. Speaker, I have misunderstood the instructions as read, but the bill under consideration does make penal provisions; and therefore unless I am mistaken in the nature of the instructions the point can not lie against them.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present bill imposes cumulative taxes. This motion to recommit is to report a bill prohibiting dealings.
Mr. WARNER. Certainly; and inasmuch as this bill prohibits absolutely these dealings except upon certain conditions, then I respectfully submit that the amendment would have been perfectly in order to strike out the conditions and leave the prohibition.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair adheres to his opinion that the motion to recommit with that instruction is not in order.
Mr. HARTMAN. I ask that my motion to recommit be reported, and that a vote be taken upon it.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Montana.
The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to recommit with instructions, by Mr. HARTMAN:
"I move to recommit this bill, 7097, to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to report it back to the House with an amendment providing for the free coinage of gold and silver at a ratio of 16 to 1."

[Laughter and applause.]
Mr. TRACEY. I raise the point of order against that instruction.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is clearly not in order.
Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair that that motion is not in order at this time.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair assumes that the gentleman is not earnest in appealing from that decision.
Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like very much to say that upon the question of the free coinage of silver I should like to have a vote——
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?
Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.
Mr. HARTMAN. I withdraw the appeal.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The appeal is withdrawn.
Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report a substitute for it, limiting the taxation which is proposed by the bill to transactions between citizens of different States; in other words, to limit it to interstate transactions.
Mr. HATCH. I make the same point of order against the instruction.

Mr. BOATNER. So as not to interfere with or invade the rights of the citizens of the several States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana will reduce his motion to writing. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BOATNER. I will read it for the benefit of the House.

Resolved, That this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report a similar bill limiting its provisions to transactions between citizens of different States.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the instruction is not in order, as it changes the entire theory of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is in order. The House may limit the operations of the bill within the lines already laid down in it, and the Chair thinks the motion is in order.

Mr. BOATNER. I move the adoption of that resolution, and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report a similar bill limiting its provisions to transactions between citizens of different States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOATNER. I demand the yeas and nays on that. [Cries of "Oh, no!" and "It is too hot!"]

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Forty-four gentleman have arisen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. BOATNER. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the ayes are 44, the noes are 178—not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. BOATNER. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that that has already been voted down.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to move to recommit the bill with instructions to report a bill including sugar, refined and unrefined.

Mr. HATCH. But one motion to recommit can be offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] moved to recommit the bill with instructions, and upon that he demanded the previous question. The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and there was no division. The previous question was ordered, and the Chair stated the question to be upon agreeing to the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana. Upon that vote the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it, and the gentleman from Louisiana demanded a division——

Mr. BOATNER demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair proceeded to take that vote, and then the gentleman from Louisiana, before the Chair had concluded the vote, demanded the yeas and nays. The Chair requested as many as favored taking the vote by yeas and nays to rise and be counted. Forty-four gentlemen rose to be counted, as seconding the demand for the yeas and nays; then the Chair announced that not a sufficient number had arisen, because that was not one-fifth of the previous vote. Then the gentleman demanded the other side. The Chair requested those opposed to taking the vote by yeas and nays to rise and be counted.

Thereupon 178 gentlemen arose in opposition to the demand for the yeas and nays. That being more than four times as many as had arisen to demand the yeas and nays, the Chair declared that a sufficient number had not arisen to second the demand for the yeas and nays, and that the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. BOATNER. I then asked for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman then demanded tellers on the demand for the yeas and nays. As many as favor ordering tellers on the demand for the yeas and nays will rise and be counted.

Tellers were refused, 26 members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Mr. FUNK. I now move to recommit, with instructions to include sugar, refined and unrefined.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK] that only one motion to recommit is in order. One such motion has already been made and rejected by the House.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK] rise?

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will it be in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to eliminate the word "futures" wherever it occurs, and report the bill back.

Mr. HATCH. The Chair has just decided that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be in order. Only one motion to recommit is in order.

Mr. HATCH. I now demand the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. FUNK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FUNK. Do I understand that my motion is ruled out of order, and that there is only one motion to recommit in order, when there is another motion on an entirely different subject-matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only one motion to recommit is in order, and a difference in the subject-matter does not alter the rule. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] was permitted to submit his motion, because the motion first submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLACK] was ruled to be out of order, as was also the motion of the gentleman from Montana. These two motions having been held not germane, it was as though they had not been made. The Chair, then, in accordance with the rules, entertained one motion to recommit the bill. That motion having been rejected, the question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HATCH. And on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 150, nays 89, answered "present" 1, not voting 114; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. MOON.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. MEREDITH on the anti-option bill. Mr. TALBOTT, if present, would vote against the bill, and Mr. MEREDITH for it.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. If he were present he would vote for the bill, and I should vote against it.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Speaker, on the final passage of the bill I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDOWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "aye."

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire the RECORD to show that on this bill I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY]. If he were present I should vote "aye," and he would vote "no."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MOON, is absent on account of sickness in his family, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BARNES, is necessarily absent; if present he would vote "no."

Mr. TYLER. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague, Mr. TURNER, is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the title of the bill stand as reported to the House, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. That seems to be unnecessary under the present rules.

Mr. HATCH. It is a proper parliamentary motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman move to amend the title of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. I do not. I move that the title stand as reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As a matter of course that requires no motion, because the passage of the bill adopts the title. But a motion to amend the title is in order.

Mr. HATCH. That is the very reason why I make my motion. My motion is a parliamentary one and is in order, and it is intended to prevent a motion to amend the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was at first inclined to think that the only motion that would be in order after the passage of the bill would be to amend the title, but on further reflection the Chair believes the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

Mr. BURROWS. I call the attention of the Chair to page 553 of the Digest, where I find this:

Unless a separate vote is finally called for, however, the preamble and title as reported to the House are considered adopted on the passage of the bill or resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the title of the bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole will stand adopted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to; the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BYNUM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether he desires to have the bill read the first time, and also whether he desires general debate. I will say to him that if, during the progress of the bill, he desires more time than can be had under the five-minute rule, we can readily arrange so as to give him sufficient time for discussion.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. So far as I am personally concerned, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to call for the first reading of the bill, nor have I, personally, any desire to consume time at present in general debate. It is possible that as we progress in the consideration of the bill we may reach a point where general debate will be desirable. If so, I am inclined to think that the committee will grant it on the recommendation of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman that whenever he may think it necessary to have general debate, I shall be more than willing to agree to it.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, in the interest of our side, whether it would not be well to have the bill read, or else to have a general explanation of it by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I take it for granted that the gentleman will explain the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, yes; I will explain it. I ask consent, Mr. Chairman, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that general debate be closed.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey. I object.

Mr. SAYERS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The Clerk began to read the bill.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that debate was to be allowed. Understanding now that it is, I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey withdraw his objection?

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey. I have withdrawn it, under the pledge of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the committee that this bill carries $4,890,593.78. Leaving out the appropriations for pensions in previous years, it carries about the same amount of deficiencies that was carried in the bill passed at the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, and also about the amount carried in the deficiency bill of the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, except that the number and amount of judgments of the Court of Claims is considerably larger, as are also the appropriations for the support of the judicial department.

On account of the troubles which have occurred in the Western and Northwestern States where railroads have been seized and United States marshals have been compelled to interfere and restore possession of the trains, the appropriation for the Department of Justice has been greater than for previous years. We have in the bill appropriations for the State Department; and I might say here that such appropriations have been required under every Administration for the State Department in order to enable that Department to settle its accounts with consuls whose terms have expired. We also have appropriations for the Navy Department, the object of which is to enable the different bureaus to settle one with another and with the accounting officers of the Treasury without additional expenditure. In other words, the bulk of the appropriations which the bill carries for the State and Navy Departments involve no expenditure, and they have been made only for the purpose of settling accounts in the Treasury Department.

There is a large appropriation in the bill to pay a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered in favor of the old settlers, and amounting to near a million of dollars. In accordance with the recommendation of the Department of Justice, the committee has unanimously decided not to make any appropriation for the payment of judgments for Indian depredations; but instead of such an appropriation there is in the bill a clause appropriating some $3,000 to enable the Department of Justice to inquire into the judgments already rendered against the United States in favor of claimants under this law.

From information which has been gathered by a Senate committee we are led to believe that gross frauds have been committed upon the Government in the obtaining of some of these judgments; and under the circumstances, and with the statements and evidence before us, we did not think it prudent to appropriate to pay these judgments, amounting to about $450,000; but, as I have said, we have recommended an appropriation of $6,000 to enable the Attorney-General to inquire into these judgments, and report his findings at the next session of this Congress.

I will say again that this bill contains those ordinary and usual appropriations which appear in all deficiency bills under every Administration and in every Congress. They are neither less nor greater upon the average than the deficiencies which have been reported to and provided for by previous Congresses, saving and excepting only the increases which I have mentioned.

Mr. REED. I presume there is nothing in this bill which shows the malign influence of the Fifty-first Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all, although there are appropriations for deficiencies that have accrued during the present and prior years.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to suggest that if this bill is in the usual form and has been agreed to by the Appropriations Committee, we might, by unanimous consent, report it back to the House and pass it this evening, and then have an adjournment until Monday next.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I do not think that would be proper.

Mr. SAYERS. With the explanation I have made, as the hour of 5 o'clock is now at hand, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BYNUM reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. TURNER of Virginia, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that we now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

There was no objection.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. BAILEY, Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session under an order which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall, on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, which evening session shall be devoted to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes. (Rule XXVI, paragraph 3.)

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, pending which motion I ask unanimous consent that all bills considered this evening shall be considered under the five-minute rule only as to debate.

Mr. LANE. I object to that.

The question being taken on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar there were, on a division (called for by Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina)—ayes 31, noes 0.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I simply want to call attion to one fact. I notice that all the "objectors" are here, and very few of the "friends of the soldier."

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] is agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement prior to submitting a proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, at a meeting of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to-day, at which there was more than a quorum present, I was directed by the unanimous voice of the committee to ask as to all the bills which may be considered to-night, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, they may be called up in the order in which they stand on the Calendar, the suggestion coming from myself as to which bill shall first be taken up.

Mr. STALLINGS. Let me understand the gentleman's proposition. You do not mean to cut out bills reported from the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman again state his proposition?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that so far as the consideration of bills favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions is concerned, that they may be taken up in the order as they appear on the Calendar, and such bills as I may choose to ask consideration of shall be considered, and the others may be passed over without prejudice. I do this by direction of the unanimous vote of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not disturb the Calendar as to the consideration of other bills in order under this rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not at all.

Mr. HULL. This applies only to pension bills?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Those which the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions may designate.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It only applies to the bills reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions as we reach them.

Mr. HULL. And if bills are reached on the list from the other committees, for instance the Military Committee, they are not interfered with?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not at all.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to suggest to my colleague on the committee that I think his construction of the order is not exactly as understood by the balance of the committee. The effect of the order, as I understand it, was that those bills when reached on the Calendar could be laid over at the suggestion of the gentleman without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That is substantially the suggestion I made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MARSH. This is allowing one man to determine what the committee shall consider, if I understand it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not at all; only at the suggestion of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to indicate those bills that should be considered at this session to-night. I will state that this arrangement was adopted at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. MARSH. I would ask what is the purpose of the arrangement?

Mr. BRETZ. To avoid the scenes that we have had heretofore at evening sessions.

Mr. MARSH. Is it the purpose of this suggestion to allow the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to select those bills only that members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions are interested in particularly?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not at all. It applies to all bills reported from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3693) for the relief of Louisa B. Hull.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I suggest that under the order just adopted this bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill, under the order, will be passed over; and the Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2156) for a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow of Henry M. Black, late colonel of the United States Army, deceased.

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask that the bill be passed over under the order.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 811) for the relief of Harriett Woodbury.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Let that be passed over under the order.

MARGARET A. WOODS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6050) to pension Margaret A. Woods, widow of William W. Woods, late of Company E, Sixteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret A. Woods, widow of William W. Woods, late a member of Company E, Sixteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and allow her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the report in that case be read, and I invite the careful attention of the committee to the reading.

The report, by Mr. MCDANNOLD, was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 6050) to pension Margaret A. Woods, and submit the following report:

The petitioner was the wife, and believes herself to be the widow, of William W. Woods, who served in Company E, Sixteenth Illinois Infantry, from May 24, 1861, to June 12, 1864. The petitioner was married to the soldier July 12, 1857; her claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau for the reason that she is unable to prove positively that the soldier is dead. She is 71 years of age, and very poor.

The petitioner, in her testimony on file in the Pension Bureau, states that soldier came to Ripley, Ill., about a year before she married him, a perfect stranger, and she never knew his people; that he came home from the Army June 20, 1864, and left June 28, 1864, and she has never seen him since; that they parted on very friendly terms, and he said he was going to Tennessee to get work in a Government bakery; but she never heard from him again; he never wrote to her; she has done all in her power to trace him, and believes him dead, for he was fond of his family. She further states that he was home on furlough for a time in the fall after the surrender of Vicksburg (1863). She states that he claimed to be a few years younger than herself.

William B. Dennis, of Ripley, Ill., a brother of the petitioner, testifies to the same effect, and says that the soldier told him he had been a sailor from New York to Liverpool, and he judged him to be an Englishman; that he was a baker by trade when he came to Illinois, and affiant never knew where he came from; he was industrious, and took good care of his family; attended strictly to his business. Affiant has never heard a word from him since June 1, 1864, and believes him to be dead.

William H. H. Hardin, of Ripley, Ill., testifies that soldier's age was given at 38 years when he enlisted, but he looked older than that.

There is nothing to indicate that the soldier has been seen or heard of by his old friends since 1864, and there is abundant proof of the extreme poverty of the petitioner.

In view of these facts, the absence of thirty years, his failure to file a claim for pension, and the fact of his advanced age, the conviction that the soldier is dead seems inevitable, and your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass after being amended as follows:

Strike out the words "pension laws" in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the words "act approved June 27, 1890."

Strike out all after the word "infantry" in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the consideration of the committee another amendment, which I think should have been adopted, and which has been adopted in similar cases. I move to add to the amendments, "Provided, That in the event the soldier is found to be alive the pension herein granted shall cease."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EARNEST C. EMERSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Earnest C. Emerson, dependent and imbecile child of Orrin M. Emerson, late a private in Company H, First Rhode Island Cavalry, at the rate of $12 per month, payable to his legally constituted guardian.

Mr. STALLINGS. Let us have the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. MCETTRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson, and submit the following report:

A similar bill passed the Senate and was favorably reported by the House committee in the Fifty-second Congress. This bill passed the Senate March 5, 1891, and the facts bearing on the case are as follows:

Orrin M. Emerson served in Company H, First Rhode Island Cavalry, from September 6, 1862, to June 6, 1865, and died September 25, 1875, having never applied for a pension. His widow died August 3, 1889, having never applied for pension.

The beneficiary of this bill is the son of the soldier and is now 32 years of age, and a hopeless and helpless imbecile as shown by the testimony of physicians. These facts appear from the papers on file in the Pension Bureau. A claim filed by his guardian was rejected on the ground that he could not be pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, because over 16 years of age at the passage of the act. It is not alleged that the soldier's death was in any way due to his military service. The son is dependent entirely on a maiden aunt who has been appointed his guardian, and who is little able to care for him.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill after being amended as follows:

"Strike out the words 'at the rate of twelve dollars per month,' in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the words, 'subject to the limitations and provisions of the act of June 27, 1890.'"

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD J. BUTLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2726) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Edward J. Butler.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Unless there is some gentleman here in charge of that bill who desires it to be considered, I ask that it be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I should like to have the bill considered. I think it will commend itself to the approval of every gentleman here.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I hope that bill will be laid aside, and not considered this evening.

Mr. PICKLER. If I understand the proceedings had, when these bills are passed over, the Calendar will be gone through with before these bills can again come before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; the order which was adopted relates only to this evening's session. The bills will retain their places on the Calendar, and will come up for consideration at the next Friday evening session.

Mr. HULL. I see that the gentleman who made the report [Mr. BOWERS of California] is present, and I will withdraw my request that the bill be passed over.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I hope such a bill as this will not be brought forward to-night. My understanding was that we were to consider meritorious bills; that bills removing charges of desertion, and bills to pension widows who had married the second time, and such bills, were to be laid aside and not considered to-night. Let us pass some bills that are meritorious, and against which there will be no objection. That is my idea. I told some gentlemen this afternoon that I would have no objection to that. I hope these desertion bills will not be brought up. There will certainly be objection to them. My understanding was that bills that would block business were to be passed over.

Mr. WAUGH. The order adopted to-night applies simply to bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This is a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is no violation of the agreement made this evening.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I have no objection to the bill being read, but I have stated my understanding of the matter.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I think if the gentleman will give attention to the reading of the report, he will have no objection to the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Edward J. Butler, late a musician in the Seventeenth Indiana Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay or emoluments shall become due by reason of the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS of California) was read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred House bill 2726, report the same back and recommend that it do pass.

The facts of this case are briefly as follows: Shortly before the beginning of the war Edward J. Butler was a homeless waif in the streets of New York. About that time a charitable society took charge of him and found a home for him in the State of Indiana. In June, 1861, when the Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers was mustered into the service, they needed a drummer, and as young Butler was an excellent drummer for a boy, they arranged with the farmer with whom he was living, and who had paid his fare from New York, to let him go with the regiment, the colonel refunding to the farmer the fare which he had paid from New York.

Young Butler was enlisted as a drummer boy and his age given as 13 years, although he was really but 11 years old. He remained with the regiment something over a year, until August, 1862, when the regimental band was mustered out of service. He had no home to go to, and having attached the officers of the regiment to him, he was allowed to remain with the regiment and transferred to Company F of that regiment and entered on the rolls as a member thereof.

In the latter part of August, 1862, at the request of Col. Moore, of the Fifty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, who desired a drummer, young Butler was loaned to that regiment by an understanding between the colonel of it and Lieut. Col. Gorman, then commanding the Seventeenth Indiana Volunteers, and reported for duty to the Fifty-eighth Regiment and served with them.

This arrangement, made by the commanding officer of the Seventeenth Regiment, does not seem to have been participated in by the captain of Company F, with which young Butler was enrolled, and the relations between this captain and the regimental commander not being of the most cordial kind, he seems to have taken offense at the action of the colonel transferring young Butler, and manifested it by having him entered upon the company rolls as a deserter.

At the time that this entry was made the Fifty-eighth Indiana and the Seventeenth were brigaded together and camped side by side, and young Butler was daily mingling with his old comrades of the Seventeenth Regiment and known by all to be still in the service, although temporarily assigned to the Fifty-eighth Regiment. He was a great pet with the men, who had come to call him "Johnny," which was his middle name, instead of Edward, which was his first name, and hence he gradually obtained the name of Johnny Butler, and the name continued as his ordinary designation from that time on, and he gradually, as he grew up, came to write his name John E. Butler instead of Edward J. Butler.

He remained on duty regularly and faithfully until some time in October, 1862, when the Seventeenth Regiment was being paid off at Louisville, and his first knowledge that he was not still on the rolls of the company came when he presented himself with the company to receive his pay at that time, and then first found that his name had been dropped from the rolls. He was thus left, a boy of only 12 years of age, with no home to go to, and no friends except as he had formed them in the regiment.

In some way he made his way back to Indiana, and he embraced the first opportunity to return to the service, which occurred when Lieut. Col. Gorman, who was in command of the Seventeenth Regiment when he was temporarily transferred to the Fifty-eighth, returned to Indiana and raised the One hundred and twentieth Indiana Regiment. Knowing young Butler, Col. Gorman readily took him into his new regiment as a drummer boy, and had him duly enlisted, and he served faithfully until honorably discharged with his regiment January, 1866, having been promoted meantime to the position of principal musician of the regiment.

These facts are fully substantiated by the statement of Col. Wilder, the colonel of the Seventeenth Indiana Regiment, and Col. Moore, of the Fifty-eighth Indiana Regiment, whose affidavits are hereto attached, and by the records of the War Department. There was no possible motive for young Butler to desert, as he had no home except the regiment, and no friends except the officers and members thereof. They were so much attached to him that they had determined, when the regimental band was abolished, that a fund of $1,000, which they had raised to buy new instruments for the band of the Fifty-eighth Regiment, should be set apart for young Butler's education, and the fund at this time was in the hands of the lieutenant-colonel of the regiment for his benefit, which, however, was never paid over or used for his benefit.

Having no particular use for money, he had not drawn his pay, which was also really drawn for him and supervised by the lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. He was at the time he is charged with being a deserter a boy really but 12 years of age, and could hardly be driven from the regiment, where all his friends were, and embraced the earliest opportunity to get back into the Army, which was the only home he knew.

The act of Capt. Thompson in entering him upon the rolls of his company as a deserter was a cruel and unjust one, and the wrong done to this boy, who was faithful in the service and who has grown up to be an honored and respected citizen, ought to be rectified speedily by the passage of this bill.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. That report states all the facts. The remainder of the documents attached to the report are simply the affidavits in support of the statements contained in the report.

Mr. STALLINGS. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection this bill will be laid aside, unanimously, with a favorable recommendation. [Applause.]

There was no objection.

MARY E. COLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5112) for the relief of Mary E. Cole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that that bill be passed over under the order which has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be passed over under the order.

JULIA BEWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3992) to increase the pension of Julia Bews.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Julia Bews, under certificate, 48261, by allowing a rate of $6 per month in addition to her present rate as widow of Alexander Bews, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, and Company H, Eighty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, said increase being on account of Margaret Bews, the permanently helpless daughter of the above-named soldier, and said increase of $6 per month to continue only for and during the life of said Margaret Bews.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as stated in the report, were read.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill H. R. 3992, the intent of which is to increase the pension now paid to Julia Bews by $6 per month on account of a permanently helpless daughter of herself and the soldier.

The following facts appear:

Alexander Bews enlisted in Company A, Sixteenth New York Volunteers, and served two years. He afterward enlisted in the Eighty-third New York Volunteers. He was wounded in action at Spottsylvania Court House, Va., May, 1864, and died from the effect thereof in field hospital May 11. His widow is pensioned at $12 per month.

His dependent daughter, Margaret Bews, was born September 23, 1858. Dr. H. F. Sherman, a reputable physician of fifty-two years' practice, testifies that this daughter has been feeble-minded from infancy, the result of hydrocephalus; that said disease from its nature is of a permanent character, rendering her both helpless and dependent; that her mother, upon whom she relies for support, Mrs. Julia Bews, depends upon her labor for her own and her dependent daughter's support.

The provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, are such that if this daughter had been under 16 years of age at the date of the passage of said act, instead of 32 years, an additional pension of $2 per month would have been continued to her mother, the widow, during the life of said daughter.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended as follows:

Strike out the word "six" in line 6 and line 12 and insert in lieu thereof in each place the word "two."

Strike out all after the word "continue" in line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To the widow only so long as said Margaret Bews shall be in whole or in part supported by her, and in case of death or remarriage of the widow the entire pension of $14 per month shall be continued and paid to said Margaret Bews or her legal guardian."

Mr. STALLINGS. I should like to have the chairman of the committee make a statement of the facts in that case.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS], who introduced the bill, is not here. This bill was reported favorably in the Fifty-second Congress, but there was not time to reach it for consideration, and therefore it failed. It was not defeated. The facts are simply these, that the father served one term and was honorably discharged, and reënlisted and was wounded in action at Spottsylvania in May, 1864.

He died a few days later, in the same month. His widow is pensioned at $12 a month. They have a child who, from infancy has been feeble-minded, as the result of hydrocephalus, water on the brain. She has been an infant all these years, although she is now past 32. Had the widow had minor children in good health they would have been pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, until they were 16 years of age; but this child being over 16 years of age, can not receive anything under that act.

Mr. STALLINGS. The gentleman means that she was over 16 years of age when the law was passed?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes. The committee have thought that in accordance with precedent it was only right, this child being much more of a care than a healthy infant, being a constant charge on the mother, that a small allowence should be made to the mother in the way of an increase of $2 a month.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the character of the testimony in this case?

Mr. STALLINGS. I would like the gentleman, before he proceeds to state what the character of the evidence was, to inform me whether this is only $2 a month additional pension for this child.

Mr. McNAGNY. She would have been entitled to this if the child had been under 16 years of age.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It is only $2 additional. The testimony in favor of this claim was given by Dr. H. F. Sherman, a reputable physician. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS], a member of this House, and also the last, said to the committee that this gentleman was a reputable citizen, and his testimony was entirely creditable; and it is on the testimony of the physician as to her condition that we make the recommendation so far as the disease goes.

Mr. JONES. Was the physician before your committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir; we simply have his affidavit.

Mr. JONES. Were any other witnesses examined?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. There were no other witnesses except this one; but we had the additional fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] stated to us that this gentleman who testified was entirely reputable, and his affidavit was as to the character of the disease.

Mr. BRETZ. Did not he state that he knew the facts?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I do not remember that he did.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to, and the bill as amended will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

ALLIE DILL BROUGHTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 953) to grant a pension to Allie Dill Broughton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Allie Dill Broughton, invalid and feeble-minded daughter of Wilbur F. Broughton, late a corporal of Company I, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mary P. Broughton by allowing her a rate of $2 per month in addition to her present rate as widow of Wilbur F. Broughton, late of Company I, One hundred and twelfth Illinois Infantry, said increase being on account of Alliedell Broughton, the permanently helpless daughter of the above-named soldier, and said increase of $2 per month to continue to the widow only so long as said Alliedell Broughton shall be in whole or in part supported by her; and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, the entire pension of $14 per month shall be continued and paid to said Alliedell Broughton, or her legal guardian."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this case is exactly like the one which has just been passed by the committee. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which is simply to change the name "Alliedell," wherever it occurs, to "Allie Dill." It should be two words. The name occurs in lines 8, 11, and 15. I will simply state that I know the facts in the case myself; I know the witnesses who testified as to the helpless condition of this imbecile, and that the facts as stated are true. The soldier served in my own regiment, and I am well acquainted with the family.

The amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois was agreed to, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. MARY A. MENEFEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6103) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Menefee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary A. Menefee, widow of Richard Menefee, captain Company E, Eighth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, in the late war, as well as a private in Company K, Extra Battalion Missouri Volunteers, in the war with Mexico.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "place upon," in line 4, and substitute in lieu thereof the words "restore to;" add after the word "Mexico," in line 9, the words "and allow her a pension at $8 per month from the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to submit any remarks upon this case, but if any gentleman wants an explanation of it I would ask that the report of the committee be read, as it gives a full statement of the case.

Mr. JONES. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CLARK of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6103) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Menefee, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

Capt. Menefee died March 22, 1863, and after the passage of the Mexican war service pension act of January 28, 1887, Mrs. Menefee made application for pension thereunder as his widow, and her claim, after due investigation, was allowed by the Pension Office by certificate No. 2562.

Subsequently, Mrs. Menefee in order to secure the $2 additional pension provided by the act of June 27, 1890, for minor children, made an application under that act, basing the same upon Capt. Menefee's service in the war of the rebellion.

The proof submitted in this last case developed the fact that prior to her marriage to Menefee the claimant was the wife of one Charles Henry Brink, and pending inquiry into the question as to whether Brink had died or she had been divorced from him prior to her marriage to Menefee her said Mexican war pension was suspended.

In his report of his investigation of the case Special Examiner Wiley Britton makes the following statement:

"She (the claimant) testifies to her marriage with Menefee on April 23, 1865; that her first husband, Charles Henry Brink, went to California before the war and she heard he was dead before she married her second husband; that she was married to Brink May 5, 1857, and that about two and a half years after the war a man came to Bolivar (the place of her residence in Missouri), and claimed to be Brink, her first husband; that she saw this man and does not think he was Brink; that he drove the stage between Bolivar and Springfield part of one summer, and then left, and she has never heard of him since; that she was never divorced from him by law, but by time, as she thought; that the question of the legality of her second marriage came up when she made application for her last husband's arrears of pay, and was decided in her favor; that her second husband's children by his first and second wives brought suit against her for possession of the home place on the ground of her second marriage being illegal, but that the decision of the court was in her favor."

The special examiner adds that the evidence obtained in the investigation shows that Brink went to California about 1858, and was reported to be and was supposed to be dead; that she remarried April 23, 1865, and Brink turned up again about 1867, remained a short time, then left again, and has never been heard of since. It further appears that Mrs. Menefee raised a large family by her second husband, and that she bears a good reputation as the widow of Capt. Menefee, with whom she lived for more than twenty years. The recommendation of the special examiner was that the claimant's name be continued on the pension roll, but the Bureau dropped her name from the list of pensioners and has since refused to restore the pension, notwithstanding the filing of a mass of testimony in full corroboration of her statements.

A bill for the relief of this claimant was unanimously reported to the House with a favorable recommendation by your committee in the Fifty-second Congress, but the bill failed of passage because Congress adjourned before it could be finally disposed of.

After full consideration of all the facts your committee believe that the relief prayed for should be granted, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended with the following amendments:

Strike out the words "place upon," in line 4, and substitute in lieu thereof the words "restore to;" add after the word "Mexico," in line 9, the words "and allow her a pension at $8 per month from the date of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY ANN DONOGHUE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5816) granting a pension to Mary Ann Donoghue.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ann Donoghue, widow of Timothy Donoghue, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add after the word "infantry," in line 7, the words, "and allow her a pension rated at $8 per month."

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5816) granting a pension to Mary Ann Donoghue, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Timothy Donoghue, who enlisted January 10, 1849, in Company F, Fourth United States Infantry, and was discharged November 14, 1852, because of disability arising from abscess of both hips, caused by the kick of a horse while in the discharge of his duty.

At the time of his death, which occurred July 24, 1893, the soldier was receiving a pension rated at $17 per month on account of the above-named injury, and it is shown by the testimony on file at the Pension Bureau that he died from hemiplegia, which was the direct result of the injury received in the service.

Mrs. Donoghue filed a claim July 31, 1893, at the Pension Office, but the same was disallowed September 22, 1893, on the ground that the disease from which the soldier died was incurred in time of peace, and hence there was no provision of law by which she could be allowed a pension.

The general pension laws permit the granting of pensions to soldiers who incurred their disabilities in time of peace prior to March 4, 1861, but make no provision for widows whose husbands die of disability originating under such circumstances. If, however, this claimant's husband had died of disease or injuries arising in the line of duty while serving in the regular Army at any time since March 4, 1861, she would have been pensionable under the law.

In this case the claimant is shown by record and other evidence to be the lawful widow of the soldier. The records of the War Department show the service as above stated, and that the soldier received in line of duty the injury on account of which he was discharged and for which he was on the pension roll at the time of his death, and medical and other evidence shows that his death was finally caused by the injury and its direct results.

Mrs. Donoghue is now about 63 years old, and stands in need of the pension prayed for. She married the soldier October 5, 1850.

Your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the bill is a meritorious one, and its passage is therefore recommended with an amendment adding after the word "infantry," in line 7, the words, "and allow her a pension rated at $8 per month."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear a statement of that case from the chairman of the committee or somebody who knows something about the facts.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that bill comes from the Committee on Pensions, and not from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. JONES. I see that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is present.

Mr. MOSES. The report just read gives a full statement of the facts. All that the committee know is that this soldier died in the fall of 1893. He had been upon the pension roll, being discharged on account of being severely wounded while in the line of duty. Under the pension laws his widow cannot receive the pension that he was receiving at the time of his death, and the committee thought that it was a meritorious case. The widow is very poor and dependent, and the soldier died from an injury received in line of duty. He was accidentally killed.

Mr. JONES. What amount of pension is recommended in this bill?

Mr. MOSES. Eight dollars per month.

Mr. JONES. How did the gentleman say he received his wound?

Mr. MOSES. He was kicked by a horse or a mule—kicked by a mule. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. When was he kicked by the mule?

Mr. MOSES. In 1853.

Mr. JONES. In 1853? Was he a soldier in the late war?

Mr. MOSES. He was not.

Mr. JONES. You say that he enjoyed a pension as long as he lived?

Mr. MOSES. He received a pension up to the time of his death; he was totally helpless nearly all of the time and finally died.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES LANE.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WEADOCK). The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3065) to increase the pension of James Lane.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James Lane, late a member of Company I, Third Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the United States with Mexico, from $8 to $30 per month.

Mr. JONES. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3065) granting an increase of pension to James Lane, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

Mr. Lane served as a sergeant in Company I, Third Illinois Volunteers, in the war with Mexico, and he is now receiving the service pension of $12 per month allowed by law to the destitute and wholly disabled survivors of that war.

This soldier is now about 80 years old and almost totally blind. He has no property, either real or personal, and no income except his pension.

The facts are shown by the testimony of Dr. H. E. Hale, Leonard Bond, and other neighbors and acquaintances of the claimant.

Your committee believe the bill to be meritorious, and therefore recommend its passage with an amendment striking out the word "eight," in line 7, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "twelve," and striking out the word "thirty," in the same line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments recommended in the last paragraph of the report were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWIN OVERMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 6634) to grant a pension to Edwin Overman, an insane child.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Edwin Overman, permanently helpless and insane child of Joseph Overman, deceased, late a private in Company K, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers in the war of the rebellion, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of Congress on the subject of pensions approved June 27, 1890, which pension shall be paid to the legally constituted guardian of said beneficiary.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6634) to pension Edwin Overman, an insane child, makes the following report, to wit:

Joseph Overman was the father of the beneficiary, and enlisted July 21, 1863, in Company K, One hundred and eighteenth Indiana Volunteers in the war of the rebellion. His service was honorable, and he was discharged honorably March 3, 1864. When he was thus discharged he was sick with some trouble which finally resulted in his death with lung disease on February 19, 1880, near Marion, Ind.

The soldier was married on November 15, 1866, to the mother of this beneficiary, Elmira, who bore him four children, the youngest of which arrived at the age of 16 on November 11, 1889.

Edwin, the beneficiary, was born May 1, 1868, arrived at the age of 16 on May 1, 1884, and has been an idiot since his birth, and is now not only an idiot, but perfectly helpless, and requires the constant aid and attendance of another person.

Thomas Overman, father of the soldier, and paternal grandfather of the beneficiary, was the lawful guardian of the beneficiary until he became 21 years old, is a man 79 years of age, and is supporting the latter.

The mother of Edwin died on the 12th day of May, 1879, near Marion, Ind.

Claims for pensions on behalf of the children of the soldier were filed under both the general law and the act of June 27, 1890, but both were rejected on the grounds that said children had all arrived at the age of 16 before the filing of such claims and prior to enactment of the latter law. The claimant's post-office address is Marion, Ind.

The beneficiary has no means of support, and is wholly dependent upon his grandfather, whose age and means are such as to render such support a burden he is not able to bear.

Your committee therefore recommend the pasage of the bill, amended, however, by adding at the close of the bill the words "at the rate of $10 per month."

Mr. CABANISS. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana upon what evidence that report is based?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The evidence in this case consisted of the affidavits of at least two, and my present impression is three or four, neighbors of the guardian of this child. While I do not know them personally, I know them by reputation to be good people, and I believe there is no question whatever as to the facts stated in the report. I drew the report myself, after having carefully read and examined all of the affidavits.

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY TUTTLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 5616) granting a pension to Mary Tuttle.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be passed over under the order made this evening.

DRUZILLA J. RIGG.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill., who is the daughter and only heir of James Depoy (who was second lieutenant in Company A in the Fifty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Infantry in the war of the rebellion, to whom pension certificate numbered 158723 was issued, and who died previous to the receipt by him of said certificate), the amount due upon said certificate at the time of the death of said James Depoy.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MCDANNOLD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, having considered the same, submit the following report:

This is a bill to pay Druzilla J. Rigg, the daughter and sole heir of James Depoy, the amount of the pension allowed said soldier by certificate No. 158723, which he did not receive because he died before the certificate reached him. The pension allowed by such certificate was $7.50 per month from February 20, 1863, and $15 per month from October 21, 1878, to December 7, 1878, when he died, amounting to about $1,400.

This bill proposes to pay to Druzilla J. Rigg, his daughter and sole heir, the amount of the pension which had been allowed him. The evidence shows that this daughter had, since she was 12 years old, kept house for her father, and was thereby deprived of proper advantages for education. During the last six years of his life the soldier was bedridden, and his devoted daughter was his constant attendant. During his prolonged illness all the soldier's property had been expended in doctors' bills and other expenses and at his death the daughter was left without means of support. This pension had been adjudged due the soldier, and in view of the fact that the daughter and not the soldier suffered most from the delay in the adjudication, your committee believes that it is only just that she should receive the amount which had been ascertained to be due. Nothing has been paid as reimbursement.

These facts are clearly shown by the papers in the Pension Bureau and by evidence filed with the committee.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. JONES. I think there ought to be some explanation of that bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr Chairman, I observe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST] is not present; and while the committee felt justified, not only by the facts but by the precedents, in reporting this bill favorably, I think the gentleman from Illinois would prefer to be present when the bill is being considered, as he has personal knowledge of the case. I therefore ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PAULINE J. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 6361) to grant a pension to Pauline J. Smith.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Pauline J. Smith, permanently helpless daughter of Lewis C. Smith, late a private of Company G, Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report be read.

The report (Mr. MCDANNOLD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 6361) to grant a pension to Pauline J. Smith, and submit the following report:

The petitioner is the daughter of Lewis C. Smith, who served in Company G, Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteers, from August 16, 1862, to January 15, 1863, when he was discharged on account of disease of lungs; he was pensioned at $8 on account of disease of lungs, a claim for increase being rejected in July, 1882.

On August 29, 1890, this petitioner filed a claim under act June 27, 1890, which was rejected in July, 1892, on the ground that she was over 16 years of age at the date of approval of said act. In this application she stated that the soldier died in October, 1883, but did not state the cause of death; she also stated that the soldier left a widow, who soon after remarried, and that he left no children under 16 years of age. Proof was furnished that Lewis Smith and Sarah Dillon were married June 27, 1846, and that Pauline J. Smith was born October 16, 1859. She alleged, also, that for twenty-four years she had suffered from paralysis of left side, rendering left arm and leg almost useless.

In evidence filed with Congress it is shown that the petitioner's mother, Sarah Smith, died October 10, 1873, and it is clearly shown that the petitioner is the daughter of the soldier.

Dr. J. C. Westervelt, af Shelbyville, Ill., testifies that he examined the petitioner in 1892:

"She was then 33 years old; she has spinal affection, causing paralysis of left side, face, arm, and leg. As a result the left leg is about 4 inches shorter than the right, and the left arm badly twisted out of shape; she is incurable, and unable to perform manual labor."

Dr. W. J. Eddy testifies to the same and adds that "her speech is affected, also her mental faculties, and that she is not able to do housework or other work."

Two other witnesses testify that she is without means of support and is dependent on relatives.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended as follows: Strike out the words "pension laws," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the words "act of June 27, 1890." Strike out all after the word "Volunteers," in line 8.

Mr. LANE. What pension will this child draw? Does the law make no difference between a case where the man died in the service and a case where he did not die in the service?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Had this soldier's widow survived him, and his death resulted from the service, and had this child been under 16, the widow would have drawn $12 a month and $2 additional on account of the child. There is no pretense, however, that the death of the soldier was due to the service, and his widow also had died.

The application was made under the act of June 27, 1890, the effect of which would have been, had the widow made the application, to give her $8 per month and $2 a month for a child under 16; but the widow being dead and the application being made in the first place in the Pension Office and now through Congress under the act of June 27, 1890, the effect would be to give the child what the mother would have received had she been pensioned under that act. That is the reason why the committee propose to amend the bill by striking out "pension laws" and inserting "the act of June 27, 1890."

Mr. CABANISS. How far back will this pension go?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It will begin with the approval of the act by the President; not before.

Mr. LANE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would make any difference in the amount of this pension whether this soldier died from the effect of his army service or from other causes?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE. That is the reason I sought the floor. I wish to state that I personally knew this soldier, and I know this girl. I myself brought testimony here bearing upon the case. I know the doctors who gave affidavits that this soldier died from the effect of his army service. He was drawing a pension, and his death was due to his service in the Army. In the report made last year on this bill that statement will be found.

The report can be obtained at the document room. This year when I saw the report, I inquired of my colleague [Mr. MCDANNOLD] who reported the case, why the report did not make tha statement. He informed me that he had sent to the Pension Office and got the papers from there. But the trouble proved to be that three or four affidavits filed by me, in addition to the papers in the Pension Office, were not put in the case; and therefore my colleague did not see them.

Now, it would appear under these circumstances that the pension in this case ought to be $12 a month, just as the bill is drawn. We are doing this child a wrong by fixing the pension at a less amount. She is absolutely helpless; she has to be wheeled about; she is incapable of doing anything. I move, therefore, that the amount of the pension be fixed at $12.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman states, as I understand, that we would be doing this applicant an injustice if we gave her a pension of only $10.

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. I do not so understand the matter. Accepting the gentleman's statement as to the cause of this soldier's death, this child would not be entitled under the law to anything at all.

Mr. LANE. The chairman of the committee [Mr. MARTIN] tells me that if the death of the soldier was due to his army service she would be entitled to $12 a month.

Mr. JONES. No, that is a mistake; because she is over 16 years of age. On that account she is not entitled to anything.

Mr. LANE. But it was the intention of the law to cover this class of cases; and it is only through a misconstruction of the law at the Pension Office that a case like this is excluded.

Mr. JONES. But, as I understand, the mother of this applicant died before the death of the soldier.

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Under these circumstances, even if the soldier had been killed in the line of duty, this daughter would not be entitled to a dime under the general law. That is my understanding; and I would be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions would correct me if I have misstated the law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. As an invalid daughter under 16 years of age she would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. JONES. Of course, if she were under 16 years of age. But she is over 16. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] states that it would be doing her an injustice to give her but $10. I can not see that she has a right to anything.

Mr. LANE. I say it would be doing her an injustice to give her only $10, if she is entitled to $12.

Mr. JONES. But she is not entitled under the law to anything.

Mr. LANE. It was the intention of the law of 1890 to cover this class of cases—not merely to include children under 16 years of age.

Mr. JONES. Why, then, is not this case covered?

Mr. LANE. Because of the construction in the Pension Office—Mr. Bussey's construction—which defeated the intention of the law. I was on the committee myself when the bill was reported; and it was understood that such was the intention of the law.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to believe that the understanding of the members of his committee would have anything to do, or ought to have anything to do, with the construction of the law. I suppose the officer who made the construction is the person properly authorized to do so; and whether his construction be correct or not, it must stand until reviewed and reversed.

Mr. LANE. And we are the proper body to review it. If the gentleman will read the law he will see that the intention of the lawmakers was as I state. I was on the committee when the matter was discussed and the bill reported; and I know the intention was to cover this class of invalids.

Mr. JONES. Is there not an appeal from this officer who made this decision?

Mr. LANE. None at all; there is no appeal that I ever heard of.

Mr. JONES. And the law is so plain that anybody would see that such was the intent?

Mr. LANE. I think so; anybody who examines the law.

Mr. MCNAGNY. The fact is, there have been two rulings on the question; one one way and one the other.

Mr. LANE. That is correct.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman had better accept the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. LANE. No; I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) there were—ayes 32, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH BECK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4962) to restore to the pension roll Sarah Beck, widow.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that that bill be passed over under the order.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to place on the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas Corigan, late a member of Company B of the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $72 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out in line 7 the word "seventy-two," and insert "fifty;" so that it will read "$50 per month."

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask for the reading of the report in that case, the majority and the minority.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan from $30 to $72 per month, and submit the following report:

Thomas Corigan was a corporal in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry, enlisted July 28, 1862, and was discharged on January 24, 1864.

At the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was severely wounded in the left hand and is now drawing a pension of $30 per month for that injury, the arm being rendered wholly useless by the wound. At the same time he was wounded by a buckshot in the neck, and the soldier claims that this wound has affected his spine and has produced epilepsy.

The medical evidence shows that the wound in the neck produces distinct crepitus on movement of the neck. The epileptic fits have gradually increased until the soldier is totally helpless and requires constant aid and attendance and has become almost imbecile mentally.

The Pension Bureau in 1892 holds that it can not accept the "fits" as a result of the wound in the back of the neck, but no other cause is evident and medical evidence has been furnished to show that the wound in the neck is the cause of his present condition.

The soldier's condition is helpless in the extreme, and if the wound in the neck is the cause of his injury he would be entitled to $72 per month under the general law. We are not disposed to criticise the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting this portion of the soldier's claim, but we think that it might have very fairly decided the other way under the evidence and examination of the medical boards.

Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade or $50 a month. The committee is adverse to reporting bills changing the rate of pension as fixed by the Pension Bureau, but in a case of extreme helplessness like the present, where the wound has been followed by such helplessness, and there is much evidence to show that the soldier's condition is due to his wound, we are inclined to relax the rule.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting "fifty."

If the case were before us as an original question we would probably have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Pension Bureau, but in the doubt raised in the case we think that the second grade would relieve the wants of the soldier and ought to be granted, especially as the claimant was an excellent soldier, highly commended by Gen. F. T. Sherman, and his severe wounds received in the battle of Chickamauga are clearly shown.

The letter of Col. Sherman is as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
"SECOND DIVISION, FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
"Camp near Blains Cross Roads, East Tennessee, January 10, 1864.

"To whom it may concern:

"This is to certify that Thomas Corigan, an enlisted man of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Infantry, Illinois Volunteers, and corporal of Company B, same regiment, is a soldier good and true; ever faithful in the discharge of duty, never absent without leave, brave as a lion in action, and always at his post. He won the confidence and esteem of his commanding officers by his uniform good conduct and soldierly bearing. I therefore take great pleasure and bear willing testimony to his merit, and request that his wishes may be consulted, inasmuch as he is disabled from active field service by reason of wounds received on the hard-fought and bloody field of Chickamauga on the 20th of September, 1863.

"F. T. SHERMAN,
"Colonel Eighty-eighth Infantry, Illinois Volunteers."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The views of the minority (by Mr. MCDANNOLD) were read, as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan, and submit the following statement of their views:

The records of the War Department show that this soldier served from July 25, 1862, to January 29, 1864, in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry. He was discharged on account of disability from gunshot wound of hand received at Chickamauga. He has been pensioned for this wound ever since discharged, and now receives $30 per month since August 4, 1886. His application, filed February 12, 1864, alleged only this wound. A later application, filed September 11, 1866, states that he also "suffers pain in the neck from the effects of a wound there received." In 1887 he claimed that deafness had resulted from that wound, and states that the ball was removed in the field hospital; in April, 1888, he alleged resulting impairment of vision and of hearing; in September, 1888, he refers to "buckshot wound in back of neck;" in February, 1892, he alleged affection of sight and hearing and epilepsy as a result of said wound.

In September, 1892, the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received this wound in the neck, but rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. This action was taken after a careful special examination of the claim, and was affirmed by Secretary Bussey on appeal January 3, 1893.

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1892, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

"The first time I felt any serious disability from the wound of my neck was about fourteen years ago (1878). I was flagging at a railroad crossing * * * in Chicago. I felt a cloud come over me and I fell down right in the track. * * * It was a hot day just like this. * * * I have had convulsions for the past fourteen years but not so much until the last eight years. I saw the shot that was extracted from my neck. I had it a long time. I lost it. It was a buckshot, and went as far as the point of my ear. The doctor said to me when he extracted it, 'Pat, if the shot had gone a quarter of an inch farther you would never eat any more potatoes.' * * * I was not bothered with the wound of my neck in 1873, but I knew I had been shot in the neck. In 1875 I was not suffering with the wound in my neck much."

His wife, Rosetta Corigan, corroborates his statement as to the first convulsion or fit about fourteen years previously.

An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated;" September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of neck, not rated;" September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated;" June 22, 1892, "wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, nonadherent, nondragging, nondepressed, the vertebræ do not seem to have been injured, but there is thickening of soft tissues beneath the integument."

From the facts stated it seems reasonably clear that the pensioner's present condition as to epilepsy is not chargeable to the slight wound of the neck, but rather originated in 1878 in the manner described by himself and wife.

Moreover, he is in receipt of a pension of $1 a day and the question involved is purely one for the determination of the Pension Office, and the committee has repeatedly refused to interfere in the individual adjudications of the Pension Bureau in matters clearly within their jurisdiction and presenting no technical hardship. To pass this bill is squarely in violation of the principle enunciated in several adverse reports on bills of this character, and the minority do earnestly recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

JOHN J. MCDANNOLD.
M. R. BALDWIN.
C. J. ERDMAN.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the committee a word or two in regard to this case, because I am very well acquainted with the pensioner. This is an old Irishman, living in my town, and has been there, I think, for at least twelve years past. The minority of the committee might have inserted in their report the statement that in the examination of 1867 by the medical board, immediately after the war, they reported that the rotary motion of the claimant's head was destroyed, by reason of the wound in the neck, and that he is unable to raise his arm above his shoulder. That was the report of the examining board which made the first examination.

He was examined at various times at Des Moines by the boards there during the last five or six years—boards which have been composed of different parties—and in each report it will be found that the facts as set forth in the report of the committee are embodied, that the effect of the wound in the spine was the cause of the attacks of epilepsy with which he was suffering. Not only that, but he has been examined by almost every physician in Des Moines; and they, without exception, have found that the wound in the neck was the final cause of the disease from which he is suffering.

He is entirely helpless. He gets a pension now of $30 a month because of the entire destruction of one of his hands. He is unable to do any work or to perform any manual labor whatever and requires attendance most of the time. If he goes out on the street and falls down, as is frequently the case, he has got to be picked up by a passer-by before he can go ahead, being practically helpless. But, in my opinion, I confess I do not see how a member of the committee could have reported against the claim. I believe that the Pension Office and Gen. Bussey made a mistake in regard to this matter; for I think it will be admitted by all that the reputable physicians of Des Moines who examined him and the examining boards who have investigated this case are better qualified to judge of the condition of this pensioner than some men who are sitting in their offices here in Washington.

I hope the amendment submitted by the committee will be adopted for $50 a month, which will provide support for the old man and his family, and that the bill as amended will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to-night to raise any disturbance over any of these cases, and thereby prevent the passage of meritorious bills. I am very desirous, in other words, that we may get through with all cases that ought to be passed. But I do not feel that, in view of the record in this case and the report of the minority of the committee, signed as it is by two Federal soldiers of the late war, this case ought to be passed to-night.

The facts, as I understand them from a brief and hasty examination of the report, are that this man is now drawing a pension of $30 a month for disability on account of a wound in the hand. The bill, as originally presented, asked for an increase of this pension to $72 a month, which is the amount allowed for total disability. Now, at the time he made the first application, and when he was allowed $30 a month for the gunshot wound in the hand, it appears from the record that he did not say a word about having been wounded in the neck. There was no pretense whatever of it; and there is no evidence to show that he ever suffered from that wound at all, or in fact that he was wounded at Chickamauga in his neck. I repeat there is no evidence of it.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman is mistaken. There is absolute evidence as to the wound in the neck; but he did not claim anything in the application for pension on that account. The evidence, however, is conclusive.

Mr. STALLINGS. The minority report does not bear out the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Iowa as to the statement I have made. Now, this man is already getting $30 a month.

Mr. HULL. I know the gentleman does not want to misrepresent. The special examiner's report, if you will go through the papers, shows that there is no controversy as to the wound in the neck. Gen. Bussey, in his decision refusing to grant $72 a month, says there is no controversy as to the wound in the neck. It is only a question as to the result of that wound. Whether the report embodies it or not, that is the truth.

Mr. STALLINGS. In 1892 the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received the wound in the neck. They accept that as a fact, not as having been proven by anybody; but they rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. Now, you see when they come to examine into this case in the Pension Office, they do not give him any rating at all on account of this wound in the neck, showing that the examiners did not believe that he had received the wound in the line of duty or was not disabled by the wound. Then they say:

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1892, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

Now, he asks this House to-night, when he is already drawing the bounty of the Government to the amount of $30 a month—which is a good living—he asks this House for a wound that simply had a piece of sticking plaster put on it, to give him $20 more per month; in other words, to give him $50, taking both wounds into consideration. I do not believe that ought to be allowed.

It is exorbitant, and there is no reason for it, nor evidence to support the claim. We must bear in mind the fact that this money from which pensions are to be paid comes out of the tax-been under 16, the widow would have drawn $12 a month and $2 additional on account of the child. There is no pretense, however, that the death of the soldier was due to the service, and his widow also had died.

The application was made under the act of June 27, 1890, the effect of which would have been, had the widow made the application, to give her $8 per month and $2 a month for a child under 16; but the widow being dead and the application being made in the first place in the Pension Office and now through Congress under the act of June 27, 1890, the effect would be to give the child what the mother would have received had she been pensioned under that act. That is the reason why the committee propose to amend the bill by striking out "pension laws" and inserting "the act of June 27, 1890."

Mr. CABANISS. How far back will this pension go?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It will begin with the approval of the act by the President; not before.

Mr. LANE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would make any difference in the amount of this pension whether this soldier died from the effect of his army service or from other causes?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE. That is the reason I sought the floor. I wish to state that I personally knew this soldier, and I know this girl. I myself brought testimony here bearing upon the case. I know the doctors who gave affidavits that this soldier died from the effect of his army service. He was drawing a pension, and his death was due to his service in the Army. In the report made last year on this bill that statement will be found.

The report can be obtained at the document room. This year when I saw the report, I inquired of my colleague [Mr. MCDANNOLD] who reported the case, why the report did not make tha statement. He informed me that he had sent to the Pension Office and got the papers from there. But the trouble proved to be that three or four affidavits filed by me, in addition to the papers in the Pension Office, were not put in the case; and therefore my colleague did not see them.

Now, it would appear under these circumstances that the pension in this case ought to be $12 a month, just as the bill is drawn. We are doing this child a wrong by fixing the pension at a less amount. She is absolutely helpless; she has to be wheeled about; she is incapable of doing anything. I move, therefore, that the amount of the pension be fixed at $12.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman states, as I understand, that we would be doing this applicant an injustice if we gave her a pension of only $10.

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. I do not so understand the matter. Accepting the gentleman's statement as to the cause of this soldier's death, this child would not be entitled under the law to anything at all.

Mr. LANE. The chairman of the committee [Mr. MARTIN] tells me that if the death of the soldier was due to his army service she would be entitled to $12 a month.

Mr. JONES. No, that is a mistake; because she is over 16 years of age. On that account she is not entitled to anything.

Mr. LANE. But it was the intention of the law to cover this class of cases; and it is only through a misconstruction of the law at the Pension Office that a case like this is excluded.

Mr. JONES. But, as I understand, the mother of this applicant died before the death of the soldier.

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Under these circumstances, even if the soldier had been killed in the line of duty, this daughter would not be entitled to a dime under the general law. That is my understanding; and I would be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions would correct me if I have misstated the law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. As an invalid daughter under 16 years of age she would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. JONES. Of course, if she were under 16 years of age. But she is over 16. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] states that it would be doing her an injustice to give her but $10. I can not see that she has a right to anything.

Mr. LANE. I say it would be doing her an injustice to give her only $10, if she is entitled to $12.

Mr. JONES. But she is not entitled under the law to anything.

Mr. LANE. It was the intention of the law of 1890 to cover this class of cases—not merely to include children under 16 years of age.

Mr. JONES. Why, then, is not this case covered?

Mr. LANE. Because of the construction in the Pension Office—Mr. Bussey's construction—which defeated the intention of the law. I was on the committee myself when the bill was reported; and it was understood that such was the intention of the law.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to believe that the understanding of the members of his committee would have anything to do, or ought to have anything to do, with the construction of the law. I suppose the officer who made the construction is the person properly authorized to do so; and whether his construction be correct or not, it must stand until reviewed and reversed.

Mr. LANE. And we are the proper body to review it. If the gentleman will read the law he will see that the intention of the lawmakers was as I state. I was on the committee when the matter was discussed and the bill reported; and I know the intention was to cover this class of invalids.

Mr. JONES. Is there not an appeal from this officer who made this decision?

Mr. LANE. None at all; there is no appeal that I ever heard of.

Mr. JONES. And the law is so plain that anybody would see that such was the intent?

Mr. LANE. I think so; anybody who examines the law.

Mr. MCNAGNY. The fact is, there have been two rulings on the question; one one way and one the other.

Mr. LANE. That is correct.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman had better accept the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. LANE. No; I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) there were—ayes 32, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH BECK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4962) to restore to the pension roll Sarah Beck, widow.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that that bill be passed over under the order.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to place on the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas Corigan, late a member of Company B of the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $72 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out in line 7 the word "seventy-two," and insert "fifty;" so that it will read "$50 per month."

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask for the reading of the report in that case, the majority and the minority.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan from $30 to $72 per month, and submit the following report:

Thomas Corigan was a corporal in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry, enlisted July 28, 1862, and was discharged on January 24, 1864.

At the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was severely wounded in the left hand and is now drawing a pension of $30 per month for that injury, the arm being rendered wholly useless by the wound. At the same time he was wounded by a buckshot in the neck, and the soldier claims that this wound has affected his spine and has produced epilepsy.

The medical evidence shows that the wound in the neck produces distinct crepitus on movement of the neck. The epileptic fits have gradually increased until the soldier is totally helpless and requires constant aid and attendance and has become almost imbecile mentally.

The Pension Bureau in 1892 holds that it can not accept the "fits" as a result of the wound in the back of the neck, but no other cause is evident and medical evidence has been furnished to show that the wound in the neck is the cause of his present condition.

The soldier's condition is helpless in the extreme, and if the wound in the neck is the cause of his injury he would be entitled to $72 per month under the general law. We are not disposed to criticise the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting this portion of the soldier's claim, but we think that it might have very fairly decided the other way under the evidence and examination of the medical boards.

Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade or $50 a month. The committee is adverse to reporting bills changing the rate of pension as fixed by the Pension Bureau, but in a case of extreme helplessness like the present, where the wound has been followed by such helplessness, and there is much evidence to show that the soldier's condition is due to his wound, we are inclined to relax the rule.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting "fifty."

If the case were before us as an original question we would probably have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Pension Bureau, but in the doubt raised in the case we think that the second grade would reieve the wants of the soldier and ought to be granted, especially as the claimant was an excellent soldier, highly commended by Gen. F. T. Sherman, and his severe wounds received in the battle of Chickamauga are clearly shown.

The letter of Col. Sherman is as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
"SECOND DIVISION, FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
"Camp near Blains Cross Roads, East Tennessee, January 10, 1864.

"To whom it may concern:

"This is to certify that Thomas Corigan, an enlisted man of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Infantry, Illinois Volunteers, and corporal of Company B, same regiment, is a soldier good and true; ever faithful in the discharge of duty, never absent without leave, brave as a lion in action, and always at his post. He won the confidence and esteem of his commanding officers by his uniform good conduct and soldierly bearing. I therefore take great pleasure and bear willing testimony to his merit, and request that his wishes may be consulted, inasmuch as he is disabled from active field service by reason of wounds received on the hard-fought and bloody field of Chickamauga on the 20th of September, 1863.

"F. T. SHERMAN,
"Colonel Eighty-eighth Infantry, Illinois Volunteers."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The views of the minority (by Mr. MCDANNOLD) were read, as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan, and submit the following statement of their views:

The records of the War Department show that this soldier served from July 25, 1862, to January 29, 1864, in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry. He was discharged on account of disability from gunshot wound of hand received at Chickamauga. He has been pensioned for this wound ever since discharged, and now receives $30 per month since August 4, 1886. His application, filed February 12, 1864, alleged only this wound. A later application, filed September 11, 1866, states that he also "suffers pain in the neck from the effects of a wound there received." In 1887 he claimed that deafness had resulted from that wound, and states that the ball was removed in the field hospital; in April, 1888, he alleged resulting impairment of vision and of hearing; in September, 1888, he refers to "buckshot wound in back of neck;" in February, 1892, he alleged affection of sight and hearing and epilepsy as a result of said wound.

In September, 1892, the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received this wound in the neck, but rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. This action was taken after a careful special examination of the claim, and was affirmed by Secretary Bussey on appeal January 3, 1893.

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1892, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

"The first time I felt any serious disability from the wound of my neck was about fourteen years ago (1878). I was flagging at a railroad crossing * * * in Chicago. I felt a cloud come over me and I fell down right in the track. * * * It was a hot day just like this. * * * I have had convulsions for the past fourteen years but not so much until the last eight years. I saw the shot that was extracted from my neck. I had it a long time. I lost it. It was a buckshot, and went as far as the point of my ear. The doctor said to me when he extracted it, 'Pat, if the shot had gone a quarter of an inch farther you would never eat any more potatoes.' * * * I was not bothered with the wound of my neck in 1873, but I knew I had been shot in the neck. In 1875 I was not suffering with the wound in my neck much."

His wife, Rosetta Corigan, corroborates his statement as to the first convulsion or fit about fourteen years previously.

An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated;" September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of neck, not rated;" September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated;" June 22, 1892, "wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, nonadherent, nondragging, nondepressed, the vertebræ do not seem to have been injured, but there is thickening of soft tissues beneath the integument."

From the facts stated it seems reasonably clear that the pensioner's present condition as to epilepsy is not chargeable to the slight wound of the neck, but rather originated in 1878 in the manner described by himself and wife.

Moreover, he is in receipt of a pension of $1 a day and the question involved is purely one for the determination of the Pension Office, and the committee has repeatedly refused to interfere in the individual adjudications of the Pension Bureau in matters clearly within their jurisdiction and presenting no technical hardship. To pass this bill is squarely in violation of the principle enunciated in several adverse reports on bills of this character, and the minority do earnestly recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

JOHN J. MCDANNOLD.
M. R. BALDWIN.
C. J. ERDMAN.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the committee a word or two in regard to this case, because I am very well acquainted with the pensioner. This is an old Irishman, living in my town, and has been there, I think, for at least twelve years past. The minority of the committee might have inserted in their report the statement that in the examination of 1867 by the medical board, immediately after the war, they reported that the rotary motion of the claimant's head was destroyed, by reason of the wound in the neck, and that he is unable to raise his arm above his shoulder. That was the report of the examining board which made the first examination.

He was examined at various times at Des Moines by the boards there during the last five or six years—boards which have been composed of different parties—and in each report it will be found that the facts as set forth in the report of the committee are embodied, that the effect of the wound in the spine was the cause of the attacks of epilepsy with which he was suffering. Not only that, but he has been examined by almost every physician in Des Moines; and they, without exception, have found that the wound in the neck was the final cause of the disease from which he is suffering.

He is entirely helpless. He gets a pension now of $30 a month because of the entire destruction of one of his hands. He is unable to do any work or to perform any manual labor whatever and requires attendance most of the time. If he goes out on the street and falls down, as is frequently the case, he has got to be picked up by a passer-by before he can go ahead, being practically helpless. But, in my opinion, I confess I do not see how a member of the committee could have reported against the claim. I believe that the Pension Office and Gen. Bussey made a mistake in regard to this matter; for I think it will be admitted by all that the reputable physicians of Des Moines who examined him and the examining boards who have investigated this case are better qualified to judge of the condition of this pensioner than some men who are sitting in their offices here in Washington.

I hope the amendment submitted by the committee will be adopted for $50 a month, which will provide support for the old man and his family, and that the bill as amended will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to-night to raise any disturbance over any of these cases, and thereby prevent the passage of meritorious bills. I am very desirous, in other words, that we may get through with all cases that ought to be passed. But I do not feel that, in view of the record in this case and the report of the minority of the committee, signed as it is by two Federal soldiers of the late war, this case ought to be passed to-night.

The facts, as I understand them from a brief and hasty examination of the report, are that this man is now drawing a pension of $30 a month for disability on account of a wound in the hand. The bill, as originally presented, asked for an increase of this pension to $72 a month, which is the amount allowed for total disability. Now, at the time he made the first application, and when he was allowed $30 a month for the gunshot wound in the hand, it appears from the record that he did not say a word about having been wounded in the neck. There was no pretense whatever of it; and there is no evidence to show that he ever suffered from that wound at all, or in fact that he was wounded at Chickamauga in his neck. I repeat there is no evidence of it.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman is mistaken. There is absolute evidence as to the wound in the neck; but he did not claim anything in the application for pension on that account. The evidence, however, is conclusive.

Mr. STALLINGS. The minority report does not bear out the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Iowa as to the statement I have made. Now, this man is already getting $30 a month.

Mr. HULL. I know the gentleman does not want to misrepresent. The special examiner's report, if you will go through the papers, shows that there is no controversy as to the wound in the neck. Gen. Bussey, in his decision refusing to grant $72 a month, says there is no controversy as to the wound in the neck. It is only a question as to the result of that wound. Whether the report embodies it or not, that is the truth.

Mr. STALLINGS. In 1892 the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received the wound in the neck. They accept that as a fact, not as having been proven by anybody; but they rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. Now, you see when they come to examine into this case in the Pension Office, they do not give him any rating at all on account of this wound in the neck, showing that the examiners did not believe that he had received the wound in the line of duty or was not disabled by the wound. Then they say:

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1892, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

Now, he asks this House to-night, when he is already drawing the bounty of the Government to the amount of $30 a month—which is a good living—he asks this House for a wound that simply had a piece of sticking plaster put on it, to give him $20 more per month; in other words, to give him $50, taking both wounds into consideration. I do not believe that ought to be allowed.

It is exorbitant, and there is no reason for it, nor evidence to support the claim. We must bear in mind the fact that this money from which pensions are to be paid comes out of the taxpayers of the country, and you will not find, in any one district in the United States, more than 2,000 people who draw pensions, and you will find in the same district 40,000 who pay taxes, who do not draw pensions at all, and we ought to be fair to the 40,000 at least as far as we are to the 2,000.

Mr. HULL. The 40,000 in my district are anxious for this to be granted.

Mr. STALLINGS. There are 440,000 in other districts in the country who are anxious that just such bills shall not be passed and they taxed to pay it, and I do not think it is right to pass this claim without evidence on a pure sentiment. I ask the chairman of the committee to withdraw this bill.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; let us have a vote on it.

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask that it be laid aside under the rule.

Mr. HULL. I object to that. We may just as well vote on it now as at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman makes some motion, the question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. BRETZ. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will not pass this bill over, but that the bill will be unfavorably reported. It seems to me this is one of those bills which ought to be defeated. If any importance can be attached to the testimony in this case, it is as clear as noonday that the affliction from which this man is suffering was not and is not the result of the wound which he says he received in his neck. This is the language of the minority report upon this subject; and the evidence upon which that is founded is the man's own statement, corroborated by his wife's; and I think it is a perfectly fair deduction from that statement:

From the facts stated it seems reasonably clear that the pensioner's present condition as to epilepsy is not chargeable to the slight wound of the neck, but rather originated in 1878 in the manner described by himself and wife.

Now he says that in 1878 he was flagging at a railroad crossing in Chicago, and that he felt a cloud come over him, and he fell down on the track, and since that time he has been troubled with this epilepsy.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. It may have been a case of sunstroke.

Mr. JONES. Something of that sort. He says the weather was extremely hot, like the day upon which he gave his testimony, and probably like this day. Now, from 1864 to 1878 was fourteen years. It was that length of time after he received this slight wound, so slight that he did not even mention it when he applied for his pension, before he was stricken with epilepsy.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Does not the report say that he had a prior attack of the same kind?

Mr. JONES. He himself says that in 1873, which was nine years after the wound, he did not feel it at all, although he knew he had been wounded in the neck.

That is his own statement.

Mr. HULL. And the majority say in their report he had an attack on the year before.

Mr. JONES. I give you what the man himself says. I find it in the report of the minority and I accept it as absolutely true.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. You are reading from the minority report.

Mr. JONES. I am reading the minority report; and the minority report gives the statement on which the claimant's claim is based, and the report of the committee does not give it.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. JONES. The minority report gives this man's own statement, which is corroborated by his wife, and it is the only testimony bearing on the point.

Mr. HULL. The examination before the board in 1867 stated that the rotary motion of the head was destroyed by the wound in the neck, and that he was then unable to raise his arm except to a certain height.

Mr. JONES. But did the examining board state that was the result of the wound? On the contrary, they found that the wound was not serious, and if epilepsy, in the opinion of the examining medical board, had resulted from that wound, a pension would have been granted long ago by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. HULL. No; because he did not set up any claim for pension on that account, and the Department never gives a pension on what is not set out by the claimant; but it shows that he suffered from the effects of this wound in 1867.

Mr. JONES. It appears from the statement made that Gen. Bussey sustained the views of this examining board.

Mr. HULL. That is true.

Mr. JONES. And that the medical examiners stated that there was no evidence to show that this disease resulted from this wound.

Mr. HULL. Gen. Bussey did sustain the rejection of the claim.

Mr. JONES. What claim?

Mr. HULL. This claim for $72 a month on account of disability from the wound in the neck. He did it on the decision of the medical board of the Pension Office. The medical referee states that there is no question as to the wound in the neck having been received in the battle, but the medical referee held that that was not of sufficient severity to cause epilepsy. That was the ground on which the claim was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Was not that a pretty good ground?

Mr. HULL. But the gentleman says that there is nothing in the papers to show what was the severity of the wound in the neck. I simply wanted to call his attention to this report of the board which examined him.

Mr. JONES. I have not seen the report of the board. I simply know that Gen. Bussey, to whom this case was appealed, refused to allow this claim because the evidence did not satisfy him, as it had not satisfied the medical examiners. They had all the evidence before them, and surely they were more competent to decide such a question than this House could possibly be.

Mr. HULL. Let me ask the gentleman one further question right there. All the boards of medical examiners at Des Moines for the past ten years have recommended the full amount on account of the wound in the neck, where they have examined the party himself—this old Irishman—and I can say, too, that I am not advocating this from political reasons, because his people as a rule are against me right along. Every physician in Des Moines who has examined him, and at least a dozen have testified here, have stated that in their opinion this wound in the neck caused epilepsy.

Mr. BRETZ. Then why can not he get a pension in the Department?

Mr. HULL. The medical board, through the lapse of time and the slightness of the wound on the surface, do not seem to think it of such a serious character as to have caused epilepsy.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the gentleman if the medical board here has not had all the evidence before it, that we are now told has been taken in the past ten years?

Mr. HULL. They have had the reports of the examining boards, and this man has been examined by all the examining boards, and there have been several examinations made of him by private physicians, but it would seem that if they have them they have not accepted their statements.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Have you made any effort with the Department as now constituted to have the case reconsidered.

Mr. HULL. No; I have not, because it would require a reversal of the decision by the Secretary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I have been successful in similar cases, and that is why I asked you if you had made any effort before the Department as now constituted, because I imagine that the gentleman might secure a like decision to that which I have secured.

Mr. HULL. I talked to Commissioner Bell about it and he said he thought the case was a good one and suggested that I try to get Judge Reynolds to reverse Mr. Bussey's finding, but as the bill was here it seemed to me that if this man could get $50 a month it would be enough to tide him over. Now, when gentlemen talk about $30 being ample, I want to say that a large proportion of that pension is used up for attendance and medical treatment because of his great suffering, so that the amount which strikes gentlemen as so large is nothing in view of the expense this old man is put to and the suffering that he endures.

Mr. JONES. I will say a word presently as to the amount of the pension, but the point I am making is based upon this man's own statements, in the only evidence that I find bearing on this subject. Of course I do not question what the gentleman says about certain affidavits having been furnished to the Department, but I take this case upon the statements in the record, and those are the statements of the man himself, corroborated only by his wife. He says that he was not bothered by this wound in his neck in 1873, but he says:

I knew I had been shot in the neck. In 1875 I was not suffering with the wound in my neck.

So that he was not suffering from this wound, or from any disease which resulted from this wound, until after he had had a sunstroke in the street in Chicago, and I take it that the medical bureau here, charged with the examination of these cases, is far better qualified to decide upon the question of this man's disability and the cause of it than this committee here to-night can possibly be. The case has been presented before that board and has been passed upon. An appeal has been taken, as I understand, to Gen. Bussey, and the finding of the board has been sustained.

I understand from the gentleman that since that time, during the past ten years, a number of affidavits have been sent here, a part of which only, the gentleman thinks, have gone before the Pension Bureau, but those affidavits have not had sufficient effect upon this medical board to change their minds, and it does seem to me that this committee, simply upon the meager statements contained in this report, ought not hastily to say that this man's epilepsy is the result of a wound which was so slight that he himself says he scarcely felt it, so slight that he did not mention it when he put in his application for a pension. It appears from his own statement that he did not feel the wound until nine years after the time he says he received it, although he knew he had been wounded; in fact he did not feel it at all until after the sunstroke. It seems to me from this report that the case is perfectly plain.

Other gentlemen may draw different inferences from the facts and circumstances set forth, but to my mind it is plain that the medical board acted wisely in deciding that there was no evidence before it to justify the belief that the epilepsy was the result of this slight wound, on account of which the man had not been pensioned at all.

Now, as to the statement that the $30 a month which he is receiving is not sufficient to support him. I know of my own knowledge that there are nice boarding houses and hotels within easy reach of this city where he could board for $20 a month, and I understand that all these pensioners are entitled to medical attendance at the hands of the Government entirely free of charge. Therefore, even if we admit that this disease is the result of the wound which this man says he received, still this is not a case which would justify this committee in giving him a pension of $50 a month; because it is apparent to me, perfectly so, that this man can live comfortably upon the $30 a month which he is now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. A word by way of explanation of the report. In this case there is a conflict of opinion between the doctors, and a larger number of medical men have sworn that this injury produced the epilepsy than have expressed the contrary opinion. But about certain things there is no dispute. There is no doubt that this old soldier's mind has been affected by epilepsy, and that he has made statements both ways—that the ball has been taken out and also that it is still in. However that may be, the evidence shows that when his neck is moved backwards and forwards a squeaking sound is heard, which is produced either by the bone where it has been injured by the ball or else by the ball itself being still there.

Mr. JONES. Does not the report show that the ball has been taken out?

Mr. LACEY. It shows both ways.

Mr. JONES. I call attention to the man's own statement on that point:

Not so much until the last eight years. I saw the shot that was extracted from my neck. I had it a long time. I lost it.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman had listened to the sound of my voice instead of his own he would have heard me say just now that the soldier had testified both ways about that, had stated that the ball had been taken out, and at another time had said that it had not been taken out. I stated that his mind had been affected by his disease and that he had testified both ways. The fact is, no one knows whether the ball has really been taken out or not.

We do know that his spine was affected in such a way as to produce epilepsy, and that he is perfectly helpless, requiring constant attendance of some person to take care of him. If it were absolutely clear that this disability was produced by the wound he would be entitled to a pension of $72 a month under the law; but there being some controversy on that point, the committee decided to report in favor of granting $50 a month.

Mr. STALLINGS. I understand the gentleman to say that when this man turns his neck there is heard a creaking or crackling sound like broken bones?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, there is a crepitus, resulting either from the fractured bone or from the presence of the ball.

Mr. STALLINGS. And that makes a crackling noise?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir. There is no controversy about that.

Mr. STALLINGS. And the man is still living. Now, I notice in the report the following:

An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau, September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated;" September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of neck, not rated;" September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated;" June 22, 1892, "wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, etc."

Now, here are the reports of four or five different examinations by surgeons appointed by the Government and presumed to be experts; and on none of these examinations do these surgeons report this man as entitled to any rating at all on account of wound in neck. These examinations were held under various Administrations—Democratic and Republican—so that it can not be alleged that political bias had anything to do with these reports.

Mr. LACEY. What the gentleman states shows simply that this paralysis had not occurred up to this time; the cause was there, but it had not produced at that time the serious results which came later; and the soldier was honest enough not to make a claim until he actually became paralyzed.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on laying aside the bill as amended, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 32, noes 14.

Mr. STALLINGS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS] withdraw that point and allow the bill to be passed over under the order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the point of no quorum will be withdrawn——

Mr. STALLINGS. No, sir; the point is not withdrawn. I was willing earlier in the session that the bill be passed over.

Mr. WEADOCK. The reason this action could not be taken then was that by the terms of the order the power to make the request was limited to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The order does not apply to a request made at this time. It was to the effect that the chairman should have the right to have a bill passed over before its consideration was entered upon. This bill can not now be passed over except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STALLINGS. I have no objection to the bill going over; but I will not withdraw the point of no quorum to allow it to be passed.

Mr. HULL. This same question will come up again next Friday night; and we might as well meet the question right here.

Mr. STALLINGS. All right.

The CHAIRMAN The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. HULL. At the request of some of my colleagues, I will not object to the bill being passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the point of no quorum will be withdrawn and the bill will be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

OLIVER O'BRIEN.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 650) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Oliver O'Brien.

Mr. BRETZ. For the purpose of reserving all points in this matter, I wish first to raise the question of consideration on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to so amend the record of Oliver O'Brien as to remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. BRETZ. I make the point further that the committee to-night, under the rule, has no right to consider this bill. It is reported by Mr. MCALEER, who is not a member of the Military Committee at all. The bill upon its face shows it was introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but the report shows that it was made by Mr. MCALEER.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is not in order under the special rule, and the Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

MARLIN PARKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 562) for the relief of Marlin Parks.

Mr. BRETZ. I ask that that bill be passed over.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Why?

Mr. CAPEHART. That bill is in order.

Mr. BRETZ. I did not know that the gentleman from California who made the report was present, and I withdraw the request.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I would like to have the report read in that case, although I can explain it in two minutes. But the report shows all the facts.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. BOWERS of California. This bill is perhaps subject to the point of order, according to the Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Then I make the point of order upon it. Let us get to other business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CAPEHART. This bill is undoubtedly in order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I do not want to take up the time of the committee. This is simply a bill for the relief of an officer who was summarily discharged under a mistake from the service.

Mr. CAPEHART. It is a bill to remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Oh, no; it is simply to correct a record of dismissal. If it is in order under the rule I want it to go through, because it is right and proper and just that it should; but if it is not in order, I hope the Chair will determine the matter so that we can proceed with other business.

Mr. JONES. I submit that the gentleman who introduced the bill ought to know the nature of it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. It is to issue an honorable discharge to an officer who was dishonorably dismissed under a misapprehension of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a bill to remove the charge of desertion?

Mr. CAPEHART. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia be permitted to state the character of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Let us have the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this bill can not be considered under the rule.

Mr. JONES. Let the gentleman from West Virginia state the facts. There seems to be some misapprehension about this case.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Very well. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. CAPEHART. This man was dismissed on the charge of desertion. He was in the battle of Cedar Creek, having up to that time had a service of three years in the Army. In that battle his regiment was scattered in all directions, and he failed to report on the next day. He joined another army corps, and it was three days before he reached his regiment, when he found he was dismissed.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Oh, no; it was only twenty-four hours. It is a good bill. The facts are all here.

Mr. CAPEHART. The gentleman is mistaken, I think, in that. I confess I do not understand the point of order that is raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that under the special order bills removing charges of desertion from the Military Committee only are in order. Now, I understand it to be conceded by the members of the Military Committee present that this is not a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Oh, no; there was no desertion.

Mr. CAPEHART. He is seeking an honorable discharge because of the fact that he was charged with desertion. I claim that it is in order.

Mr. BRETZ. Can we have the bill read, reserving the right of objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from West Virginia to make a statement, but he has been interrupted. I insist that he shall have that right.

Mr. CAPEHART. The bill provides that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order of dismissal of Marlin Parks, late first lieutenant Company B, Eleventh West Virginia Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge from the service of the United States.

Now, why does he want a discharge? Because he was charged with desertion and dismissed on that charge.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does that fact appear? The Chair has been looking over the report, hurriedly, it is true, but he has not been able to find it. The bill does not indicate a charge of desertion.

Mr. CAPEHART. "They were summarily dismissed without charge or trial," as the report shows, referring to several officers. Why? Because they were deserters. They were not dismissed for any other cause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from California to state that it was not a charge of desertion.

Mr. BOWERS of California. If the chairman and the committee will hear me for three minutes I will make it perfectly plain to the chairman, so that he can rule properly on the question.

Mr. CAPEHART. What report has the chairman got? Perhaps you have the wrong case.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, the case is simply this: At the fight at Cedar Creek, which, as everyone knows, was pretty hot for a while, many of the regiments were scattered. The report states that—

At the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, October 19, 1864, his regiment, the Eleventh West Virginia Volunteers, attached to Gen. Crook's command, received the first attack of the Confederate forces, was driven back and the whole command thrown into disorder and became broken and scattered, and the regiment did duty during the day with other commands, and the command with which Lieut. Marlin Parks was attached did not reorganize until the next day.

It appears that when driven back the lieutenant collected as many of the men as possible, and served during the day with the Sixth and Nineteenth Army Corps, and the following morning searched out his regiment and joined it with the men he had gathered.

So great had been the disorganization that a commission of officers were appointed to investigate the matter, and a number of officers were notified to appear, and all, except three—Capt. John W. Myers, Capt. R. King, and Lieut. Parks—appeared and were exonerated. Those who did not appear claim that they did not receive the notice until it was too late and the inquiry was finished. They were summarily dismissed without charge or trial.

The statements of the colonel of the regiment, and of the lieutenant-colonel, and of eight members of the regiment, all of whom except the colonel, were with Lieut. Parks during the day, prove conclusively that he was doing his full duty the entire day; that he was a brave soldier, always with his regiment in all the battles for three years.

And he reported to his regiment the next morning. Now, this is an application for an honorable discharge to be issued to him. He was dismissed because, when he was cited to appear and answer to the charge of being separated from his regiment that day, he did not appear. While all those who appeared there were exonerated, he, not getting his notification in time to appear before that committee, was dismissed. I wish to say in regard to the facts, they are testified to by all the officers of his regiment and by a good many of the men. The only point is whether this bill is in order. I think perhaps it might be, under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that from the brief examination he has been able to give to the report, although there does not seem to be any very direct statement, it seems that the charge appeared to involve the question of cowardice, not of desertion. There does not seem to be a direct statement, but that is the inference from one or two of the paragraphs.

Mr. CAPEHART. The plain inference is that he was dismissed on the charge of desertion.

Mr. BOWERS of California. He was dismissed because he did not appear when he was cited to appear.

Mr. STALLINGS. When a man deserts he leaves the service. In this case this man did not do it. This is not a case of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this bill is not in order, under the special rule. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MARY B. HULINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3354) for the relief of Mrs. Mary B. Hulings.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that that bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be passed over, under the order adopted this evening.

HARRIET R. TATE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6213) to pension Harriet R. Tate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisoins of the act approved June 27, 1890, the name of Harriet R. Tate, widow of William S. Tate, late a private in Company L, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as contained in the report, were read.

Mr. JONES. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having considered the bill (H. R. 6213) to pension Harriet R. Tate, report:

On an examination of the evidence on file in the Pension Bureau and other evidence on file with this committee, we find that said Harriet R. was married to one William S. Tate on the 21st of June, 1855, in Perry County, Ind.; that said William S. enlisted in Company L, Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry, and served therein from December 14, 1863, until July 30, 1865, when he was killed while he was still a member of said military organization, under the following circumstances, to wit: Edward Boultinghouse, of Perry County, Ind., as he testifies, says:

"The above-named William S. Tate came to his death as follows, to wit: I was a sergeant in the soldier's company. On or about the 30th day of July, 1865, we were in camp at Houston, Miss.; the captain of the company, then commanding at Houston, Miss., told the affiant that there were some bales of cotton secreted in a camp near Siloam, Miss., and that if he, the sergeant, would go and get them he would give him half. Said captain told affiant that he should detail as many men as he thought necessary to go with him after the cotton, and affiant took said William S. Tate with him.

"Affiant further says that they had orders to take any property belonging to the United States that they could find, such as Government saddles or arms. When they got to Siloam, Miss., they found a citizen with a Government saddle. Affiant and said William S. Tate making inquiries as to whether said citizen had a permit or protection to possess or use said saddle, said citizen pulled a revolver, remarking that this was his protection, and commenced firing, two shots taking effect and striking said William S. Tate near the small of the back, from which said Tate died. Affiant further says that said William S. Tate was a good soldier and always ready for duty."

Said soldier, when he parted from his wife to enter the service, left with her 4 minor children, the fruit of said marriage, and at his death such widow and children survived him, but he left them no means of support. She, nevertheless, as certified by a petition signed by about 50 of her neighbors, raised said children to manhood and womanhood by means of doing washing, sewing, and such other work as she could find. She has no other means of support than manual labor, has no home, is feeble in health, and is quite old.

The affidavit of Andrew J. Earle, of Perry County, Ind., is also on file dated March 21, 1894, and states that he was well acquainted with said William S. Tate, and that they both were members of said military organization; that said deceased—

"was at all times ready for military duty and never failed to obey the command of his officers. Affiant further says that it was a general order, and so understood by all soldiers at Houston, Miss., that if soldiers found any property belonging to the United States, or branded, 'U. S.,' for the soldier to take the same and bring it to where they were camped. And affiant says that he is also acquainted with said Harriet R. Tate, and that she has not remarried since the death of said William S. Tate, and that she has no property of any kind from which she can make a living."

An affidavit by the adjutant of the soldier's command testifies pointedly that at and prior to July 30, 1865, a general order had been issued to said command to seize all property bearing the brand of the United States.

This case was examined by a special examiner, who examined many witnesses, including the applicant, the captain, and some comrades of the deceased, and he recommended that her claim for pension be allowed, under the general law on the ground that the soldier, when killed, was obeying orders of his officers and therefore in line of duty, but this view was overruled by both the Pension Office and by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Cyrus S. Bussey, on appeal. Another special examination resulted in a similar recommendation by another special examiner.

These examinations were made under an application made by the widow in 1865 in the Pension Office, under the general law, for a pension, but was rejected April 7, 1888, on the ground that the Bureau did not feel justified in holding that the soldier had been killed in line of duty.

She then filed a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, for pension, but as that act requires that to entitle the widow to relief the husband must not only have served for ninety days or more, but must have had an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States, the Pension Bureau was powerless to aid her, and necessarily rejected her claim.

Your committee feel that this bill should be favorably reported, for the soldier when killed had honorably served nineteen months and sixteen days, dying from pistol shots inflicted upon him in a hostile country by a presumably hostile citizen thereof. Many widows have been pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, whose husbands had rendered military service for a much shorter period than this soldier had served. Had this soldier been discharged honorably and then been killed, no matter under what circumstances, she would be entitled thereunder.

Your committee likewise feel that the ruling of the Pension Bureau, that the soldier was not killed in line of duty, though perhaps technically correct, works a hardship upon the widow that Congress can properly relieve her from.

On all the facts, we therefore report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out of lines 5 and 6 the words "Act approved June 27, 1890," and insert in lieu thereof the words "general pension laws at the rate of $12 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendments recommended by the committee will be agreed to, and the bill as amended will be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JONES. I should like to hear some one who is familiar with the circumstances of this case make a statement about it. As I understand this matter, this soldier went out to steal cotton and came across a saddle which somebody had, and undertook to take it, and he was shot. It also appears that the evidence bearing upon the question as to whether or not he was killed in the line of duty was all submitted to the Pension Department, and Gen. Bussey decided that he was not in the line of duty on the evidence submitted. I think this a bill that needs to be explained.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a few words will, I think, probably be sufficient. The bill as drawn, introduced by my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana], proposed to put this widow on the pension roll under the act of June 27, 1890. The woman was married to the soldier in 1855. He enlisted in 1863. He was killed in June, 1865, and simply because he never had an honorable discharge her claim under the pension law of June 27, 1890, was rejected. If he had received an honorable discharge and come home, and had been killed under almost any circumstances that you can conceive of, she would long since have been on the pension roll.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under all the precedents adopted by this House, and without objection as I remember, there is no question but what this bill would pass easily, putting her on the pension roll at the rate of $8 a month, because the soldier served more than nineteen months instead of ninety days, and was killed in the service.

Mr. JONES. Well, my question is this: Suppose this soldier had been killed in battle, in line of duty, he would not of course have had any discharge but that furnished by the bullet that killed him. Would not his widow then have been entitled to a pension under the general law?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. She would not have been entitled to a pension under the act of June 27, 1890, but she would under the general law. She is not entitled under the general law now.

Mr. CAPEHART. Why not?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I will explain that to you. A widow whose husband was killed in the service—in line of duty, for instance—in battle, or who dies of a disease years afterwards, or of wounds received in the service, is entitled under the general law to $12 a month; but under the law of June 27, 1890, it makes no difference if he was killed, or what the circumstances were, she can not be pensioned, because her husband had not received an honorable discharge. The Pension Bureau has refused to hold that the fact that a soldier was killed during the time he was in the service is equivalent to a discharge.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in examining this case I found that this widow, who was married in 1855, was left with four small children; that this man was a private soldier, and that he was killed while obeying orders. As testified to by the adjutant of the regiment, there was a general order issued for the retaking of all property branded "U. S." The captain of this company, as is shown clearly, ordered the sergeant, and the sergeant testifies in this case, a few years afterwards, that the captain ordered him to detail men and take them out for the purpose of finding some cotton that was alleged to have been secreted. Now, the soldier obeyed the orders. He obeyed the orders of the orderly sergeant, and the orderly sergeant was obeying the orders of the captain. The soldier in every particular was obeying orders.

Mr. JONES. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Just wait a moment. They proceeded under the order of the captain in search of that cotton; but before the cotton was ever reached—I do not know whether there was any cotton there at all or not—they came across property of the Government which it was the duty of these soldiers to take. They came across a man with a horse, and upon the saddle was branded "U. S.' The sergeant and this soldier went to the man and asked him for his protection in having this saddle, which plainly seemed to be the property of the Government. The man, in place of giving an answer at all indicating the character of his possession of the property, said, "This is my protection." He drew his revolver, and although not assaulted by this soldier, he shot him and he died there in his tracks.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, under the act of June 27, 1890, there is no question but that this widow should have this $8; but I felt that it was my duty to bring it, as a member of that committee, before Congress and ask whether it is not true, as it seemed to me, because this soldier had not broken any law, but was obeying orders and without the slightest fault upon his part lost his life, that his widow, married to him years before the war, with four small small children left upon her hands, should now, having lived all these years without any pension and without a particle of help from the Government, be allowed $12 a month in place of $8?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman does not mean to say that she has four small children dependent upon her now?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. She had when he died. She has raised them all, and raised them creditably.

Mr. CABANISS. What was the date he was killed?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. June, 1865.

Mr. CABANISS. Was not the war over at that time?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Well, practically; but the soldier, you know, would have been a deserter had he left the service.

Mr. CABANISS. Were not men entitled to saddles at that time without having them taken away from them violently?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The gentleman will recollect this fact—that a private soldier must obey the order of his superior officer.

Mr. CABANISS. I understood from the reading of the report that the order given to that detachment was to seize some cotton.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. There were two orders. The order that he was proceeding under at that particular time was to go with this sergeant in search of cotton; but before that there was a general order issued to the whole regiment that wherever they found property that seemed from the brand upon it to be the property of the United States they should take it and bring it to camp.

Mr. STALLINGS. You have stated that this man was obeying orders.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. He was.

Mr. STALLINGS. Then he must have been in the line of duty?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. STALLINGS. The report says:

The captain of the company, then commanding at Houston, Miss., told affiant that there were some bales of cotton secreted in a camp near Saloam, Miss., and that the sergeant told him that if he would go and get them he would give him half.

Now, does not the gentleman know that that was a regular stealing expedition? Does he not know that the Government did not have any cotton in Mississippi at that time—in June at that? But if it was the Government's cotton, why was this officer going to give this other man half of it? If it was the Government's property, he had no right to do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That very question was discussed in the committee, as to whether it was necessary to state that fact in the report, and it was determined, on my own insistence that the Committee of the Whole House and the House of Representatives ought to have knowledge of all the facts. Therefore that was stated in the report because it seemed to be a fact.

Mr. STALLINGS. It is a fact.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. But I call the gentleman's attention to this point, that this bargain, if there was a bargain, to give half the cotton was not a transaction in which the soldier had any participation. It was a bargain, wrong as it may be held to be, between the officer commanding the company and the orderly sergeant, and the soldier had nothing to do with it at all.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Of course it is possible that the officer transcended his rights, but certainly the soldier ought not to be held accountable for the conduct of his officer.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That is the point exactly.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question, in line with what he has just stated. I do not ask him to divulge any committee secrets, but I understood him to say a moment ago that the question came up in his committee as to whether or not the fact that the officer had directed this dead soldier to take possession of the cotton mentioned in the report, and that he should receive one half of it as his share, should be set forth in the report, and that the gentleman himself insisted that that was one of the facts that ought to go into the report. Now, that was a damaging fact.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. It is an entirely immaterial fact.

Mr. JONES. The question was discussed in the committee, as I understand, whether that fact should be stated in the report, because it was a damaging fact. Now, the gentleman from Indiana does not, I hope, mean to state that there was any objection on the part of any member of the committee to that fact going into the report. Because, if I am to understand it that way, I, for one, will certainly look into these reports a little more closely than I have done heretofore. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to say that he had to insist that that fact should be put in the report.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I do not want to be understood as intimating that any member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions desires to suppress any fact in any case. But the question here is this: Where a private soldier was obeying the order of his superior officer, was the fact upon which the gentleman comments a material fact, so far as the death of the soldier or his obedience is concerned.

Mr. PICKLER. It is an entirely immaterial fact.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That is the point, and the only question that arose on it in the committee was whether this fact was material or not; but I preferred, under all the circumstances, to have the whole case, material and immaterial, come before this committee and the House, in order that members might use their own judgment upon it. Of course, a private soldier is bound, under pain of punishment, to obey the orders of his superior officer; and I believe that the question of the alleged bargain between this soldier's superior officers is one that does not affect the soldier at all.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. One other suggestion. The bargain or arrangement as to the division of the spoils applied only to the cotton. There was nothing of that kind in connection with the saddle; so that that case was an entirely different one.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a very material point in this case, instead of being immaterial as some gentlemen contend. The question as to whether this soldier was in the line of duty at that time depends upon whether his superior officer was in the line of duty at that time.

Mr. PICKLER. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The only excuse for the soldier is that he was obeying orders; that he was about business of the United States under the order of his superior officer. Clearly it was not the United States business for these men to run about searching for cotton to be divided between the sergeant and the captain.

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose the soldier had not obeyed orders, would he not have been subject to court-martial?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not know whether he would or not. I venture to say, however, that those particular officers would not have undertaken to courtmartial him on that occasion, because there would have been danger of the facts coming out, and they would have been liable to be courtmartialed themselves. I do not think there is anything in the point made that the war was not over, because I know that the war against cotton was not over until about a year after the surrender. But I do not think this man can be said to have been in the line of duty at the time he was killed.

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Chairman, I differ with some gentlemen here in regard to the legal proposition involved in this case. No officer, civil or military, has such control over any citizen or soldier of this country as to have a right to make him commit a crime. Go over to Fort Myer where there are soldiers. If one of those soldiers should kill a man here in Washington he could not justify the homicide on the ground that he had been authorized, directed, or commanded by his superior officer to do the killing.

Of course not. Here is a man who was ordered to go and steal cotton. Now, gentlemen say, "We will justify the act of this man in going after that cotton because he was ordered to do so by his superior officer." No such justification as that can ever be pleaded in law. Take the facts as we have them here.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Let me correct the gentleman.

Mr. STALLINGS. One moment. I want to read from this report—

On or about the 30th day of July we were in camp at Houston, Miss.

This is the sergeant giving his testimony:

The captain of the company, then commanding at Houston, Miss., told the affiant that there were some bales of cotton secreted in a camp near Siloam, Miss., and that if he, the sergeant, would go and get them he would give him half.

Now, sir, what did this sergeant do on that kind of a statement or order, if you choose to call it such, from the officer?

Said captain told affiant that he should detail as many men as he thought necessary to go with him after the cotton, and affiant took said William S. Tate with him.

Now, here are men who start out to take property that does not belong to the Government. The Government had no claim to this property whatever; it was the property of private citizens; and if it were taken in that way then or to-day, you would have a claim brought here for the value of the property, and the Government would have to pay it. Those men go out and take that property in this way with this pretended authority. Gentlemen contend that this officer had the right to tell these men to commit a crime—the crime of theft. He had no right to make any such order. They were only justified in obeying legal orders, not illegal orders directing them to commit a crime.

Mr. PICKLER. Nobody contends that; but we do contend that no private soldier could set himself up to disobey the orders of his officer without subjecting himself to court-martial.

Mr. STALLINGS. Now, these men had orders—illegal orders—to go and get this cotton that they thought was secreted, and should not have obeyed such order, and could not have been punished for a refusal.

Mr. PICKLER. That was legitimate.

Mr. STALLINGS. That is stated to have been the purpose of their going; but they do not stop at that; they do not obey the illegal instructions of the officer who sent them or agreed to divide the stolen property. It was stealing on shares. What do they do? They meet a private citizen with a saddle. This was in June, 1865, when the war was over. Lee had surrendered in April, and Johnston a little later. There was no war going on in this country at that time; the war had closed two or three months before. This soldier goes up and attempts to take the property of that private citizen, who in defending his property, takes the life of the soldier.

Now, here is a man going out on a stealing expedition. Let us call things by their right names. He meets a man on the road having a saddle, his private property. The soldier attempts to take it, and gets killed. Now, how can the Government of the United States be asked to pay to that soldier's widow a pension? There is not a man in this Hall to-night who does not know that no just claim to a pension can arise in such a case? Let me tell gentlemen here is the trouble to-day with these pension claims. You report claims of this kind from your committees; and you abuse some of us because we will not let them pass, when you know the claims are fraudulent and ought not to be brought here. You put us in the position of being compelled to object to such claims, while men representing Eastern and Western districts have not the moral courage to stand here and do it. That is the truth; and gentlemen know it.

In this case you ask me to vote to tax the citizens of my district to pay a pension to the widow of a man who was killed while out on a stealing expedition, endeavoring to take the property of a private citizen after the war was over. I will never vote for any such claim. There is not a man here who does not know that such a claim is absolutely unfounded and unjust, and can not give rise to any fair charge or claim against this Government. This widow to-day has no claim upon the bounty of the United States, because her husband was killed while engaged in such an illegal and criminal expedition.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is not the gentleman aware that there is nothing in this case to show that the cotton was the property of any private individual? Does not the gentleman know as a matter of fact that the cotton which was sought for by the Army after the close of the war was only cotton which belonged to the Confederate Government, and which was a just spoil of the war? This being so, it seems to me the ground of the gentleman's argument is destroyed.

Mr. STALLINGS. I will answer the gentleman. Who is making the application is this case? Is the Congress of the United States asking the citizen to give the Government something? No, sir; it is this widow asking a pension from the Government; and the burden of proof is on her to show that this cotton belonged to the Confederate government and not to private citizens. I am asked here to-night to vote for this pension, and I say the burden rests on this applicant to show that she is entitled to it; she must make that proof before I can ever consent to the passage of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Does not the gentleman admit that if this soldier had served, as he did, over three months his widow would be entitled to a pension under the new law if he had a discharge?

Mr. STALLINGS. If he had a discharge; but that is a thing he did not have. He could not get a discharge, because the Pension Bureau, when it came to pass on the question, held that he was not entitled to a discharge because——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Because he was discharged by death.

Mr. STALLINGS. How could it be otherwise if he attempted, by force, to take the property of a private citizen and the citizen took his life in defending his property, as he had a right to do?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. What right has the gentleman to say that he tried to take the property of a private citizen?

Mr. STALLINGS. Because the report says so.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STALLINGS. I so understand it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama has chosen to say that he does not believe there is a member of this House who believes that bill to be just.

Mr. STALLINGS. I do not know that I made that remark in just those words.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I so understood you.

Mr. STALLINGS. Not in the words the gentleman has used.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman said that members from the North and East did not dare to vote their views upon these questions. Now, let us take a vote and see whether we do or not.

Mr. STALLINGS. All right; but I want it to be understood that I am not willing to vote for the passage of any such bill as this.

Mr. CABANISS. Mr. Chairman, this matter strikes me, from the reading of the evidence before the House, as I understood it, that this soldier did not receive his death wound in the discharge of duty, obeying the order of his sergeant.

Admit for the sake of argument that the captain had a right to order the sergeant to detail a number of men to go with him on this expedition, and take possession of cotton which he said belonged to the United States.

The detail was made; but while going to take the cotton the evidence discloses the fact that this man, whose widow this bill seeks to pension, met a citizen with a saddle, with the mark of "U. S." on it, during the month of June, some months after the war ended, and tried to take possession of it. That, I believe, is the proof set forth in the report. Now, does not the gentleman know that there were scarcely any other saddles at that time in the Southern States, except the saddles that were carried home after the war by the returning soldiers by permission of Gen. Grant after the surrender at Appomattox and of General Sherman in North Carolina?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But the saddles to which the gentleman refers were not branded "U. S."

Mr. CABANISS. They were permitted, as a matter of fact, to take the saddles home after the surrender at Appomattox, because I know that Gen. Grant in his magnanimous consideration for the Confederate army, allowed the officers and soldiers to carry with them their personal property, side arms, private property of all kinds to their homes after the surrender, and a number of the men had McClellan saddles which were captured by them during the war.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You had one yourself, I suppose?

Mr. CABANISS. I had, and a soldier tried to take it away from a servant of mine, and I rescued it and not a word was said as to my right of possession.

Now, this soldier was ordered out on this detail with a part of the force, and the fact was that he saw this saddle and tried to take it away from the citizen, and the result was that he lost his life.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I think the gentleman is mistaken. That part of his statement is not borne out by the report.

Mr. CABANISS. What are the facts? This man saw the saddle, and endeavored to take it from the citizen. Does anyone suppose that this citizen, unless he knew he had a perfect right to the property, would have fired the shot in the defense of his property that unfortunately killed this soldier, when he knew that this man was surrounded by other soldiers, and that his own life would not have been worth a cent if he had not been acting, as they must have recognized, with a perfect right to protect his property?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Does not the report show simply that this soldier asked the question "where the man got the saddle," or what right he had to it, and he immediately began firing?

Mr. CABANISS. I do not remember the exact text of the report in that regard.

Mr. BRETZ. That is what the report sets out.

Mr. CABANISS. He must have been a violent man if he acted in that way unless he was defending his property, which, of course, he had a perfect right to do. The war was over. He had a right to the saddle. It was his property by purchase or gift.

Mr. STALLINGS. With the consent of the gentleman, I will read the report on that point; or will hand to the gentleman, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I understand the evidence will show just what I have stated.

Mr. CABANISS. I will read from the report:

> When they got to Siloam, Miss., they found a citizen with a Government saddle. Affiant and said William S. Tate making inquiries as to whether said citizen had a permit or protection to possess or use said saddle, said citizen pulled a revolver, remarking that this was his protection, and commenced firing; two shots taking effect, and striking said William S. Tate near the small of the back, from which said Tate died.

I believe the gentleman is correct according to the report of the committee.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the committee but for a few moments. It does seem to me, however, according to the facts stated in this report, if they are true, that this is a meritorious case. I am constrained to differ with some of my brother members about the logic of the situation under which this man was placed at that time.

I know, as a matter of fact, as the history of the times will show, that orders were issued by the Federal commanders to seize the property in the possession of citizens which belongs to the United States at any time or place.

In my own State and county the commander of a force of regulars, immediately after the close of the war up to August or perhaps September, went over the county and took possession of everything he saw, horses and other property, wherever he found it in the possession of private citizens, on the claim that it was property of the United States.

Now, the fact that these men were sent out on perhaps a marauding expedition cuts no figure with me in regard to the disposition of this case, as I view it.

The captain of that company may have intended to steal some cotton. I do not know whether he did or not. I do not make any charge. It may have been that the cotton was supposed to be Government cotton, that is, cotton supposed to have belonged to the Confederacy. That may have been the fact, but whether that be so or not, I agree with gentlemen here who say that as a matter of military law it was the duty of the soldier to obey orders. I believe my distinguished friend here will say that is the case, that a soldier must obey orders.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Any legal order.

Mr. NEILL. Well, a private soldier did not have much time to inquire into the legality of an order. Of course he had no right to go out and murder anybody; but if he was sent out on a detail to seize cotton he could not be expected to make any inquiry whether it was my cotton, or yours, or whose it was. He would be expected to obey orders.

Mr. STALLINGS. But he certainly knew when he was sent to take the cotton, under this proposition to divide it, that that was not legal.

Mr. NEILL. There is no evidence that he knew anything about that. The understanding was that the sergeant should have half of it, as I understand it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That is the fact.

Mr. NEILL. This soldier probably was not told anything about that.

Mr. BRETZ. There was no collusion on the part of the soldier.

Mr. NEILL. If there was any stealing the officers were going to get it, and they were not going to divide with the privates. There is only one thing that puzzles me in this matter. You have made out a good prima facie case to my mind, and one that I shall vote for, but I have misgivings about it, on this ground: Why is it that this woman did not get a pension years ago?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I will tell the gentleman the reason. She applied in 1866, within a year after her husband's death, and has been prosecuting the claim until within a year or two, when it has been finally decided against her, although two special examiners who went out and examined the witnesses face to face, came back and recommended that it be allowed, on the ground that the soldier's death was in the line of duty; but the Bureau here took a different view, and held that his death was not in the line of duty. Now, under the act of June 27, 1890, the only reason why she can not get a pension of $8 a month is because the soldier received no discharge.

Mr. NEILL. I understand that. Now, under the liberal construction given by the Pension Bureau years ago, it is a little curious to me that she did not get the pension.

A MEMBER. The construction was not liberal years ago.

Mr. NEILL. But on the evidence that the committee brings here, I believe this bill ought to pass. I believe this is a thoroughly conscientious committee.

Now, about the saddle. I disagree with my brethren here about that. I know in my country those men had orders to take everything of that kind unless we could show title to it. And if this citizen had a McClellan saddle there, I doubt not that this soldier had orders to take such property wherever found. Those were the orders in my country, and we had to live under them, and there was nobody killed there on that account. This man may have been a very desperate man. There were some desperate fellows in Mississippi and there were some in Arkansas.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. More in Arkansas than in Mississippi. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEILL. I do not know about that. I think this is a meritorious bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. The only thing that prevents this lady from getting a pension is that her husband had no discharge. That was all that was the matter with my man, in the case that was just ruled out on a point of order. He had no discharge, and that is what he was trying to get, and what I was trying to get for him.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. But that man is living yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STALLINGS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 5.

Mr. CAPEHART. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, in order to allow the other bills that have been considered to be reported to the House, this bill might be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar. Is there objection to that?

Mr. CAPEHART. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 10:30 having arrived, the Speaker will resume the chair.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that the committee had had under consideration various bills, and the hour of 10:30 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the committee rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee have had under consideration sundry bills, and the hour of 10:30 having arrived, the committee rose. The hour for the adjournment of the House having arrived, the Chair, in pursuance of the rule, now declares the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

He also presented petitions of 37 citizens of Urbana; of 12 citizens of Delaware; of 34 citizens of Doylestown; of 32 citizens of Sterling; of 17 citizens of Steubenville; of 34 citizens of Geneva, and of Council No. 21, Royal Arcanum, of Toledo, all in the State of Ohio, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of 47 citizens of Fremont; of 25 citizens of Crawford County; of 50 citizens of Crawford County, and of 50 citizens of Lucas County, all in the State of Ohio, praying that the funds of mutual life-insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of 82 wholesale and retail liquor-dealers of various cities of Ohio, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself, May 26, 1894, intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2159) for the relief of Samuel B. Robertson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (S. 2160) for the relief of Flora A. Darling; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

DISTRICT WATER MAIN ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the bill (S. 970) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia be indefinitely postponed, as a House bill in precisely the same terms was passed yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CORPORATE INTERFERENCE IN ELECTIONS.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would ask the Senate to take up for consideration this morning the resolution submitted by me some days ago relative to the appointment of a special committee to investigate the organized efforts of corporations to control elections of members of State Legislatures and members of Congress. It is by mistake on the Calendar as Order of Business 479. It is not properly upon the Calendar. When the resolution was previously called I asked that it be passed over retaining its place without prejudice, and I now ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL June 1, 1894, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be charged with the duty of investigating the subject of organized efforts of corporations to control the election of members of the State Legislatures and of members of Congress, and to influence the legislation of Congress; also to investigate and report to the Senate whether corrupt means, such as bribery, free transportation, the subsidizing of newspapers, or the establishment of newspapers to be published in their interest, and distributed gratuitously through the mails for the purpose of affecting public opinion in respect to the official actions of Senators and Representatives; also to inquire and report to the Senate whether the existence of corporate organization for the purposes of influencing and controlling the election of members of the Senate and House of Representatives is consistent with the preservation of the Republic of the United States and the rights and liberties of the people.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this resolution is not intended to induce or advocate any extreme measures in relation to the policies or the economies connected with railway or other corporations. It is intended to develop such legislation as may be necessary to prevent the control of the government of the States and the United States by the great corporations of this country.

We are at this time face to face with some great social and economical problems which affect the perpetuity of our institutions, and menace more or less the existing industrial and political condition of the country. Amongst them none is more powerful than that system by which a few persons, largely the subjects of foreign States, under forms of incorporation, hold as their property a franchise for the distribution of all the products of labor and of land.

I am not one of those who favor a change in the shape of the nationalization of the private property right in this franchise for the distribution of all the products of labor and of land, and of the transportation of all the people from one part of the country to another, until it shall be imperatively demanded for the safety of the Republic, and all means of reasonable and wise control and regulations shall prove a failure; but I maintain that there is no possibility of preserving that private ownership except by the judicious and the reasonable exercise of legislative power by the Congress of the United States, controlling, for the purposes for which those franchises were granted, the exercise of the right and power conferred in them.

The railway corporations of this country collect a greater gross amount of revenue than the national and the State governments. Mr. Edward Atkinson, in his address to the New York Chamber of Commerce, says:

An approximate estimate of the dealings in goods, wares, and merchandise of all kinds in a year of the present decade comes to $42,000,000,000, and it is evident that in all this volume of trade the railway corporations levy a tax also.

The requirements of States, cities, and towns for local self-government are greater than those of the nation. The revenue collected and substantially expended for local self-government in the several States in the census year amounted to $470,000,000. The expenditures of the National Government for its support, for the deficiency in postal revenues, and for the interest and pensions of the same year, was a fraction under $297,736,487. The proportionate expenditure, per capita, in 1890 was as follows:

For State and municipal purposes, secured almost wholly by direct taxation of property, $7.50 per capita. For national purposes, collected by indirect taxation, and therefore falling upon the consumers, $4.69.

These two sums combined amount to $12.19 per capita.

They control an army of 1,000,000 employés who depend for their daily bread upon the arbitrary will of the few persons who control this great property franchise. In no respect can there be a reasonable discrimination between the despotic governments of the world in the power of organization and in the power of maintenance of large bodies of men and the small number of persons who in the exercise of this right of private property possess a function equal to that of government, equal to that of any of the despots of Europe. None of those governments control an army of more than 1,000,000 men. None of them collect and disburse revenue in their own discretion sufficient for the support and maintenance of this great body of people.

Not less than 5,000,000 people, men, women, and children, depend for their daily bread upon the arbitrary will and power of the owners of this franchise, which practically holds the power of distribution of all the products of the land and the labor of this country.

It is obvious that this great power must be the subject of reasonable and judicious control if it is to be preserved. It is obvious that if it be permitted to control the electoral power of this country there is an end of private ownership of these franchises, unless we assume that the people of the United States are content to see the power of government lodged in a syndicate, an aristocracy of a few men, largely residing in and subjects of foreign governments, obtaining by chance or by the accidents of trade, or by successes in speculation, or by great ability for organization and administration, the control of this great franchise.

Mr. President, we have been spending months upon the subject of the methods by which there shall be an adjustment of the levy of tax upon eight or nine hundred or a thousand million dollars of the productions of this country exchanged into imports from foreign countries. The effect of this levy, its incidents, its immediate and direct influence, have been the subject of profound discussion and long debate.

But by what comparison shall we measure the importance of adjusting the levy of tribute or taxation upon a thousand millions of imports with that of levying a tax upon $42,000,000,000 on all internal trade and transportation vested in the arbitrary will and power of a few individuals, largely foreigners? It is obvious that the power of taxation, whether exercised by one person or another, the power of exacting tribute from production is the same in its effect.

Therefore, there can be to the reasoning mind no kind of question that here is a power which requires the exercise of profound statesmanship and control and regulation, reasonably and justly, if government by the representatives of the people is to be preserved. This form of government must unquestionably pass away if the power of taxation in any form or in any shape is permitted to exist without control and supervision by the Goverment.

I want the question investigated whether legislation is necessary to prevent the control of the elections by the railway corporations? In my personal knowledge within one State of this Union there is a combination on the part of the railway corporations to control the electoral power of the country. I state here in my place in the Senate of the United States that the owners of the stock and bonds of the corporations in the State of Florida are combined to control the electoral power of that State, and to control it by improper methods. I hold it to be my duty to the people of Florida and of the United States to ask for this investigation and to submit the proof which I have here before me, of an openly organized party of the employés of the corporations as a party organized to control the elections and the legislation of the State.

I have no reason to doubt that it is true of other States. There is a general outcry of the people in all parts of the country. If it is not true it ought to be disproved in a fair investigation now by this body.

The evidence of this attempt to control the political power of the Government will be found in the following publication:

THE RAILROADS ORGANIZING—EVERY EMPLOYE IN THE STATE TO BE IN IT—ALL MUST VOTE AGAINST A RAILROAD COMMISSION—MUST SUPPORT MEN OPPOSED TO ANTIRAILROAD LEGISLATION—THE BIG OFFICIALS ARE NOT IN THE PLAN—THEY ARE BEHIND THE SCENES.

During the next month every railroad employé in the State of Florida will be called upon to join a political organization to fight the movement looking toward the establishment of a railroad commission.

The first step in that direction was made Tuesday night. In the office of H. C. McFadden, chief clerk of the passenger department of the Savannah, Florida, and Western Railway, a score of young men met and temporarily organized. The young men present represented all of the railroads centering in Jacksonville, namely, the S., F. and W., F. C. and P., J., T. and K. W., and the East Coast line.

H. C. McFadden was chosen temporary chairman and Charles Acosta temporary secretary. A committee of five was appointed to draft constitution and by-laws. The committee was given a copy of the constitution and by-laws of the Railway and Employés Protective Association of the United States, which was organized in Savannah November 10, 1893. This organization will likely be under the same rules.

The officials of the railroads will not be admitted as members. They will remain in the background, as it were, and pull the wires. A resolution was introduced asking for the indorsement of the officials, but the resolution was voted down, for the reason that the officials do not care to stand up and be made targets of if they can help it.

The particular purpose of the organization in the State of Florida is to oppose the movement toward the establishment of a railroad commission.

The constitution of the Savannah organization, under which the Florida organization is to be perfected, says, under the head of "Objects," the following:

"The object of the association shall be to create, establish, and maintain harmonious relations between railway companies and their employés. To seek the influence of the press in behalf of a fair and equitable administration of the laws governing railroads and affecting their employés. To prepare and cause to be published, for the information of the people, articles soliciting their coöperation. To draft petitions and other documents for presentation to legislative bodies—national, State, and municipal—praying their earnest and impartial consideration of all subjects wherein the interests of railroads and their employés are affected. To exercise, as far as is practicable, an influence with such representative bodies or individual representatives, or those aspiring to represent, soliciting their coöperation in the interests of railways and their employés; urging that their deliberations on questions affecting railways be harmonious and not antagonistic to the railways and their employés."

"To restrain by our influence as much as possible legislation granting any committee, commission, or appointed body absolute control of railroads. To endeavor to have reduced, as far as practicable, the power of the railroad commission to make rules which unjustly discriminate against railroads and their employés. To encourage the enactment of laws that tend to lower taxation on railroads, and by which they will be allowed to earn a fair and equitable consideration for the service performed; thereby increasing their earnings and enabling them to pay their employés better wages, and to establish a basis of pay and working hours equally as satisfactory to the employés of the railroads."

"To exert our influence and support and to exercise our rights of franchise in favor of persons seeking public suffrage who will agree to support, encourage, and maintain these principles. A rule of the association provides that when a man leaves the employ of a railroad he ceases to be a member of the association."

I submit the question is or is it not a proper subject of investigation, whether Senators are to be elected here not by the influences which may properly be exercised by men of wealth, not by the reputation which they may justly acquire by the liberal and public-spirited use of their fortune, but by corrupt methods, by suppressing votes, by counting votes improperly and unlawfully, by controlling or influencing the judiciary of the country.

In the State of Florida a profound belief exists that methods are used to influence one of the Federal judicial tribunals of that State. I ask that this charge be investigated. It is due to those against whom the charge is made, and it is due to the officials upon whom such an imputation rests. If it be true, there should be such legislation as will preserve the right of the people to control and exercise the political power which is vested in them under our organic laws and our form of republican institutions.

I have here before me a book published upon the subject of railways in Europe. It deals with the subject of railway corporations. The book contains a statement which I will not take time to read, for it is not my purpose to consume a great portion of the time. This book is ably edited and published, and not with prejudice against corporations, recognizing their utility, as the reasonable mind will do, for they are nothing but individuals vested with certain powers constituting them persons in the law like natural persons and vested with certain rights and powers. They remain simply so many citizens of the United States or of foreign countries.

But in the interest of preserving in its efficiency the charter of the associations called incorporations for beneficent ends, here is a book which recognizes the fact that the political power of the country, even in the arbitrary countries of Europe, is dependent upon the proper regulation and control of this vast power which has changed the relations of commerce, which has rendered of no effect the customs and usages of trade and commerce, which has exalted one country and one region of country into a position of prosperity and comfort and depressed another into poverty.

I quote the following extract from Railway Problems, a work by J. L. Jeans:

It is within the powers of railway boards to exalt one district and depress another at will. The prosperity of a district is not now, as formerly, to be measured by the equability of its climate, the fertility of its soil, and the laborious industry of its people, so much as by the high or low rates under which the railways by whom it is served allow it to reach the markets of the world. The same remarkable power can, and often does, stimulate the growth of industries in localities that are not naturally suited for their development, and tends to the destruction of once flourishing industries in localities which it fails to favor.

It comes then to this, that, next after land and house property, the railway interest is the largest and most important in the country. But it is superior to both of these rival interests in its profit-earning capabilities, yielding, as it does more than 4 per cent on the capital expended, against a possible average of 2½ to 3 per cent in respect of the others. The agricultural value of the land of the United Kingdom has been variously calculated. If it is assumed at an average of 20*s.* per acre, at the present time, it would be worth, at twenty years' purchase a gross sum of £1,000,000,000, being an average of about £26 10*s.* per head of the population. But the railways of the United Kingdom are now nearly worth the same figure.

At the end of 1885, about eight hundred and twenty million pounds had been raised and invested in our railway system, being within one hundred and eighty millions of the calculated total agricultural value of the land of the country as a whole, and averaging more than £23 per head of the population.

Russia is furnished with a larger proportion of private or companies' lines than almost any other European country. Out of a total of 19,348 kilometers of railway open in 1883, no less than 18,298 kilometers were the property of private concerns, leaving only 1,050 kilometers owned and exploited by the state.

The provisions made with a view to securing the proper construction and working of Russian lines are not greatly different to those that are enacted in other European countries. Concessions are granted by the government for the building of projected lines for a certain term of years, at the end of which period the lines revert to the state. There is a railway department carried on as a governmental bureau, in which the regulations and enactments under which Russian railways are administered are framed.

We have now seen that in all the leading countries of Europe alike the necessity of exercising more or less control over railways has been appreciated and provided for. In the United Kingdom the control so exercised is probably less strict—it is assuredly less irksome and inquisitorial—than in most other countries.

The supervision exercised by the board of trade in England applies mainly to seeing that the permanent way is in good order before being opened, that adequate provision is made against the occurrence of accidents, and that when accidents unhappily do occur, in spite of all precautions to the contrary, they shall be fully and fairly inquired into. But on the continent state control over even private lines generally goes a great deal further than this. The commissioners, inspectors, superintendents, police authorities, and others charged with the duty of keeping railway companies up to their duty and enforcing compliance with the laws relative thereto are continually pursuing their inquisitorial functions, watching over the persons in charge of the several departments, making frequent inspections of the permanent way and works, drawing up reports on defects of working or breaches of the law; and they are even authorized in some cases to call meetings of boards of directors, and in others to stop a railway that does not appear to them to have adequate provision for the safety of those who use or are employed on it.

We have also seen that the railways of England occupy almost an unique position, so far as Europe is concerned—so much so as almost still to justify the criticism made exactly forty years ago, that this is "the only country in the world whose Legislature has committed the singular imprudence of surrendering, without available conditions and for an indefinite time, its public communications into private hands." Has the evil become too deep-seated to be incapable of remedy? If not, how and from what source is the remedy to be applied? We shall consider this point more fully when we come to deal with some allied questions.

That is the power which holds the distribution of all products and of locomotion, or the power of removal from place to place of the whole of the population of the country, where they exist.

While I shall not detain the Senate to read extracts from this book, which I ask the liberty of publishing with my remarks if there be no objection, I am sustained in the proposition which this resolution contains by all the enlightened writers and reasoners upon these subjects of political economy and of governmental regulation which are to be found in these later days.

It seems to me an obvious proposition that something should be done, that railroad employés should not be permitted to organize themselves as separate organizations, not for their own protection, not for the regulation of their own wages, of which I heartily approve, but as a separate political power. If it be inconsistent with our public institutions and public policies to legislate in any respect directly against such organizations, it is certainly entirely within the reach and within the scope of our duties and our power to see that such laws shall be passed that those who own and control these great powers and these great corporations shall not be conspirators against the permanency of the Republic and the perpetuity of our institutions.

I shall ask the Senate to be allowed to print with my remarks in the RECORD such portions of the book which is before me, not abusing the privilege, and parts of the letters and evidence which I have here and portions of an address by me to the people of Florida, which is pertinent to this subject.

The value of these franchises increases with the increase of the population, and their power of taxation increases with the increase of population. They collect and disburse a revenue annually greater than the aggregate of the revenues of all the States and of the National Government, and control an army greater than the greatest of the military powers of Europe. If they should be permitted to add to this vast power the control of the elections in the States and to control the members of the Senate and the House, the Government will be an oligarchy, and its democratic and republican features will disappear.

That I may not occupy too much of the time of the Senate, I will print, under the consent granted to me, as a part of these remarks an address prepared by me to the people of Florida, containing statements of fact and expressions of my views on this subject in relation to the present attempts to control the elections of that State and the Democratic, Republican, and Populist parties in the interest of a corporation-rule party.

To the people of Florida:

The election for the Legislature in our State this year, and for a justice of the supreme court, are of unusual importance.

The senators elected will vote for my reëlection, or for the election of some other person to be Senator at the expiration of my term, three years from the 4th of March last.

The justice of the supreme court elected will sit in judgment upon the rights of the people to reasonable rates of transportation and to just and fair laws for their protection against extortion, the corrupt use of corporate power in elections by free transportation and bribery, and the important question whether there is any lawful authority for the gift of almost the entire soil of the State of Florida to citizens and subjects of other States and countries, depriving the people of free homes under the laws of the United States, and imposing without their consent a burden of taxation amounting to twenty and perhaps as much as thirty millions of dollars upon the people who now cultivate the soil and those who shall succeed them, as the purchase price of the land which the laws of our country give to them for free homes, subject only to the condition of their occupying and cultivating them.

The Legislature to be chosen this year will also be charged with the duty of deciding whether the people of Florida shall govern the State, elect their own officers, and be represented by men of their choice, or whether the citizens and subjects of other States, owning the great lines of corporations, shall through political conventions, constituted by the suppression of the votes of the people in primary elections and by false counts, nominate and, through the influence of party feeling and sympathy, elect them.

All these are subjects of the greatest importance. I have a right to have, and do have, a great personal interest in them, not only as a citizen of the State from my infancy to the present time, but also because the question of the approval or disapproval of my public action in defending the people against the corrupt use of corporate power and accumulated wealth will be made either by the election of Democrats who stand firm and incorruptible upon the people's side in this great contest or men pretending to be Democrats, but really the servants and instruments of the corporations and of the men who have accumulated great wealth by means of their power of taxing the people, who are seeking to control the State government and to overthrow the Democratic party and the principle of government by the people and for the people on which it is founded.

Our State will be the battle ground this year between the people on one side and on the other those who are seeking to subvert the people's government and Democracy and convert it into a government of privileged classes, in which the great body of the people are to stand "with saddles on their backs and bridles in their mouths," as Mr. Jefferson said, "for the privileged class to ride them with boots and spurs."

In every county in the State the land grant advocates and servants of the few men who own these great corporations will appear as candidates for nomination for delegates to nominating conventions and in primary elections, and for election to the Legislature. They will be supported very largely by the local newspapers of the State, which to a great extent are and will be in the control of this corporate power. Free transportation and advertisements to newspapers, and all the influences by which the people are sought to be overcome by bribes and corrupt methods, will be used.

I advise and recommend you, and all others, to make the issue plain and broad and unmistakable; to allow no man to receive your suffrage, either as a delegate or candidate, unless he is a man whose record is clear and beyond suspicion on the people's side; who is a man who can not be secretly bought or misled into betraying the people; who is a Democrat in fact, and not in appearance and by pretense.

I think it is due to the people and to me that my public conduct should be approved or disapproved, and the issue should be made in the election of Senators who will vote in the election of my successor. I am in favor of the people determining who shall be the Senator of the United States, and have the men who shall be elected to the Senate pledged and instructed as to the person the people desire them to vote for. Let us have this understood and settled in the elections of this and the next two years.

"Be not deceived;" the political power of the State of Florida is an important factor for the people's protection, both in our State and our National Government. It may be used by the oppressors of the people to make them poor, to take away from their earnings, to make their families live in want and misery, to deprive their children of education, and to make the lines of their lives hard and miserable, or it may be so used that there will be abundance and contentment and brightness and joy in every household.

It must be made known to every intelligent voter in Florida and in the United States that to-day we stand confronted with a demand, and with an earnest and persistent effort, that the people of the State shall be deprived of the power of choosing their own officers and imposing taxes on themselves through representatives chosen by them, and that this power shall be exercised through bribery and corruption by the men who control and own the great corporations of the State.

The contest over the confirmation of Mr. George Wilson for internal-revenue collector of the State of Florida and Mr. H. W. Long for register of public lands, is distinctively a demand made by the owners of the great railroad corporations that they shall choose the officers who are to exercise and represent the Federal authority over the people of the State. A gentleman representing the power and accumulated wealth of the Standard Oil Company has been exerting all the influence arising from his great wealth with the Senators of the United States to confirm his demand for the confirmation of Mr. Wilson against the wishes of a great majority of the Democratic people of Florida and against the constitutional right and authority of a Senator chosen by the people of the State. He has been sustained in this demand by the representatives of the Louisville and Nashville corporations and of the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad Company and of the Plant Investment Company. The records of the Treasury Department contain evidence of this fact, and besides it is otherwise known to Senators by the appeals which have been made to them.

These persons—if the conversion of the dry land of the State into swamp and overflowed land by the untruthful statements of agents of the Interior Department and the unlawful exercise of authority by the Secretaries of the Interior, in the approval of lists of lands under obsolete, antiquated, and expired land grants, be valid—own the soil of the State of Florida and have nullified the homestead laws of the United States, which grant free homes on the public lands to the people, and they now demand, not openly and boldly, but by secret and improper methods, by personal appeals through their agents and others, the appointment of Federal officers and the control of the political power of the State.

Of two of these great personages, who exercise as great dominion over the lives and fortunes of the people as a Roman proconsul of former days, I have spoken, from my place in the Senate, in terms of commendation and respect for their enterprise, and their leadership in the construction of public works, which might be made under proper administration useful to the people of the State. I still entertain for these persons sentiments of personal respect and consideration, and I shall do in future, as I have done in the past, all that is properly in my power to aid their enterprises and protect their just rights, but I shall oppose every effort which they or their agents and attorneys may make to demand more than their chartered rights as transportation companies.

Their demand for the overthrow of popular government and the denial of all the principles of the Democratic party I have thought it my duty to the people to oppose with all the influence and by every means which I could command. The wisdom and justice of my action in this respect should be approved or disapproved by the people of the State. Without their emphatic approval and their earnest and indignant condemnation of those who seek this overthrow of the people's government and of Democratic principles, all my efforts will have been unavailing and worthless.

The agents of this corporate power will claim to be Democrats; they will insist that free homes for the people on the public lands and reasonable rates of transportation are my hobbies, and that I have failed to accomplish them; they will claim they must be chosen for the Legislature without any avowal or pledge as to who they are to choose or vote for; they will declare that they will do whatever they ascertain the people desire them to do, and as to this they must be the judges; but all the time and always they will be the hired servants and agents of corporate power. "Ye must judge the tree by its fruits." "Men do not gather grapes of thistles, nor figs of thorns." "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

I wish it known to the people that I am not the advocate or friend of extreme opinions. I am not the enemy of those who by fair and honest means have accumulated great properties. When they use them wisely and for the people's good I commend and respect them as faithful stewards of a great trust, but they must be subject to the laws and to the people's will. They must not seek to lay unholy hands upon "the ark of the covenant" of the people's liberties. They are only men, as we all are, equal under the laws each to the other and all to each.

In respect to the unlawful deprival of the people of their free homes on the public lands and to the unwise, wild, and reckless grant of dominion over the entire soil of the State to a few men, citizens of other States and largely foreigners, I have asked and do still insist that the question of the lawfulness and validity of their grants shall be submitted, at the public expense, to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, whose decision and mandate they as well as the poorest and humblest of the people must obey. It was to prevent and resist this submission to lawful authority that caused the corrupt methods to prevent my election, when the people demanded it by a great majority, three years ago.

It is to prevent this submission by the State of the rights of the men who own these great corporations of the State to take away from the people their free homes to the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States that the Democracy of Duval County were by fraud deprived of a vote in the pretended Democratic convention two years ago. It is to prevent this decision that a corporation newspaper has been established and is now published in Jacksonville. It is to prevent this that the enemies of Democracy and the people's government are already bringing out their candidates for the State senate; men who are known by their record to be in the interest of corporation rule over the people of the State; Democrats only in name, in truth enemies and traitors to the people and to Democracy. Let the real Democrats, the friends of the people, oppose them with candidates whom they know to be true Democrats in the sense of fidelity to the people and the people's right to rule; men who will respect the people's will in the election of a Senator and in respect to the public policies which the election this year in our State involves and represents.

More than this, these franchises being the subject of private ownership and deriving their value from their power of arbitrary taxation in the discretion of the owner, whether a native or foreigner, will draw to themselves, as they have already done to a large extent, the products of all the labor and the ownership of all the land. We shall have then the government of a privileged class, holding in their hands and in their ownership not only all the power of government, but also the ownership of land and the products of labor.

Land and labor and human energy are the sole factors of all social and political life. Whoever controls them, whoever can establish ownership over all land and labor, whether by the methods of war or its results of subjugation and slavery, or by commercial tyranny, or by financial policy, or by tariffs, imports, excises, embargoes, or restraints upon trade will be a Cæsar or despot and hold absolute power over a people in a condition of industrial slavery.

It is an immaterial or unimportant question whether this despot be one or many persons, whether the power be vested in a supreme and single head or in a class, it is the power of absolutism over the people, and it is not important how this result has been reached, whether by military power, by statecraft, by the tyranny of commerce and commercial and financial methods the condition of subjugation and depression will be reached.

All government institutions, policies, and political condition exist in idea, are founded upon thought. Invention and art are the creatures of science. Traditions, books, painting, and sculpture are but the methods by which thoughts are born and communicated from one man to another, and one generation to another.

The economies and institutions of our Republic are founded upon the idea that government is created for the protection of all men in the enjoyment and possession of life, liberty, and property—not upon the idea of the protection and preservation of the life, liberty, and property of a few, a part, a privileged class. Therefore, our organic laws declare that all power is vested in the people (all the people) for the protection of all in the possession and enjoyment of life, liberty, and property, and the later amendment of our organic law declares that "all persons born in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction, are citizens, and no State shall abridge their privileges nor deny them the equal protection of the laws."

That is, the institutions, policies and conditions, which power or law in our Government shall establish are subject to these supreme limitations and conditions for the exercise of all power under our institutions.

Our public policies have been centered upon the thought or idea of protecting each individual in his independence, in his opportunities, in his life, his property, his right and opportunity to acquire property, and in his ownership of land. The opposite of this principle, or condition, or policy, is the concentration of wealth and the opportunities of acquiring wealth and the ownership of land in a small number of the people. This has been sought to be avoided in all our declared public policies, but the individual ownership of franchises, combinations of individuals for associated ends, invested with corporate rights and powers, has been and is the established policy of our laws.

Under it the corporate ownership of public franchises has become the prevailing feature of our industrial and productive economies. A vast and wonderful increase of facilities for travel, trade, and commerce has been developed, and a concentration of wealth in individuals in the form of taxes drawn from the people and from the credit which rests on the right to impose future taxation, greater than has ever existed in the history of nations, has been created.

Under it the distribution of the means of subsistence on which the life of the 70,000,000 of our people depend has become the subject of private property by a few persons under forms of incorporation or association. A franchise for the distribution of all the products of the land and labor of the people is the private property of a few persons.

I do not seek to disturb this private property. This franchise, whether wisely or unwisely given, is not now under consideration.

The purpose of this inquiry is to seek for the means by which the ownership of this great franchise may be retained in private hands for the preservation of our institutions and for free government.

You ask me whether it is possible for the Democrats who are sincere and zealous followers of the party and loyal believers in its principles to succeed against the railway corporate power and its candidates, when all the election machinery and the execution of the laws relating to elections and returns is in their hands and subject to their control. I reply, yes. Success is neither doubtful nor difficult when the people are aroused and conscious of an attempt to deprive them of their liberties and their right to control their own Government.

The American people and their free ancestors, for many centuries have asserted their right to control the Government whenever they have become conscious of a determined effort to deprive them of it by tyrants or tyranny of any kind.

No man or set of men, however appointed, will be brave enough to encounter the swift and just punishment which an outraged people, observant of their conduct, will visit on those who seek by fraud to deprive them of their rightful power to control their own Government.

The means to be adopted to protect the people against such wrongs are to select everywhere committees of intelligent and unpurchasable Democrats, who will personally see that the votes of the people are correctly returned and counted, both in primaries and elections, and will further see that those who seek to carry elections by corruption and bribery shall be punished.

The Democratic party must be redeemed this year from the control of conventions constituted by the fraudulent suppression of the votes of the Democrats in primaries and by delegates selected by a few persons in the different counties, without the knowledge and consent of the majority of the Democrats in their respective precincts and counties, and from candidates nominated and elected by such methods; men who are not Democrats but are secretly advocates and supporters of corporation rule in the State and in the United States.

The State government and all the officers of the State, and her political power and influence, must be placed in the hands of Democratic people, and exercised and used for the benefit of the people, and not of the foreign owners of the transportation corporations of the State.

In the coming elections the greatest vigilance should be exercised. The people should attend their primaries and nominating conventions; they should require all delegates and candidates to make open and public declarations of their principles and opinions, and to pledge themselves faithfully to carry out the people's will and their pledges.

The person to be voted for as Senator by the State senators elected this year should be named by the people, and the delegates and candidates pledged to support such person and the issue made in the election before the people.

The following copies of letters on file in the Treasury Department in relation to the appointment of a collector of customs at Tampa, Fla., show the demand of three of the great owners of corporation franchises in the State for the control of the appointment of Federal officers in the State of Florida.

The fact that the same persons have been represented here by persons actively demanding the confirmation of Mr. George Wilson for collector of internal revenue, and the fact that the chairman of the so-called State Democratic executive committee is the attorney of the Plant Coast Line System, and also the fact that another and a proxy member of the so-called State Democratic executive committee is an official of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, through its branch road, the Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad Company, all show the demand of these corporation owners for the possession and control of the political power of the State of Florida.

I have great respect for the President of the United States, and do not mean by the publication of the following letters to impute to him any kind of participation or any connection with this scheme of creating a corporation-rule party, but I wish to bring before the Senate and the people the mad and wild folly of a few men who seek, through agents as foolish as themselves, to array an army of employés in a corporation-rule party to attempt to dominate over the people of the State of Florida and of the United States, control their electoral power, and prescribe for them their legislative and executive policies. I acquit the great body of men of wealth of any participation in this scheme, but the torch may be applied by a single madman and the conflagration and explosion will be none the less certain and destructive. I would guard against and prevent it.

If it should succeed in the State of Florida, as it will not, and corporation rule over the people of that State be established, carrying with it ownership of all the land and all the labor, and the right of taxation, the object lesson will be too plain, and the political and social ruin inevitable and speedy. It is in the power of the people to control and direct our public policies in the paths of a safe, wise, conservative remedial legislation.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., June 12, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I am informed that there is very considerable excitement prevailing in Tampa in regard to collectorship. Am now on my way there and shall probably remain a week. I expect to be in Washington in about ten or twelve days, and should be gratified if the appointment can be deferred until I have an opportunity to see the President in person.

Very respectfully,

H. B. PLANT.

Hon. HENRY T. THURBER,
Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

DECEMBER 24, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I took the liberty of wiring you last night, asking if it was necessary for our State executive committee to come to Washington again in reference to G. B. Sparkman's application for the position of collector of customs here and George W. Wilson's application for the position of collector of internal revenue. This I did because of information just received that Mr. COOPER, of the Second Congressional district, had indorsed Mr. Thomas Stockton for the latter position, and that Senators CALL and PASCO and Representative MALLORY had centered upon John T. Lesley for the former position.

We had anticipated the uniting of Senators CALL and PASCO and Representative MALLORY upon Lesley, but really supposed that Mr. COOPER would support Wilson. We did not know that it was really necessary, after our talk with Mr. Carlisle in November last; but you doubtless know whether we can accomplish any good by going. We really have no one else to whom we can go for advice, and if you will kindly write me on the subject it will be greatly appreciated.

As our committee had only asked recognition as against Senators and Congressmen in the appointments to fill those two places, and as neither Senator nor Congressman resides in the southern part of the State, nor within 200 miles of Tampa, and as both persons, as their recommendations will show, are eminently fitted for the places, respectively, we cherish the hope that this concession will be made to our committee. Any advice that you can give me will be highly appreciated and treated as personal.

Yours, truly,

S. M. SPARKMAN, Chairman.

Hon. HENRY T. THURBER,
Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

NOVEMBER 13, 1893.

DEAR SIR: Since meeting you last week I have had a talk with Mr. H. B. Plant in relation to the office of collettor of customs at Tampa, Fla., who expressed himself as being favorable to the appointment of Mr. G. B. Sparkman, and authorized me to say that his appointment would be perfectly satisfactory to him. He will, should it become necessary, make the same statement, and may call sometime during the present week to see you in regard to the matter. I have not had an opportunity, as yet, of communicating with Col. Duvall, of the F. C. and P. R. R. Company, but I feel confident that the management of that company is friendly to Mr. Sparkman.

In fact the attorneys for that company, Judge D. S. Wall and P. O. Knight, indorsed him, as the papers on file with the Secretary of the Treasury will show.

I thought it best to communicate the above to you, as in my conversation last week you mentioned a desire to know how they (C. M. Plant and Col. Duvall) stood with reference to their application of Mr. Sparkman.

Yours, very respectfully,

S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman Democratic Executive Committee.

Hon. HENRY T. THURBER,
Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

DECEMBER 4, 1893.

DEAR SIR: Since my last conversation with, and letter to, you in Washington, the Hon. John A. Henderson, vice-president and general counsel for the Florida Central and Pensacola Railroad, has indorsed in very strong language Judge G. B. Sparkman for the position of collector of the port here, and as the Plant Investment Company is also friendly to his appointment, of which I myself am personally cognizant, the two largest interests in Tampa are thus united in his behalf. Governor Mitchell, who had at first indorsed John T. Lesley, not knowing that the name of Judge Sparkman would be presented, has since written a letter very strongly indorsing Judge Sparkman in case Capt. Lesley's name is not considered.

From what the Secretary of the Treasury told us we presume the appointment will be made within the next few days; and that Capt. Lesley's name will hardly be considered. But it is rumored in South Florida that Senators CALL and PASCO may unite in recommending some one whose name has not yet been prominently mentioned in connection with that position. I have no means of ascertaining the truth of this, but if this is done I would like to have an opportunity of being heard on behalf of the State committee, provided, of course, the President desires further information.

Thanking you for your kindness and courtesy in the past, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman State Executive Committee.

Hon. HENRY T. THURBER, Washington, D. C.

NOVEMBER 23, 1893.

DEAR SIR: When I wrote indorsing John T. Lesley for the position of collector of customs at Tampa, Fla., I did not know that the Hon. G. B. Sparkman would be a candidate. Having indorsed Mr. Lesley, I have felt that I could not with propriety write as I have wished to in behalf of Mr. Sparkman to your excellency. I am now informed that Mr. Lesley will not be appointed to the position. Under these circumstances I feel free to say that Mr. Sparkman's appointment to the position will give the greatest satisfaction to the business men at Tampa and to our people generally.

He is well qualified to discharge the duties of the office, and I do most cheerfully recommend and indorse him as being, in my opinion, worthy of public trust with marked ability and credit, and recently as judge of the sixth judicial circuit court his record was one both he and his friends have reason to be proud of. He has faithfully served the party in the capacity of chairman of the county executive committee and in every campaign he has championed the cause of Democracy and responded to every call of the party.

Mr. Sparkman has always been a strong supporter of your Excellency, and at the State Democratic convention held at Tampa in June of last year warmly supported by a very able speech a resolution indorsing you, and through him and his friends his county is now the banner Democratic county of this State. I have intimately known him from his childhood. He is a native Floridian, and there is no one in the State who is estimated more highly.

If your excellency sees proper to appoint Mr. Sparkman you will reward a true, deserving man, capable and willing to discharge his every duty, and by his appointment you will give a merited reward to him and his friends, who have steadfastly and loyally supported you both before and at the Chicago convention.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. MITCHELL,
Governor of Florida.

His Excellency GROVER CLEVELAND,
President of the United States.

DECEMBER 4, 1893.

DEAR SIR: Since my conversation with you in connection with other members of the State executive committee of Florida a few weeks ago in regard to the position of collector of the port of Tampa, Judge Sparkmen, whom a majority of our committee recommended, has the indorsement of the Hon. John A. Henderson, vice-president and general counsel of the F. C. & P. R. R. system, and also a letter from Governor Mitchell indorsing Mr. Sparkman in case Capt. John T. Lesley's nomination is out of the way. He had indorsed Capt. Lesley, not knowing that Judge Sparkman's name would be brought forth.

The governor, however, afterwards appointed Capt. Lesley to the office of clerk of the circuit court for this county, really for the purpose of putting himself in a situation that he might indorse Judge Sparkman. He also, about the same time, appointed Capt. Lesley's son to the clerkship of the criminal court of this county, both of which positions are very lucrative.

There is still another applicant for the collectorship, whose name we did not mention at our conference with you, viz, that of the Hon. J. W. Trammell; but he is also holding an important and lucrative position in the State, to which he has been appointed by Governor Mitchell.

Supposing that the appointment would be made within a few days, I thought best to mention the above matters.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman of the State Executive Committee.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Washington, D. C.

[John A. Henderson telegram.]

MARCH 15, 1893.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Washington, D. C.:

I lived at Tampa thirty years, and know the personal and political standing of the candidates for appointment for collector. Sparkman is a Democrat, and the only one of them who has always supported your Administration. His appointment would be justifiable because of his personal fitness and long party services, and would be acceptable to the business interests and would strengthen the Democrats locally and all over the State of Florida where he is known and highly appreciated.

Yours, truly, JNO. A. HENDERSON.

JUNE 8, 1893.

DEAR SPARKMAN: I inclose you a letter for the President, which you will please present to him. It is my desire to be in perfect accord with your committee, because I feel that any steps taken by the committee in relation to any Federal appointments will be in the interest of the Democratic party of this State.

I hope you will protest against the appointment of Frank Clark for United States district attorney, Southern district of Florida. I join you in this matter.

Truly yours, H. L. MITCHELL.

Col. S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman Democratic Executive Committee of Florida,
Washington, D. C.

JUNE 8, 1894.

SIR: I take pleasure in saying that I am in perfect accord with the Democratic executive committee of this State in reference to Florida appointments.

The members of this committee, as a rule, are Democrats, and gentlemen of high character, and I hope that the recommendation of the committee may have due consideration at the hands of your Excellency.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. MITCHELL,
Governor of Florida.

His Excellency GROVER CLEVELAND,
President, Washington, D. C.

JUNE 9, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I have just heard that you had been informed that I was unfavorable to the appointment of G. B. Sparkman to the collectorship at Tampa.

Now, I place but little reliance in such reports, and especially is this true in regard to Judge Sparkman. When I appointed Capt. Lesley to the clerkship of Hillsboro County I thought he would not after that be an applicant for the collectorship, and I so stated to him and at the same time stated I was a friend of Judge Sparkman and he a friend of mine.

That I felt a deep interest in the welfare of Tampa; that Sparkman would make a good collector and that his appointment would be satisfactory to the business interests of Tampa and if Lesley got out of the way, I should expect your assistance in pressing Judge Sparkman's appointment. Since that time I have had no occasion to change my mind, and sincerely hope that in case Capt. Lesley is out of the race, you will use your influence in pressing Judge Sparkman's appointment.

Yours truly,

H. L. MITCHELL.

Hon. S. PASCO, United States Senator.

H. B. Plant, president railroad company; H. M. Flagler, railroad company and Standard Oil Company; Col. Duval, representing Florida Central and Pensacola Railroad Company; Charles Dougherty, Thomas M. Shackelford, John A. Henderson, W. D. Chipley, and S. A. Jones all recommend Sparkman.

T. K. Spencer recommends Sparkman, and writes:

* * * Anybody WILK. CALL recommends will not give satisfaction. All recommended by CALL have been independents and disorganizers.

T. K. SPENCER,
Former Deputy Collector of Customs.

When we examine the representation which the five corporation rule persons, who control the majority of the so-called Democratic committee which met at Tampa, propose to allow the several counties, it is too plain for contradiction or even doubt that the means by which this is proposed to be done is by a packed convention, like that of 1892, in which the Democrats of the white counties are to be disfranchised by a suppression of their votes and by an unfair and exaggerated representation of selected counties, the control of which may be affected by a concentrated effort and by fraudulent means such as were made use of in Duval County in 1892, and against which the people revolted.

Thus it will be seen that the county of Hillsboro, with a population of 14,941, of which 6,502 are white males, and 1,645 are colored males, is allowed 28 votes: and the county of Jefferson, with a population of 15,767, of which 12,190 are colored, and 3,558 are white, of which 1,791 are white males and 5,922 are colored males, is allowed 24 votes, and the county of Duval 16 votes.

Duval County has been in the last several State elections a Democratic county, and by the census of 1890 has a population of 26,800, of which 11,970 are white and 14,830 are colored, of which 6,089 are white males, and 7,641 are colored males.

It requires the voters out of 1,700 white males to make Jefferson County Democratic and it requires voters out of 6,089 white Democratic males to make Duval County Democratic, but Jefferson County, where the colored people do not vote to any great extent, is allowed 8 more votes, or one-third more votes than Duval; that is, a voter in Jefferson is three times a voter in Duval. The county of Hillsboro by the census of 1890 has a population of 14,941, a little more than one-half of the population of Duval, yet she is allowed 26 votes in the so-called Democratic convention.

Thus the Democratic convention is to be constituted not on the basis of registered Democrats whose party relations are known and certified by the Democrats of each county, but by the count of the votes as returned at the last election. If such returns, for any reason of mistake or design, because of the interest of local candidates, or as in the Duval primaries in 1892, because of a concerted design of corporate power and interest to control the State through fraud in Democratic primary elections and county and State elections, then by this plan of the corporation-rule party mistakes, interest, or fraud are to be made the controlling factor of Democratic party power.

The Republicans sought to control the people by the colored vote and by a suppression of the white vote.

The design of the corporation rule people seems to be to control the Democratic party by a suppression of the white Democratic vote, and by an exaggerated count of the vote in the counties where there is a large colored vote and a small white vote. The proposition, therefore, of the corporation rule party is to seize the power of the Democratic people and the Democratic party by a suppression of the white Democratic voters. When we remember that two of the most active, aggressive, and wealthy Republicans of the United States are the instigating power of this corporation rule movement, it is easy to see that it has not in view the success of the Democratic party and the perpetuation of its power, neither has it in view the success of the Republican party nor the Populist party, but is a railway corporation rule party alone.

The whole apportionment for the Democrats of the State is like this, and exhibits clearly the continued attempts of the same persons to establish corporation rule in the State by the suppression of the white Democratic vote and the count of the entire colored male population as Democratic voters. When we connect all these facts together and bear in mind that three of the great railroad corporation owners of the State are active, aggressive, and leading Republicans, and that a railroad and land grant official under whose manipulations nearly all of the land in West Florida and a great part of that in Middle, East, and South Florida has been taken away from the operation of the homestead laws, and the right of the people to their free homes upon it denied to them to the end that they might be forced to labor for years to pay the purchasers from the railroad companies such price as they might choose to demand, is a candidate for the State senate in one county, and another railroad official in Nassau County is also a candidate for the State senate, the people can no longer doubt that the public policies which are founded on the Democratic principle that government must be for the people, for the preservation of the people's lives, liberty, and property, and not for the preservation of the lives, liberty, and property of a small part of the people, and to this end, that all power must be in the people, and their will, expressed in the proper forms of law, must be supreme, is now being attacked and sought to be overthrown in our State.

The organization, secretly, of a railroad-corporation-rule party, claiming to be Democrats; the establishment of the Citizen, a corporation-rule newspaper, published at a great pecuniary loss in Jacksonville, and distributed gratuitously, under the name of a Democratic journal and professedly in the interest of Democratic rule, by three active, aggressive, and extreme Republicans, who own the great railway corporations in Middle, East, and South Florida; the publication of The News, another corporation-rule newspaper in Pensacola, under the name of a Democratic newspaper; the candidacy in several counties of persons known to be and to have been for some years not only in the employment of the railroad corporations, but devoted to their interests, and active agents in all things for the establishment of their rule over the people and over the Democratic party, prove conclusively the truth of this statement and the purpose to create a corporation-rule party and to use either and all political parties as they may be in power for their own personal ends.

All over the State we find, with few exceptions, the newspaper press subject to their control, and opposing every effort to emancipate the people from bondage to them, and compel from them reasonable rates of transportation, and to abstain from attempting by bribery, corruption, and fraud to deprive the people of their right to govern the Democratic party and the State.

I hope every voter in the State of Florida will read the following record of the disposal of the public lands of the United States in the State of Florida in denial and deprival of the people's right to free homes upon them, and when they read it remember that all this has been accomplished not by any legislation of our own State, for the Legislature has never granted any land to any railroad corporation except swamp and overflowed land.

The process of converting dry, arable land suitable for free homes for the people into "swamp and overflowed land unfit for cultivation" has been accomplished by the corporation agents through the Interior Department in Washington, and largely by some men now proposing to represent the people as a corporation rule party in the Legislature of Florida, and to perpetuate upon the people of Florida the burden of a great debt of many millions of dollars for the payment of purchase money for the homes which by the laws of the country are their own without money and without price.

This is the corporation rule party, which is intended to control the Democrats with a convention constituted of 24 votes for Jefferson County with 1,700 white males, and 16 votes for Duval County with 6,400 white males, and with a Legislature of corporation employés, attorneys, agents, sympathizers, and supporters in the name of the Democratic party.

The following list of lands does not include the land on the Atlantic coast, nearly all of which is claimed to be the property of the owners of certain railroad and canal corporations, to the exclusion of all settlers under the homestead laws:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1890.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 26th instant, relative to lands listed or approved to the State of Florida on account of the grant made by the act of May 17, 1856 (11 Stat., 15), for the Pensacola and Georgia Railroad Company, I submit herewith a statement, by counties, showing approximately the amount so listed.

Very respectfully,
W. M. STONE,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Lands listed or approved to the State of Florida on account of the act of May 17, 1856, for the Pensacola and Georgia Railroad Company.

Name of county.	Acres.	Name of county.	Acres.
Calhoun	55,665.80	Liberty	11,050.35
Columbia	29,077.39	Madison	72,113.36
Gadsden	24,149.32	Santa Rosa	214,502.02
Hamilton	46,707.59	Suwannee	122,128.45
Holmes	74,245.69	Taylor	1,717.53
Jackson	117,776.02	Walton	316,068.17
Jefferson	9,902.43	Washington	166,960.24
Lafayette	5,814.28
Leon	14,006.35	Total	1,273,890.99

The following table will show the land claimed by the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad Company, represented by Mr. John A. Henderson in Florida and Mr. S. I. Wailes in Washington City, and now by Mr. Cuttings of New York, as principal owner, and Mr. Duval, president of the railroad company:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 2.

SIR: Referring to your request of this day relative to the quantity of land reserved in certain counties under the act of May 17, 1856, making a grant of lands to the State of Florida to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amelia Island (Fernandina) on the Atlantic to the waters of Tampa Bay, with a branch to Cedar Keys, on the Gulf of Mexico, you are advised that an approximate estimate shows as follows:

	Primary limits.	Indemnity limits.
	Acres.	Acres.
Marion County	138,240	207,360
Hernando County	46,080	120,960
Sumter County	153,240	157,440
Polk County	39,360	84,480
Hillsboro County	80,240	104,800
Alachua County	37,440	126,720

These figures represent in the aggregate the actual quantities covered by the withdrawal made for the benefit of said grant within the counties mentioned without deducting therefrom the lands expected or in anywise lost to the grant.

Respectfully,
W. M. STONE,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

$35,004.90.

Of the lands reported above as sold 70,782.97 acres were sold to Sidney I. Wailes for $47,601, on his account as agent of the State at Washington in adjusting land.

Page 156:

Three thousand six hundred and fourteen and sixty-six hundredths acres were sold to Williams, Swan & Earley for $4,518.91.

Page 154:

Entered by S. I. Wailes during years 1881 and 1882 under his contract with trustees for April 13, 1878, 21,604.03.

Note: For selecting lands.

On page 132:

Certificate No. 1, for 1,013.96 acres, being 20 per cent of the whole amount, was ordered to be assigned to S. I. Walles in consideration of procuring said certificate, he being entitled to 20 per cent thereof under his contract with the board of trustees.

On page 131:

November 1, 1881, the governor laid before board following patents for swamp lands received from the General Land Office, 24,461.50 acres. Said patents having been obtained through the agency of Sidney I. Walles, who under his contract with the board is entitled to 8 per cent upon all lands patented of selections made by the State prior to 1861, the said Walles is allowed to select the quantity of 1,956.92 acres, being 8 per cent of the lands so patented, in compensation for his services.

That the lands selected by Charles Pomeroy (clerk and agent of L. G. Dennis) in compensation for his services in procuring patents for 58,454.01 acres of swamp lands, which have not already been entered, be reserved from sale until the question at issue between said Pomeroy and L. G. Dennis shall be decided or until the further order of the board.

Note: Elsewhere it appears that 5,800 acres were so conveyed July 25, 1881.

That Sydney I. Walles be appointed agent of the board to select any further swamp lands to which the State may be entitled under the act of September 28, 1850, and that in compensation he shall receive 2 cents per acre for all lands selected by him and patented to the State, to be paid in lands at current prices.

Under this authority it is believed 7,000,000 acres have been selected at Washington, and this, at 2 cents an acre, would be $140,000 in land at current prices.

Two hundred and fourteen thousand two hundred and seventy-one and seventy-six hundredths acres, selected prior to 1861, obtained through the agency of S. I. Walles; 17,141.76 acres Mr. Walles entitled to locate as his percentage, embraced in Tampa patent, No. 21.

Twenty-five thousand eight hundred and ten dollars and thirty-six cents, 20 per cent to S. I. Walles for his services, or 5,162.07 acres.

April 23, 4,639.51 acres to S. I. Walles for services.

Report of C. L. Mitchell, commissioner in 1885–'86, states:

Of lands reported above as sold, 32,546.76 acres were sold to S. I. Walles for $21,465.80 on his account as agent for the State, at Washington, in adjusting land claims under his contract with the trustees of October 16, 1878, and 29,547.53 acres were sold to John H. Henderson for $20,580.21 on his account as agent of the State for selecting swamp lands under his contract with board of trustees of internal-improvement fund.

Let us now add to this the private and personal interest of a few men in the alleged grant to the State under act of May 17, 1856, for the construction of railroads:

Mr. S. I. Walles, swamp and overflowed lands, 214,909.34 acres, at $1 an acre	$214,909.34

Only about one-sixth of the State, which was practically all Government land when this policy began!

The approximate amount saved by this bill is 695,040 acres on the Pensacola line, and 576,000 acres on the Waldo-Tampa line.

I appeal to all good Democrats, all good citizens, all true men, who believe in free government, and the people's right to happiness and comfort, and to the protection of their lives, liberties, and property, to arouse themselves, to organize, to be wide awake, to consider carefully the men who ask them for their suffrages, and to vote for no man, for delegate to conventions or for candidate for any office, who is not known to be opposed to corporation rule, who is not faithful to Democracy and to the people, and who is not incorruptible.

The weapon with which your enemies will assail you is money in all the insidious forms of corruption and bribery. The power of the newspaper press will be hired to defame, disparage, and belittle all your true friends, and all who value the Democratic party and its principles above corporation rule and the monopoly of all the sources of wealth and property, through land grants and rates of freight and transportation, by a few men, having no acquaintance with the people and no interest in their advancement and happiness.

Let me bid you, then, awake, organize, and send men to your Legislature and to all public offices who, like the fifty-two true Democrats and faithful friends of the people in the Legislature of 1891, will pass through the temptations and wiles of the enemies of Democracy and republican government harmless, unscathed, and unsuspected.

I ask, if there be no objection to its consideration, that the resolution may be now voted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. HILL. What is the proposition, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida which has just been read.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection, of course, to the consideration of the resolution if the Senator desires to have it considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the request of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to any inquiry relating to fraud in the election of Senators or Representatives, but I appeal to the Senator from Florida whether a sufficient foundation has been laid for a broad and general investigation into the conduct of the Legislatures of the several States in the election of Senators. It seems to me that no such foundation has been laid.

If the Senator wishes to examine into anything which has occurred, or is alleged to have occurred, in Florida I should not at all object; but it seems to me the resolution is too broad in making a general declaration of this kind, or in making a particular declaration as to fraud extending over the whole United States.

I do not think, so far as the State where I live and the States surrounding that region are concerned, that there is any influence exercised by corporations directly or indirectly in the elections of Senators or Representatives. If there is such an influence exercised in the State of Florida, and the Senator says so, I should be willing to vote for an investigation with great pleasure, and should be willing to punish corporations or individuals for any misconduct done in respect to elections of Senators and Representatives.

I do not like to see these broad and sweeping declarations made against the whole people of the United States, as if our people were using corrupt means in their elections. If such was the case, it would subvert our republican form of government. It is a bad sign when such sweeping and broad allegations are made, and they should never be made unless there is some foundation for such accusations.

If anything has been done in the State of Florida by corporations or others which is wrong and improper, and if the Senator will confine his resolution to an inquiry into that subject, I should be very glad to vote for such a proposition, and if any foundation can be shown for it, I should be willing to make it even broader than that. Still, the power of the Senate is on the other side of the Chamber, and if they desire to examine into elections all over the United States, I do not know that I care much about it; but it seems like making accusations against ourselves, as if in some way or other we held our seats here by fraud. That could not occur except perhaps in a particular case, and when that case is presented it ought to be examined into.

As I have said, if there has been anything wrong in the Florida elections at any time and the Senator from Florida says so, his word is enough for me; and I should vote for a committee to investigate that particular offense; but to order, without specific allegations, a broad and general inquiry of this character, I do not think is proper.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Ohio, that there is no charge of fraud against anybody in this resolution. There is an allegation that there is ground for inquiry in respect to organized efforts of the railroad corporations to control the State of Florida. I said in my remarks that one reason was that corporations were organizing there, not because of what had been done, not as to fraud which had been committed, but as to remedial legislation, to prevent the influence upon elections of corporate bodies, organized for that purpose, and acting in that direction.

I make no charge of fraud in any State Legislature; nor do I desire to investigate any State election that has occurred or any legislative election. The resolution raises the question whether it is to the interest of any political party and to the perpetuity of our institutions that there should be a corporation-rule party, organized at the instance and with the money and power of corporations, which are chartered for business purposes and for business purposes alone, not in the interests of one party or the other.

Mr. President, the time has now expired in which we agreed to discuss the resolution, and I ask that it may go over, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the act (S. 513) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Barry Hospital.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, and ask that it may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first state the pending question, which is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 22, after the word "property," it is proposed to insert "owned;" so as to read:

And income from all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, there is no objection to that amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the call for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be considered as agreed to, in the absence of objection. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 24, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out "and not citizens thereof."

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, yesterday may well be known in the future history of this country as Populist day. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], recognizing the fact that one of the leading principles of his new party was at stake, led off in an elaborate speech in favor of the principle of a graduated income tax, and the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] brought up the rear in defense of the same principle. It was entirely fitting that the beginning and substantially the end of the debate should have been had by those distinguished Senators, who peculiarly and especially represented that principle now proposed to be adopted by an American Congress.

The time, in my judgment, was not wasted, especially from their point of view. Their platform had been attacked, not ours; their particular principle was at stake, not ours. It was their peculiar province to vigorously and zealously defend that principle, and they did so ably. I listened to them with great attention. It was therefore, I say, proper that they should have monopolized a large portion of the time yesterday.

Mr. President, there may never be such an opportunity for them again. It was right to improve it. There may never occur again a time in the history of this Government when one of their principles will occupy so much of the public attention and attract so much of interest as it did yesterday.

They have succeeded in doing what? By manipulation, by negotiation, by argument, by entreaty, by something, possibly by reason of its own intrinsic merits, they have managed to incorporate in a Democratic reform tariff bill one of the essential principles of their party. They undoubtedly naturally feel proud of the success of their efforts. I do not begrudge them their victory. I differ with them in regard to the propriety of the tax itself, but I am willing that they shall have all the glory which attaches to the triumph.

It was suggested to me by one of the friends of the Populist party the other day as a reason why this principle was interpolated in the bill that he was afraid that if it had been placed here upon its own merits it might either have been abandoned by its Democratic friends, or else if it did pass it would meet with the President's veto. That may or may not be the true reason why it was attached to this measure. Certainly the friends of free coinage, the friends of those who believe in the coinage of the seigniorage, the friends of the repeal of the State bank tax have not seen fit to adopt any such tactics. Those principles have been allowed to pass by, those principles have been sacrificed. There has been no attempt to place them upon the pending bill in order that they might compel the President to approve the bill with those principles in it, but it has simply been adopted so far as this one Populistic principle is concerned.

But before commenting further upon the speeches of those distinguished representatives of the Populist party made on the great Populist day of yesterday, especially devoted to their interest, I desire to speak a few words in regard to other remarks which were made yesterday in favor of the income-tax proposition. I always like to hear the speeches of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. He always speaks ably, earnestly, and I think sincerely; and I do him the credit and justice to say that he endeavors to present those arguments which will convince his hearers. He wastes no time in claptrap; he proceeds directly to the point involved. He did not resort to the subterfuge of claiming that this is intended simply as a temporary policy of the Government.

He repudiates the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that it is intended simply as a temporary expedient. True to his nature and his course in the Senate in the past, he boldly says he favors it as a permanent policy of this Government, and not simply to meet an existing emergency, although he says it is necessary for that purpose. But he goes further, and says that it is a just tax; that it is an equitable tax; that it is a tax which ought to be incorporated in the fiscal system of this great Republic of ours.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has assumed to do what no one upon this side of the Chamber has endeavored to do. He has endeavored to convince us and to convince the country that these moneys are actually needed for the benefit of our Treasury. I do not so regard it. I believe—at least that is the Democratic hope—that the tariff bill, as soon as it may go into operation, will produce almost sufficient revenue from the tariff articles alone, aside from the income tax, to produce enough money to run the Government. That is the Democratic theory of the bill. Of course the Senator from Colorado attacks it. He has submitted to you a statement which of course attacks the policy of our side.

In defense of the scheme of income taxation he has to say that you have reduced the rates so much or have not reduced them sufficiently to produce revenues enough to support the Government. It was the Democratic theory when the bill was first suggested that there should be a sufficient reduction of tariff duties in order to realize enough money to support the Government economically administered. It was believed and predicted that that reduction could be so effected that by reason of increased importations there would be more than enough realized to support the Government. But, according to the argument of the Senator from Colorado, made sincerely here, we are shown this is to be the fact, that the Democratic party has not reduced the duties sufficiently or has framed the bill in such a form and such a way that you have simply substituted for revenue duties income-tax duties.

We have labored for years, in season and out of season, to convince the country that the tariff is a tax, and now we have convinced them not only that the tariff is a tax, but that it is an income tax which we are after. What good is it to the country to substitute simply one form of taxation for another? I thought there was to be a reduction of tariff taxation of some account. I supposed that by reason of the reduction there would be such increased importations that a sufficient amount of money to meet the needs of the Government would be realized. But it seems I was mistaken; it seems that this side of the Chamber was mistaken; it seems we have been making false appeals to the country, and now we are asked to accept the explanation of the distinguished Senator from Colorado. It may or may not be accepted by our friends upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a statement of the condition of the Treasury on the 31st day of May, it being the last statement which has been presented to the public. It shows that there was a cash balance in the Treasury on the 31st day of May, 1894, of $117,854,355.85. I am not prepared here now to point out particularly how much of this is intended for gold reserve. I am here simply to say that the Treasury is not bankrupt. I am here to say that you have a surplus in your Treasury to-day. I am here to say that if your tariff bill is worth anything at all it ought to bring, by reason of revived conditions of trade and by reason of increased importations, sufficient money into the Treasury to support the Government.

When the five years shall have elapsed and your income tax expires by its own limitation, how are you then to support the Government? From the argument of the Senator from Colorado you will have nothing to support it; you will be running in debt. Is that the feast to which we are invited; is that the spectacle we are to witness? Are we not making a tariff bill which we will expect to last for a long number of years? In making such a bill, is it not our duty toward our country to make not only a tariff bill which will be acceptable to-day, but which will be acceptable and satisfactory five years from now, aye, ten years?

The bill which we ought to pass here should not be disturbed for many long years to come. We should realize the important fact that we are legislating not only for to-day, but for to-morrow and for many years to come. As I said a few days ago, I am opposed to this temporary policy. Let us make a bill which will last, which can stand criticism, and which will meet the demands and needs of the Treasury for years to come.

There is nothing in the argument that the needs of the Treasury require an income tax. No one has ventured here to dispute the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee in his first speech, when he showed that there was about $3,000,000 surplus, even according to his own figures, and without the income tax. These figures were based upon the importations of 1892-'93, when trade was depressed, when prosperity did not abound in the country; and it is our hope, it is our belief, it is the Democratic creed, at least, that by reason of revived trade and the prosperous conditions of the country the law will produce more than sufficient revenues for the support of the Government, throwing the income tax aside.

Mr. President, the same distinguished Senator entered an emphatic denial that many features of the proposed law are inquisitorial, or said that at least they are not any more inquisitorial than the statute laws of many of the States. Mr. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury, in a recent interview admitted the inquisitorial features of the tax. It is claimed now that they have been somewhat modified. In his annual report he suggested a certain income-tax measure which was intended to avoid inquisitorial features. He did not recommend an individual income tax. He recommended simply a tax upon corporate investments.

In one form you might consider it a corporate tax; in another it is an individual tax, but a tax upon investments made in corporations. His argument is that a man's investments in corporations are inevitably more or less public. All corporations publish annual or quarterly statements of their affairs, and they do so voluntarily or are required to do so by law. The theory of the measure which the Secretary recommended is, that if a business man should be required to exhibit his investments in corporations, there would be no unusual or undue publicity. There is force in that suggestion. There is some reason why there should be, in that view of the case, simply a tax upon corporate investments. The Secretary, in his annual report, says:

> The assessments or returns need not be based upon information extorted by the law from the persons charged with their payment, but upon the public records and the regular and authentic accounts of the corporations and companies in which the investments have been made; and they have the additional merit of being imposed entirely upon that part of the citizen's income which is not earned by his labor or skill, but which, in the cases of legacies and successions, is acquired by mere operation of law or by gratuitous bequest, and in the case of incomes from investments in corporations and joint stock companies, by the simple earning capacity of his capital as such, without personal effort upon his part.

Secretary Carlisle, the distinguished financier of the Democratic party in its great crisis, a gentleman in whom we all profess to have implicit confidence, did not venture to recommend this individual income tax; he did not venture to recommend a tax upon labor or the skill of man. He simply recommended a tax which would not be inquisitorial in its features. He simply recommended a tax whereby whatever moneys should be invested in corporations might be taxed, and as those investments were more or less a matter of public concern and were open more or less to the public eye, there could be no harm in taxing those. That was the argument. That was the tax that the President of the United States recommended. It is not this tax. It bears no comparison to it.

The same distinguished Senator spoke of the custom-house inquisition. Mr. President, in the first place the custom-house inquisition is more or less a matter of absolute necessity. It was of course established many long years ago, and related only to foreigners or passengers coming into our country. Those were the good old days before half of America went to Europe and then returned again, and it was a procedure imposed upon foreigners coming to this country. The Senator has been abroad unquestionably and has come back into the country, and he knows, as he must know, that these investigations are more or less a mere matter of form. There is the most casual examination possible as a rule.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from New York allow me to say that I made no complaint of the customs laws in that particular?

Mr. HILL. It was an illustration.

Mr. TELLER. I merely mentioned it as an illustration that while they are objectionable and offensive to a great many people, they are absolutely necessary for the collection of the revenue, and on that ground defensible.

Mr. HILL. I am not seeking to defend them especially upon the ground of absolute necessity.

Mr. TELLER. They are necessary.

Mr. HILL. But they are more or less a matter of form. They are not so bad as they are called, because in nine cases out of ten the customs officials can tell who are honest and genuine bona fide passengers coming to our country, and a hasty examination of the trunks is all there is to do usually.

Mr. President, the necessary inquiries which must be made at the custom-house do not furnish, it seems to me, a sufficient argument why an income tax should be placed upon the statute books of the country whereby every person who pays the tax can be at almost any season of the year summoned before a collector or a deputy collector and put through a series of questions.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about the enormity of tariff taxation. I call attention to the remark made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] when he said—and I agree with him in that particular—

> There is no government in the world whose citizens feel the hand of the National Government as lightly as they feel it here. Nobody has felt its burden.

That is substantially true. That is because your taxation has been indirect. That was the taxation recommended by Thomas Jefferson. That is because it has been unseen substantially, and unfelt for a long number of years. Yet the proposition is (and to a certain extent the Senator from Colorado joins in the demand) that you substitute for this unseen, almost unfelt, taxation, direct, inquisitorial income taxes.

Mr. PEFFER. A tax that is felt.

Mr. HILL. It is proposed to substitute it for a tax that is felt. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. President, I do not see the logic of that argument. I think it convicts itself of inconsistency. If tariff taxes have been unfelt for so many years, if nobody has felt their burden, if they have been paid almost cheerfully by the people of the country, then I see no reason why you should turn around and substitute other taxes in their place which will be felt.

But, it is said that the citizens of my State and of other States will evade this tax, will possibly perjure themselves to avoid its payment. I do not claim that the citizens of New York State are any more honest or more anxious to pay taxes than the citizens of any other State in the Union. Human nature is the same everywhere. The history of the world proves that oppressive and odious taxes will be evaded. History proves that men will take questionable means to avoid their payment, especially if the whole community sympathizes with them in their effort to evade the taxes. My people will do no more than the people of North Dakota and the people of Nebraska or the people of Colorado. They will pay them as honestly and cheerfully as the people of those States, although they will pay ten, twenty, thirty times as much. There will be some perjuries. There will be some evasions. There will be some efforts, of course, to avoid these taxes.

Mr. President, there need not necessarily be perjury per se. This tax can be evaded—evaded in what manner? Let me call your attention to certain provisions of the bill. In estimating the gains and profits of a person these are the things which must be included:

> The amount of sales of live stock, sugar, cotton, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, etc., * * * being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, less the amount expended in the purchase or production of said stock or produce, and not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family.

Then it provides that—

> In computing incomes the necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, occupation, or profession shall be deducted.

What field does this leave open to every man engaged in a large producing business, in the raising of live stock, in the raising of sugar, in the making of butter, and in operating large farms—to men engaged in these extensive industries? He has a right to deduct all his expenses, the amount expended in the production of these articles, and the amount expended in his business. Who is to judge of the propriety of this expense except largely himself?

Is there any reason why a gentleman of wealth with a great stock farm, having a large family of boys coming up between 18 and 25 years of age, shall not give them a large salary upon the ground of services rendered in the raising of cattle, in the raising of wool, in the raising of cotton? Can he not give his wife a salary, too? Can he not give it to his hired man, his nephew, living with him? Can he not have an arrangement with those people whereby he has some drawbacks?

You may say these are dishonest practices. They are practices that can not be detected. Are you to summon a jury to have it determine in every case of an income tax whether these charges and expenses are excessive or not? Is the question of the good faith of the man to be determined by a jury or by some other form? Are you not obliged to accept his statement, substantially, as to the amount of those expenses? Otherwise, sir, you will be engaged in litigation all the while.

It opens a door to fraud. Men can make their expenses what they please, and they will make them large if thereby they can escape this tax. No other form of taxation opens up this field, unless it is some of this infamous ad valorem custom-house taxation, where the business men are in the hands of the experts, and the experts differ, of course, greatly, honestly or unintentionally, and sometimes intentionally. But aside from that there is no field of taxation that can be devised which opens up such opportunities for fraud and evasion, and it is fraud and evasion for which there is no proper remedy.

Mr. President, you will pardon me for suggesting that I notice the word "cotton" is in italics. It seems that the other House in framing this measure omitted to provide for any income tax upon the profits raised from cotton. Of course it was an inadvertence. Of course there was no effort made to make the bill sectional, and our fair-minded Finance Committee here, embracing the interests of the whole country, with patriotic ardor seized the opportunity to put in this great product of the South.

Therefore, we find inserted in the bill in italics "cotton." Possibly it may have been omitted because our planters in years past have not been making any money, but when we shall have this bill in complete and full operation everybody is expected to get rich, cotton planters and all; everybody is expected to have large incomes; and, therefore, it was very proper that cotton should be enumerated with sugar, and wool, and butter, and cheese, and all the other products of the country. It came a little late, though, that suggestion about cotton. Cotton almost got left out.

Mr. President, right here let me speak a word about the exemptions of this bill. We are not starting out upon a new experiment in one view, and in another we are. There are income-tax statutes in other countries. It is true there are none in a republic. That is just simply a little circumstance that has happened, that a republic never had an income tax except during a war. But Prussia has one, Denmark has one, Austria has one, and England has one. All monarchical governments have one to extort moneys from an unwilling people. Prussia's exemption is $225, Germany's from $70 to $600, Denmark's $215, Austria's $113, England's $750, and ours here as now proposed is $3,000.

Mr. President, why is there this distinction maintained so zealously and earnestly in the bill? What ground exists why there should be this exemption? Senators who have discussed this question have evaded it. There is not one of them who has addressed the Senate who has endeavored to defend this exemption or to point out why it should exist. Can it be possible that it is intended to represent the difference in wages, the difference in the cost of living between this country and England and those other countries? It has been denied over and over again that there was very much difference in the cost of living and very much difference in wages; and yet it is proposed to make a difference between the amount of $750 and $3,000.

It is true that what $750 will answer for an Englishman in England it requires $3,000 in America to purchase the same comforts, to live in the same manner, to enjoy the same privileges? I say this large exemption is a "give away" upon all we have been claiming and clamoring for during so many years. We have been saying, of course, that the expenses of living in this country were somewhat larger. We have been contending, and properly so, that wages were higher in this country, and I am very glad to know that fact; that our workingmen live better in this country than they do in England and those other countries, and that there are many hundreds of dollars difference in the expenses of living; but, sir, there is no such difference as $750 and $3,000; $750 and $1,000 would represent the true difference.

Mr. President, if this bill passes it has got to be defended before the people, it has got to be defended by Democrats everywhere; and I suggest to your own good judgment, in the interests of honest legislation against class legislation, in the interest of the party that enacts it, that you shall make this bill the least objectionable possible. The higher you make your exemption the harder it will be to defend the bill. It represents more than the mere cost of living. Three thousand dollars exemption, what a large amount this is!

Let me quote from what a distinguished gentleman, who has given his lifetime to the study of these economic questions, says upon this subject:

> The authors of the proposed income tax now before Congress especially proclaim that the chief object sought by them in this measure is to transfer the burdens of the State from the shoulders of the poor to those of the rich. It is, therefore, interesting to note where they propose to draw the line in respect to charity and as to the amount of property the possession or enjoyment of which, in their opinion, constitutes riches.
> If we assume 5 per cent as about the present annual average profit on money, land, or other property in the United States over and above all charges and taxes, then an exemption of $3,000, in an assessment under an income tax, would represent an accumulation, or business, or profession of the value of $60,000.

Sixty thousand dollars put out at interest at 5 per cent brings $3,000, and yet it is proposed to reach the rich by the bill and exclude the poor. It has been said that New York is built up of wealthy men. We have millionaires there; we have men in moderate circumstances, but, sir, a man with $60,000 invested at 5 per cent is considered fairly well off in New York or in any other State of this Union. He is a rich man out in Kansas, is he not, I ask the Senator from Kansas? I say to you right here that it is hard to find now good investments at 5 per cent. I but speak the sentiment of the business community when I say that good investments at 5 per cent are rare. They are difficult to find.

If we take—

The same gentleman from whom I am quoting says—

> the rate at which the United States can borrow money, namely, 3 per cent, then an exemption of $3,000 would represent an accumulation of a citizen invested in United States securities of $100,000. And according to any fair interpretation of the action of the committee reporting a $3,000 exemption, a citizen who is worth less than $50,000 of ordinary property yielding income, or $100,000 of property invested in United States bonds, is a legitimate object of national charity.

In other words, if a citizen of this country invests his money in Government bonds at 3 per cent, he realizes $3,000, and he has an investment of $100,000; and yet that man is proposed to be exempted. A man worth $100,000 is pretty well off in any part of the country. That is the difficulty with this high exemption. It is utterly indefensible. As I said the other day, the matter of exemption is a matter of governmental favor or charity.

A man must pay his just debts, yet when you issue an execution against his property the law in its mercy, wisdom, and charity steps in and saves a few paltry hundred dollars, which shall be exempt. You have a homestead exemption of a thousand dollars, but here in the pending bill, intended to reach the rich men of the country, you absolutely exempt men worth $60,000, where they have an investment of 5 per cent, and $100,000 where they invest it in bonds of the country, drawing 3 per cent interest.

In my humble judgment it will be a most serious mistake for the friends of the bill not to accept the amendments which may be offered to perfect it, to make it a bill which can be somewhat defended upon the stump and in the press and before the people of this country. If those in charge of the bill do not wish to do it they are at liberty, of course, to refuse. I was pleased that yesterday an amendment was offered to fix the exemption at $3,000. An amendment to fix it at $1,000 of course would greatly perfect the bill and make it more acceptable to the people of the country who want to do what is just and right. Of course, it would not be acceptable to those who simply desire to reach a certain class and who want to make the bill as objectionable as they can to the charge of class legislation.

To the latter class I have nothing to say, but I appeal to those who want to perfect the bill, who want to make it an honest bill, who want to make it a bill which can be defended, who want to make it a bill which, after full and fair discussion before the people, will stand the test of criticism to at least make it as unobjectionable as it is possible to make an income-tax law.

Take a case where a State has direct taxation and where real estate as a rule is required to be taxed. What would you think of a State which, having a system of direct taxation whereby all real estate is taxed according to its value, exempts all real estate which does not produce a rental of $3,000?

Would not that be an unusual exemption? Would it not be unheard of, unjustifiable, indefensible anywhere?

If it were proposed to levy a tax of 2 per cent on annual incomes below $3,000 in amount and exempt all incomes above this sum, the unequal and discriminating character of the exemption would be at once apparent: and yet an income tax exempting all incomes below $3,000 is equally unjust and discriminating. In either case the exemption can not be founded or defended on any sound principles of free constitutional government, and is simply a manifestation of tyrannical power under whatever form of government it may be enforced. The great republican principle of equality before the law and constitutional law itself alike preclude any exemption of income derived from like property.

We should take no narrow view of this question. It is impossible to discuss the question of Federal taxation without considering at the same time the question of all taxation. Of course the Federal taxation, namely, customs taxation, does not of itself distribute burdens equally, but when taken in connection with a still greater amount of taxation, namely, your State, your county, and local taxation, then the whole tax is distributed substantially equally. If you must have an income tax, then abolish all your tariff taxes and have income taxation to raise all your Federal revenues. Do not have parts of two systems. Do not let the General Government take and monopolize the tariff system of taxation, the indirect system, and then turn around and take from the States the other systems of taxation which were intended peculiarly for their benefit. There is ample room in the tariff field. Let the States have the other fields which are open to them.

Has anyone here discussed the question of the effect of what this taxation will be upon the States of this Union? I hold in my hand a volume containing the collateral inheritance laws of the various States. They have such laws in Maryland; they have them in Connecticut; they have them in New York; they have them in divers other States, whereby there is assessed a certain sum upon all inheritances of personal property or gifts made in view of death.

Mr. HOAR. What is the date of the book the Senator from New York has?

Mr. HILL. Eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

Mr. HOAR. Such a law has very recently been passed in Massachusetts. I do not know whether it is included in the volume the Senator has.

Mr. HILL. I do not see the Massachusetts law here. In substance this tax is 5 per cent upon all inheritances and gifts. This tax raises a large amount of money for the governments of New York, of Maryland, and Connecticut, and now of Massachusetts and other States. In addition to this tax, so necessary for the relief of the State governments, the General Government, when it has the whole field of tariff taxation open to it, this indirect means of taxation, steps in and says "we shall monopolize these inheritance taxes and you shall not have them." How long do you think that the States can stand this double taxation? It amounts to 7 per cent upon the amount of these inheritances and gifts, a most enormous taxation, not justifiable even in a time of war. What must be the ultimate effect? The ultimate effect of the enforcement of the new statute will be that either the General Government must give way or the States must give way. These estates can not stand this enormous taxation.

The result will be that probably the States must give way, and then the States must resort to direct taxation upon land, upon the farmers of the country, upon the owners of small houses and lots. This burden, then, instead of being transferred from the poor real estate owner is really put upon him. You simply jump out of the frying pan into the fire. I therefore say it is unjust to the States of this country which have collateral inheritance laws; it is unjust to the owners of real estate in the various States who, now relieved by these collateral inheritance taxes, will have other and additional burdens put upon them. This is a most serious question, one of the most serious questions involved in the enactment of this measure.

It has been proclaimed over and over again that the object of an income tax is to reach the wealth of the country. I have already pointed out, in the remarks which I have had the honor of submitting heretofore, that the wealth of the country pays its proportion of your State, your county, and municipal taxes, which are twice as much as your Federal tariff taxation. If there is any complaint that wealth does not pay its proportion of the State taxes, then I plead for the cause of home rule and the right of each State to determine that question for itself. The question of States rights is involved; the question of State rule is involved here; the question whether the States shall deliver over to the General Government these fields of revenue.

But, are you sure that your bill has been framed in such a way that the poor man is not to be taxed? I invite the attention of the friends of the measure to this point: Here is a poor man. All he possesses is a thousand dollars invested in a corporation. His whole income from the thousand dollars and from any money which he otherwise earns will not exceed $3,000. The theory of the bill, and it is a nice theory, is that that poor man ought not to pay any income tax. Will he not pay any in fact? I say it is not true that he will not, because the poor man gets his dividend on his thousand-dollar investment, but before he gets the dividend the corporation has taken out his proportionate share of the 2 per cent and paid it to the General Government, and his dividend is just so much less. Is not that true?

Is there any man here prepared to deny it? Is it right? Is it just? Is it in accordance with the proclaimed principle upon which you have endeavored to frame this bill? Under the bill as it came from the House this was not the result intended, or was not the result of the bill itself, but you have changed the theory of the bill, you have changed its language, you have reconstructed it, and the reconstruction is worse than the "reconstruction" in days gone by, because it will produce greater hardship.

There is no answer to that proposition—none whatever. In other words, the poor man, who may possibly have been a soldier and served under his country's flag, gets a thousand dollars as salary; that is all he gets, and properly it is not taxable, but if the poor man is a cripple, if he is in bad health, if he can not get around, and has taken his money and invested it in a corporation in which he had confidence, and it pays fair dividends from which he ekes out a living, in that very case, according to the terms of this bill, unless you adopt an amendment which changes it before it passes, that poor man, owning but a thousand dollars, will have to pay his proportion of that 2 per cent tax. There is no escape from it. And yet this is said to be a bill to help the poor man, this is a bill to tax the rich!

But, Mr. President, I have drawn an amendment which will probably be voted down, if for no other reason, simply because I offer it. I shall read it, and at the proper time I expect to submit it to the Senate.

It is as follows:

The amount of any dividend paid to a single stockholder, not exceeding $1,000 annually, may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations from any amount upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividend so received by such single stockholder shall be included in making up an income of $3,000 upon which the tax shall be paid.

In other words, this amendment allows the man who has a thousand dollars invested in a corporation to receive all the dividends from that thousand dollars, provided, of course, if he has other sources of revenue, what he receives shall go to make up the $3,000, but if it does not exceed $3,000, of course he pays no tax upon it, and he ought not to pay. This amendment will cover the very point raised yesterday so well and ably by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], which is absolutely unanswerable.

Mr. President, the friends of the income tax do not quite agree on what are the grounds upon which it is based. They indulge in glittering generalities that it is a just and equitable tax, that it is designed to reach the wealth of the country; and they indulge in praise of it in that line; but I notice in a Washington newspaper this morning—the Washington Times, which is a zealous defender of the income tax—that this novel defense of it is made. They do not say that it is a tax upon wealth; they do not attempt any such defense as that, but they say:

It is a tax on brain energy and not on the wages of labor, and will be welcomed by a majority of the people as a means of relieving in part the burden of tariff taxation.

That tariff taxation which one Senator said was scarcely felt in this country. Then we have it from this new defense that it is a tax upon brain energy; that it is wrong for one man to have more brains than another. That is but another argument for the redistribution of property; it is another reason why property should be divided, and why all should start in again upon the same basis.

Mr. President, this attempt to control the brain, the resources, the exertions, the thrift, the prudence, and the industry of the people will fail, miserably fail. Men are not constituted alike; members of the same family differ from one another. One boy will be strong and vigorous and another will be puny and weak; one boy will be bright, and another boy will be dull; but this new argument is that they must share all their resources alike. One boy will start out in the morning with a pin, and, by judicious trading with his paymates, will come back with a jackknife at night; another boy will start out on the same day with a jackknife, and he will come back with a pin. There is no regulating the brains, the industry, the prudence, and the thrift of mankind, and there should not be.

I believe in organization, I believe in labor organizations, farmers' organizations, and organizations of all kinds; but every organization, every system, every tax, every institution of this country which seeks to place men upon an equality in regard to what they shall earn and what they shall eat and what they shall have is against the spirit of our free institutions, and can not survive. Who is to place the limits upon what a man shall earn?

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska entered into a vigorous defense of the principles of the Populist party; and a defense, as he called it, of radicalism and an attack upon conservatism. He seems to labor under the delusion that this new-born Populist party has a great mission to perform in this world, and he is its great prime minister.

I do not think that there is any room in this country for any large third party. Men are at liberty to form one if they please. That is a question of judgment and discretion. Third parties come to the front like rubbish and dirt in a boiling pot of water. They breed and subsist upon hard times. They are incident to all countries now, because all countries are depressed. There have been depressing periods in all history. These third parties come to the front when there are panics, when there are hard times, when there are civil wars, just the same as guerrillas who hang upon the skirts of two great armies contending one against the other. They are instituted to secure temporary results. Then these outside coalitions come to the front.

In the good times which are coming the third party will be driven out of sight. It occupies a prominent place in the country just now because of the closeness of the Senate. A coalition was made in certain States of the Union two years ago between the Democratic party and the Populist party which resulted in some victories.

In my judgment the Populist party, for which the Senator from Nebraska has marked out so glorious and great a career, can not survive under clear skies and plain sailing. It flourishes now; it rallies with it the discontented of every class; it appeals to class prejudices; it demands a change merely for the sake of a change—a wonderful party indeed! It has confidence in its self-sufficiency. The great financial questions which puzzled an Albert Gallatin and a Salmon P. Chase, our Populist friends can easily solve; they present no difficulty to them. They could run this Government easily without encountering any snag; they have no doubt about it.

The Senator from Nebraska says that everything has been going to the dogs for years. Sir, we are experiencing now a season of depression; yet, after all, the country for a great number of years got along without the Populist party.

The Senator from Nebraska has confidence in his party. That is creditable to him. What has it accomplished by its victories? What measures has it introduced here which can possibly meet the approval of the American people? It has secured the important concession of barbed wire.

Tremendous accomplishment! Glorious result! Barbed wire is prohibited in some of the States of this Union as a nuisance and dangerous to the people. Barbed wire antagonizes everybody; its sharp points stick out on every hand; it rasps everything with which it comes in contact; it attacks everybody who runs up against it. Barbed wire is the proper emblem for the Populist party. [Laughter.] You Populists have not even secured free sugar; you have not secured free coal; you have not secured free lead: you have not secured free iron ore; but you have secured barbed wire, and you are going to vote for this great reform measure!

Mr. President, I know the defense will be made that the Populist party is young. That reminds me of the story of a Russian. He was praising the Czar of Russia, telling what a great man he was, how nobody in the history of the world, sacred or profane, was equal to him. The gentleman talking to the Russian said, "You do not mean to say the Czar is greater than Alexander the Great?" "Yes, I do." "Greater than Napoleon?" "Yes." "Greater than Wellington?" "Yes." "Greater than Washington?" "Yes." "Greater than Christ?" "No; but the Czar is young yet," he said. [Laughter.] So this new party is young yet, and of course it has not accomplished great things.

The Senator from Nebraska says that for years and years corporations have been running the country. My dear good friend—and I respect him—every time he goes to bed at night prays God to deliver him from the corporations, and when he gets up in the morning, he thanks the Almighty because he has been delivered; and all through the day he has the fear of corporations before his eyes. I see no such danger to the country.

The Senator says the corporations have been controlling all the legislation of both parties for years. Most wonderful discovery upon the part of the Senator! I asked him to specify these tremendous evils which have been brought about by the two great parties of the country. First, he goes away back to the resumption act, a great number of years ago—all ancient history—and now he wants us to understand that the Populist party has been organized in some way or other for correcting that wrong. I do not know how it is to be corrected. They want to go back, I suppose, to paper currency, and not have specie payments. What is the use of trying to prevent what has already occurred?

Sir, there was some injustice possibly in the resumption act, yet it was a wonderful achievement for finance at the time, for which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will always have considerable credit at the hands of his countrymen. There was some friction undoubtedly in bringing the country out of the distress of paper money into specie payments, some waste, some wrong, and possibly some injustice, but, nevertheless, it was a grand result, and, as a whole, was worthy of the commendation of the American people, and it is a pretty poor party which starts out with the idea that it is going to attack the resumption act of many years ago.

Then the Senator says the Populist party is formed for the purpose of stopping the giving away of public lands, when it should be known that the giving away of public lands was stopped away back in 1872, when the honorable gentleman unquestionably belonged to a different party from that to which he does now. Undoubtedly there were mistakes made in the giving away of public lands, undoubtedly there was some prodigality in regard to it, but, nevertheless, the land was worth but little then and the country was hardly civilized then where the lands were. What was the effect of it—I mean the net result? It was to build up this great country of ours, to encircle it with railroads.

It increased our population; it added to the prosperity of our land; it increased the property subject to taxation. As a whole, I think, it can be said that it was great wisdom to thus give away large portions of the public land. Of course, our hindsight is better than our foresight, but I say now it does no good to rail because both parties years and years ago, perhaps with a little too much prodigality, gave away the public land. But how are you going to remedy it now? What are you going to do to remedy it? What was the necessity for organizing this new party, with its new-found principles, at this time, to prevent a wrong consummated years ago, probably before the Senator was born?

Then the Senator says the next great enormity enacted by both parties, for which he proposes to have this great and formidable Populist party hold both parties responsible, was the repeal of the Sherman law. I do not propose to thresh over old straw again; I simply desire to say that this new party professes to believe in the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Every line and every section of the Sherman law was against that true theory. The Sherman law was for the accumulation of silver bullion; the Sherman law treated silver bullion as a commodity; and your Populists profess to desire it as a money metal, and to regard it as such.

No true silver man, in my humble judgment, should have refused to allow that law to be repealed, and scarcely anyone defended it as a principle. Some thought it was wise to wait until further legislation should be perfected; but no one stood up for the Sherman law as a true, correct financial principle. Therefore it ought to have been repealed.

My friend, indeed, will not quarrel with me on the subject of the free coinage of silver. Representing as I do the great State of New York, one of my first votes in this Chamber was for the free coinage of silver, and in casting that vote I took my political life in my very hands. The Sherman law violated every principle involved in the free coinage of silver. Therefore, Mr. President, no very great outrage was done any body by the repeal of that law, and it does not afford a sufficient basis or excuse for the building up of the Populist party.

The Senator says corporations control the Senate, and then, waxing eloquent and impressive, he gives us the exclusive information that four or five years ago some Senator was elected to this body on account of money spent by corporations. I asked the Senator who it was, and he claimed his privilege and declined to answer. Then he said it was somebody who does not now sit in the Senate, somebody who has gone and passed; and his excuse for the statement is that he saw it in the newspapers; and he says that I do not keep very well posted if I did not see it at the time.

Mr. President, I read the newspapers as steadily, I think, as any other public man, but I do not believe every tale I read in the newspapers. Usually they give correct information, but sometimes they give very poor information. Sometimes they set afloat a scandal for which there is no foundation.

I can thus speak fairly of the newspapers, because, as Senators well know, I have never been the subject of their attacks; I have never been attacked during my whole political life, or misrepresented by the newspapers of the country, and therefore I can afford to be generous with them. [Laughter.]

The Senator says these were newspaper charges, and unable to substantiate what he charged he falls back upon the poor newspapers. I do not think he would want to have us believe all that appears in the newspapers. I hold in my hand a portion of the article known as the Edwards article, of which the Senate well knows. It is stated in that article that a portion of the money which was improperly used in 1892 was sent to Colorado to buy up the Populist vote.

That was an article which appeared in the newspapers, but of course that can not be true. Populists can not be bought, and no portion of that money was used for any such purpose. The statement is simply an idle newspaper charge, having no foundation in fact, and liable to be exploded in a moment. It is to such charges that the Senator from Nebraska refers here to prove the fact that the seat of some Senator or other was procured in this body years ago by bribery or corruption.

Mr. President, I need not fear to stand here to defend the integrity of the United States Senate from these loose and silly scandals and vain charges. The great majority of the Senate is composed of poor men, men who live upon their salaries and what little they can earn during the recesses of Congress in their business and professions. As a rule, they are poor men, I say, and the millionaires, about whom we have heard so much, are scarce. They are men of honesty, men of integrity, men, in my judgment—although I differ with them in many things—who are endeavoring to discharge their duty, who act according to their consciences, and who are serving their country as best they can.

The Senator says the great mission of the Populist party is to defend the rights of the people. What rights have the Populist party defended which have been imperiled? What have they proposed? What have they suggested? What scheme do they present here which has not been presented before?

Sir, the Democratic party is the party of the people. It came into power with Jefferson, who enunciated the principles of human rights. The Democratic party before that Senator was born stood up for the right of habeas corpus, for the freedom of the press. It has resisted arbitrary arrests, and away back, under the leadership of the gallant old Henry A. Wise of Virginia, it stood up for the rights of the naturalized citizens of this country.

The Democratic party, sir, has never been recreant to the rights and privileges of the common people. There need not come into the arena any new defenders, who ostentatiously say that they are the champions of the people. They assume all the virtue of the country; they are going to rebuke fraud. Both the old parties in this country, in my judgment, have honorable histories. I desire to say to the Senator that upon the great question of opposition to fraud, of opposition to peculation, of opposition to bribery, of devotion to law and order, of opposition to cranks, and of fealty to the Constitution, there is no division between the two great parties of the country; and I am glad that it is so. Both are just as much opposed to corruption as is the new-born Populist party.

We, of the Democratic party, differ from the Republican party upon the financial question; we differ upon this great economic question of the tariff, but they are honest and sincere differences about which honest and intelligent men may well differ, but neither of the two old parties is open to this vile and indefinite charge made against them of the wholesale corruption of public men or that the Senate of the United States is itself a corrupt body.

I have not seen and witnessed corporations trying to influence this body. I have not gone out of my way looking for them. I have not been around, perhaps, as some Senators have. I have seen no such influences, and I think none such exist. I think it is pandering to a false public sentiment when men try to set such stories afloat.

The Democratic party gave to the country a Jefferson, a Jackson, a Monroe, who established the Monroe doctrine; a Tilden, whose name was a synonym of reform; and a Douglas. The other party gave us a Hamilton, an Adams, a Lincoln, and a Grant. Both parties are proud of their public men and proud of their history.

Mr. President, Populist government, good government, honest government, can be seen where it is administered by the Populist governor of Colorado and the Populist governor of Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. We are getting along very nicely in Kansas, thank you.

Mr. HILL. They are getting along just now; but a short time ago they had State troops surrounding the statehouse and the civil authorities arrayed against the military—almost a state of anarchy—and that is Populist government.

Mr. PEFFER. Within two years the State of New York was under martial law at Buffalo.

Mr. HILL. Not at all. It was never under martial law.

Mr. PEFFER. It was the same thing. I saw the soldiers there when I passed through.

Mr. HILL. A few people connected with the railroads, laboring men, mistaking their rights, undertook to keep possession of some of the railroad property in the city of Buffalo, egged on, possibly, by men who informed them that they had a right, when they struck, to keep peaceable possession of the property of the railroads. They were honest men, but they mistook their rights. For the preservation of the peace, the State military was called out, and in a few days peace reigned again. That is not the turmoil, that is not the discord, that is not the chaos, that is not the miserable contention which has disgraced the administration of the Populist governors of Colorado and Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. The attack upon Kansas is altogether gratuitous and unnecessary.

Mr. HILL. I am not attacking Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. If the gentleman says so, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HILL. I was simply speaking of the public record there of men well known. Need I repeat what I read that the distinguished Senator from Colorado said about the administration of the Populist governor of Colorado? No doubt every word is true. I am not attacking your people. You have a brave and generous and honest people. I am attacking simply some of the things that have taken place which exemplify good, honest, square government under Populist administration.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] said that he had witnessed a terrible spectacle. The Government of the United States, through the District of Columbia officials, had seized a lot of poor, friendless devils, as he called them, and arrested them because of the violation of the police laws of the District of Columbia. The Senator, you will recollect, ventured to defend those men and to raise the constitutional question that they had a right to come here in a body and had a right to march almost into this Capitol in a body to make known their grievances. He went before the police court of this District, and there he made his constitutional argument in their behalf. The court very promptly overruled the points, and he has not had very much confidence in the courts ever since.

He is afraid that in some way or other, because I made the harmless suggestion, that possibly the Supreme Court of the United States, as constituted now, might not take the same view of a great, important, underlying principle of the Government which it took twenty or thirty years ago, therefore somebody was going to pack the Supreme Court. My friend need not fear for that court. The court will take care of its own dignity; it will take care of its own integrity; it will expound the laws of this country according to its best judgment, and it ought not to be influenced by anything that he says or that I say upon any question about which lawyers and jurists may disagree.

The other day my friend asked me to define the principles of the Populist party. I am not able to define them any better than I did. One of the chief exemplars of that party was here only a short time ago in the person of Gen. Coxey, who is now, if I am informed rightly, the Populist candidate for Congress in a district in Ohio. Gen. Coxey came here, and he gathered people around him according to the Scriptures, "Every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, gathered themselves unto him." Mr. President, I assume that the men who until a very short time ago were gathered within sight of the Dome of this Capitol were here lured on by some one, I do not know whom. They came here, they said, to demand their rights. No one was denying them their rights. They seem to have a pretty good time of it. I want to read what a morning paper says:

COXEYITES AT CONVENTION HALL.

An elaborate programme, comprising athletics, minstrelsy, and comedies, has been issued for an entertainment to be given Saturday evening, June 30, at Convention Hall. The talent for making up the combination is all to be drawn from the Coxey, Galvin, and other industrial armies, the commonwealers having determined to interest the public with new features and in a new role. Dick Arlington, Tom Hagen, George Marcy, Robert McPherson, Ed Smith, and Tom Green are billed as comedians, while Gen. Galvin will appear as a vocalist. A farce, entitled "Keep off the Grass," is among the attractions. The proceeds of the entertainment will be used to aid the unemployed to leave Washington and travel as missionaries. J. D. Gill is business manager.

That is in this morning's paper, and I have no doubt our Populist friends will have reserved seats in boxes. They ought at least to distribute a few tickets throughout the Senate Chamber that we may see how these hard-working (!) men are being oppressed by this miserable Government of ours.

The gentleman also attacked the millionaires of New York. He spent so much time in reading a list of them that he evidently labors under the impression that nearly everybody in New York is a millionaire.

I desire to inform him that there are a few of us who are not. I am one of those who started in this world without anything, and I have held my own ever since. Our people are not millionaires. We have rich men; we have poor men; we have men in moderate circumstances. We have, thank God, few cranks among our people. They are a law-abiding people as a rule.

They want good government. They stand up for their public men, usually; they do not always and constantly denounce them.

I have not one word to say in apology for millionaires generally. They must be permitted to exist. I had some doubts about it before, but yesterday my friend from Nebraska kindly consented that they might live. He consented that they might enjoy all their property, with this statement, no matter whether they obtained it honestly or dishonestly. I thank him for that concession. They will now feel relieved when they hear that he has consented to let them live and enjoy their own gains.

He spoke of some of those millionaires, and then he started out and announced the broad doctrine that no man has a right to sit in his office in New York—he limited it to New York; he might sit in his office in Nebraska, of course, or Kansas, but he has no right to sit in his office in New York—and be permitted to make the enormous sum of $1,000,000 a year. It is not possible, he says, that they could earn these moneys. I point him to the great inventor, Thomas A. Edison, who sat in his laboratory and by his genius and brains made himself a fortune, and made a name for his country in the matter of electricity.

That man, as great an inventor as ever lived on the face of the globe, a modest citizen, made his millions of dollars, which he has honestly, by the result of his genius and brains; and I should be the last one—and I hope citizens generally would be the last ones—to take a single penny from his pocket. You will recollect the great Singer, who invented the Singer sewing machine in his place in New York. He left a fortune of millions.

Sir, these fortunes are not all made simply by issuing stock. They are made by men of genius, and brains, and capacity, and prudence; made by indomitable energy. They are entitled to them under the laws of their land, and they are asking for no particular exemptions. They are asking simply that they shall have uniform laws and that you shall pass them upon correct principles, and that is all.

Mr. President, I concede that the Populist party is growing somewhat now in these peculiar and distressing times. I think the adoption of this income tax is a mistake. I think we are pandering to Populistic doctrines that are not sound. We shall have some desertions. The ranks of the Populists undoubtedly will be filled up for a year or so by those who are discontented in our own party, those disconted through the distribution of patronage, discontented from any other cause. I read in the morning paper this morning the following statement, and I commend it because it shows that the Populist party is to have some recruits, and I congratulate the gentlemen upon them.

J. V. Lewis, ex-chairman of the Democratic county committee, caused a political sensation this morning by indorsing Gen. Coxey's candidacy for Congress in this district. He says the Democrats generally will support Coxey, and that the regular Democratic convention will indorse him.

Mr. President, I am sorry for my party if that is true. I think that they do injustice to themselves and their record thus to indorse this man who came upon his silly and fruitless mission to the capital for notoriety's sake, pretending that he wanted to do something for the relief of labor, in the name of labor, and brought with him a nondescript crowd, and now he goes home to Ohio and raises the standard of the Populist party. I am sorry to see that the Democrats of that district seem to be rallying to his support.

Mr. President, that course is not true Democracy. We have fallen upon evil times if that is so. For one, I decline to yield to the storm, because I concede there is something of a storm at this time. I decline to do it. Let the other candidate against Coxey be elected if he is an honorable, upright, square man, no matter what his principles may be upon the subject of the tariff or the finances. I do not think and I do not believe that Coxey will be elected.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator is referring to the fact that Democrats are coming to the Populist party. He knows, I suppose, that in addition to that there are Republicans coming to the Populist party, and I want to give the Senator a reason for it. It may have escaped his attention. A few years ago his party adopted a certain resolution which I want to read and call the Senator's attention to it. It is the opinion of the Democratic party of its old-time enemy, the Republican party. I wish to state what the Democratic opinion was, and I suppose still is, of the Republican party, unless it has been changed by the eloquence of the Senator this morning. I read from the Democratic platform of 1884:

The Republican party, so far as principle is concerned, is a reminiscence. In practice it is an organization for enriching those who control its machinery. The frauds and jobbery which have been brought to light in every department of the Government are sufficient to have called for reform within the Republican party; yet those in authority, made reckless by the long possession of power, have succumbed to its corrupting influence, and have placed in nomination a ticket against which the independent portion of the party are in open revolt. Therefore a change is demanded.

It may be, Mr. President, that the change has come, and that may account for the recent tenderness of the Senator from New York for the present condition and future prospects of the Republican party.

Such a change was alike necessary in 1876, but the will of the people was then defeated by a fraud which can never be forgotten nor condoned. Again, in 1880, the change demanded by the people was defeated by the lavish use of money contributed by unscrupulous contractors and shameless jobbers who had bargained for unlawful profits or high office. The Republican party, during its legal, its stolen, and its bought tenures of power, has steadily decayed in moral character and political capacity. Its platform promises are now a list of its past failures.

It demands the restoration of our Navy—it has squandered hundreds of millions to create a navy that does not exist. It calls upon Congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed; it imposed and has continued those burdens. It professes a policy of reserving the public lands for small holdings by actual settlers—it has given away the people's heritage till now a few railroads and nonresident aliens, individual and corporate, possess a larger area than that of all our farms between the two seas.

I have the Republican opinion of the Democratic party, which is about as complimentary as that.

Mr. TELLER. What platform is the Senator reading?

Mr. PEFFER. The Democratic platform of 1884, adopted at Chicago.

Mr. TELLER. The national platform?

Mr. PEFFER. It is in their national platform. If the Senator from New York will bear with me a moment longer I will find the Republican platform. Then, in the next paragraph, the Democratic national platform proceeds:

The Democracy pledges itself to purify the Administration from corruption, to restore economy, to revive respect for law, and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the nation to its creditors and pensioners.

Here is what the Republican people have to say of their neighbors, the Democrats. It is in their national platform of 1880, paragraph 8:

8. We charge upon the Democratic party the habitual sacrifice of patriotism and justice to a supreme and insatiable lust for office and patronage; that to obtain possession of the National Government and control of the place, they have obstructed all efforts to promote the purity and to conserve the freedom of the suffrage, and have devised fraudulent ballots, and invented fraudulent certification of returns; have labored to unseat lawfully elected members of Congress to secure at all hazards the vote of a majority of States in the House of Representatives; have endeavored to occupy by force and fraud the places of trust given to others by the people of Maine, rescued by the courage and action of Maine's patriotic sons; have, by methods vicious in principle and tyrannical in practice, attached partisan legislation to appropriation bills upon whose passage the very movement of the Government depended; have crushed the rights of the individual; have advocated the principles and sought the favor of the rebellion against the nation, and have endeavored to obliterate the sacred memories and to overcome its inestimably valuable results of nationality, personal freedom, and individual equality.

If there is anything harder, uglier, dirtier, and meaner than that in the Populist preamble to the Populist platform I am entirely willing the Senator from New York shall read it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, unquestionably the political parties in their platforms have exaggerated the evils that pertain to each other. Platforms in such matters always have to be accepted in a sort of Pickwickian sense. I am not here to defend the shortcomings of the Republican party.

I disagree with many of the things which pertain to its history, but on the general question of the honesty and sincerity of its public men, and so far as regards the question of corruption and corrupt legislation, I say that its open and their actions will compare favorably (and so will the Democratic public men) with those in the early days of our Republic. I am not called upon to defend the extravagant language of every platform adopted in the heat of political campaigns; and I desire to say right here that for each and every one of the members of the Populist party in the Senate I have the greatest respect.

I do not, of course, like their principles; I do not like some of those who are their followers; I do not like the candidate who has been nominated in Ohio, who is, it seems, according to the dispatch, to be adopted by the Democrats.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say upon the general features of this bill. When the amendments shall be offered I shall take a few moments of time in explaining those amendments, but I will not now further trespass upon the indulgence of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am aware that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is exceedingly anxious to reach the final vote on this remarkable and extraordinary bill. I am also aware of the fact that the cool breezes and ozone from the mountains of the Old Granite State are more alluring than the torridity of this legislative furnace; but notwithstanding these facts I am constrained to occupy a few additional minutes in discussing the income-tax feature of the proposed legislation.

On the 16th day of January last I made an analysis of the income tax features of this bill. That was while the measure was under consideration in the other branch of Congress. I then said that the bill was "unjust, iniquitous, inquisitorial, offensive, and sectional," and, Mr. President, I stand to-day on that declaration made five months ago. In that discussion I said that it appears that the grand total collected during the eleven years of the income tax law was $347,220,887.86. Of this amount the sixteen Southern States, including the border States of Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, and West Virginia, paid $36,624,819.69, while the Northern States and Territories paid $296,706,524.28, the unaccounted balance (about $13,000,000) having been paid by United States officers and employés.

While the entire South paid $36,624,819.69, the eleven distinctively Southern States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia, paid only $10,651,061.30, or about 3 per cent of the entire amount.

The Northern States paid over eight times as much as the South, and nearly thirty times as much as the eleven distinctively Southern States.

The six New England States paid $61,584,093.29, or 70 per cent more than the entire South, and six times as much as the eleven distinctively Southern States.

Massachusetts paid $41,162,496.35, being four millions and a half more than the entire South. Pennsylvania paid $47,748,326.82, being eleven millions more than the South, while New York paid $104,499,939.45, neary one-third of the entire tax, and almost three times as much as the entire South.

That the tax was an unpopular one, and exceedingly difficult of collection, is shown by the fact that in 1873, the last year the law was in force, Pennsylvania paid 59 per cent as much as in 1872, New Hampshire 55 per cent, Massachusetts 24 per cent, Virginia 23 per cent, Louisiana 8 per cent, and Tennessee and Rhode Island only 6 per cent.

That is the record, and if the Democratic majority persists in foisting upon the country another income-tax law they will be held to a strict accountability by the people.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], whose speech of yesterday has been reviewed this morning at great length and with much ability by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], made some statements to which I desire to call attention. He inquired very dramatically what became of the surplus of $100,000,000 left by Mr. Cleveland to Mr. Harrison when Mr. Harrison assumed the reins of Government in March, 1889, strongly intimating that it had been squandered. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] very properly and promptly called the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that during the Administration of Mr. Harrison $259,000,000 of bonds of the Government were canceled, and the public debt was reduced that amount.

The Senator from Nebraska replied that $25,000,000 of the amount had been paid in premiums on those bonds. I suppose that is true; but admitting it to be true, was it not good financiering for the Harrison Administration to call in those bonds and cancel them, paying out money that was lying idle in the Treasury, thus greatly reducing the interest obligations of the Government? It seems to me that there is no point worthy of serious consideration in the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska.

I want to declare with as much emphasis as I can command that in the entire history of this Government there never has been a financial operation that reflected greater credit upon an Administration than the cancellation of those bonds during the four years' term of Mr. Harrison as President. Every prudent business man reduces his debts as rapidly as he can, and President Harrison was acting the part of prudence and of good business sense when he did the very thing that prudent business men do in this country.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, I will yield for a question.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from New Hampshire regard it as good business policy to pay out surplus money in the Treasury in premiums upon bonds when that money is needed to pay current expenses and when we have to bond the Government again to get money for current expenses?

Mr. GALLINGER. The difficulty with the Senator from Nebraska is that he rarely ever fairly states a proposition. That money was not needed at that time to pay current expenses of the Government. The Senator from Nebraska knows that fact and every other citizen of the United States knows it.

Mr. President, we have heard a great deal in this discussion from our Populist friends in regard to the accumulation of wealth and the necessity for distributing the wealth of the country. I should like to ask the question, if the wealth of this country were equally distributed to-day how could we possibly keep it distributed? A loafer in my town not many months ago said to me that he was in favor of an equal distribution of the wealth of the country, and he added very significantly, "I think that when one fellow spends his share it ought to be distributed again." That seems to be the Populist doctrine, and it certainly is the only way in which the wealth of the country could be kept equally distributed.

It is an absurdity for any Senator or any citizen of the United States to contend that the accumulation of wealth in the hands of a comparatively few men in this or any other country can be prevented by acts of legislation or otherwise, and it is equally absurd and untruthful to claim that the tariff laws of the Republican party have brought about the condition against which Populist Senators are constantly inveighing. If they will take the trouble to look up the facts they will find that a large majority of the rich men of the United States have gained their wealth in industries which are not in the least protected by Federal legislation.

The Senator from Nebraska severely criticised the Administration of Mr. Harrison, especially as regards its fiscal policy. Mr. President, I am not here as a defender of the last Republican President of the United States; I have no especial reason for championing him, but I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska and Senators on both sides of the Chamber to the remarkable message Mr. Harrison sent to the two Houses of Congress when he was about to relinquish the reins of Government and pass the scepter of power back into the hands of the great Democratic party. That message is full of instructive lessons to the American people.

I shall not occupy the time of the Senate in calling attention to more than one or two paragraphs of that message. One significant fact pointed out is that in 1880 the number of employés in manufacturing establishments in the United States was 1,301,388, while in 1890 it had increased to 2,251,134, or an increase of 78 per cent in ten years. The wages paid in 1880 to these employés were $501,955,778, while in 1890 the wages were $1,221,170,454, or an increase of 148 per cent. During that decade, one of the most remarkable decades of this most remarkable country, the number of employés in manufacturing establishments increased 78 per cent, while the increase in the wages of those employed was 148 per cent. If the Senator from Nebraska can point to a period in the entire history of this country when the laboring men, for whom he constantly appeals, fared better than they did from 1880 to 1890, I should like to have my attention called to that period in our history.

Certain Senators talk about the rapid increase of wealth in the Eastern States and intimate that it has been obtained dishonestly. I do not believe that the record will bear out the statement that the increase in the Eastern States is greater than in other parts of the country. Indeed, from information I have obtained from the Eleventh Census I am led to the irresistible conclusion that wealth has been increasing more rapidly in the West and in the South for the past few years than in the East. We are older States and older communities in the East. We have had a longer time to accumulate a competence; but during the ten years, from 1880 to 1890, I say the records bear out the statement I make to-day, that the per capita of wealth has been increasing more rapidly in the great agricultural States of the West and in the South than in the manufacturing States of New York, Pennsylvania, and New England.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], a day or two ago, not for the first time in this debate, made the charge that the money-lenders of the East had been exacting exorbitant rates of interest from the agricultural people of the Western States. Why, Mr. President, if the people of Kansas could have borrowed money nearer home than New England I apprehend that they would not have asked our people to have loaned it to them. There has been no compulsion in the matter that I am aware of. The laws of Kansas permit money to be borrowed at a rate not greater than 10 per cent, and the people of Kansas have doubtless borrowed their money where they could borrow it upon the best terms. They came to New England. They have taken from our State millions of dollars; and I stand here to say (and I say it not because I make any attack upon the people of Kansas or upon the people of any other of the Western agricultural States, but simply because the truth of history demands that it shall be said) that millions of dollars of New England capital invested in the West have been absolutely lost to our people during the last three or four years.

Millions of dollars have gone out of my little State never to return. A few months ago a great loan agency in Concord, that has sent millions of dollars to those States, secured upon farm mortgages, suspended operations, and the men who loaned their money are now looking for a percentage upon the investment that they made.

Savings banks in New Hampshire have recently closed their doors because they could not collect either the interest or the principal upon the investments they had made in the great West.

Let me call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to a telegram just received from the chairman of the New Hampshire board of bank commissioners, in response to an inquiry from me:

CONCORD, N. H., June 23, 1894.

Lost to New Hampshire through Western investments approximately ten millions, including individuals and banks. People of Nashua alone have lost over a million, and Keene an equal amount. Half our savings-bank investments are in Western loans, stocks, and bonds.

JAMES O. LYFORD,
Chairman Bank Commissioners.

So it seems that New Hampshire has recently lost ten millions in the West, and that two cities—one of 20,000 inhabitants, and the other of about 8,000—have recently lost $2,000,000 in Western investments. In the face of such facts, Senators talk about the greed and extortion of Eastern capitalists, and the terrible wrongs they inflict upon the people of the West in the matter of interest.

Mr. President, there are millions of dollars of Western securities to-day in the savings banks of New Hampshire that the Senator from Kansas can have at a very large depreciation if he will take them off the hands of our people who have loaned good money and taken those securities in return.

I suppose the Senator from Kansas has been in the town of Wichita in his State—that suburban village that grew up there like a mushroom, and upon which the people of New England foolishly loaned their money. He will find the houses occupied by bats. He will find there scarcely a human being, where a year or so ago there were thousands of men and women.

Citizens of New Hampshire have their money planted in Wichita and many other such places in the West. It is planted there never to return to them, and when the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Nebraska attack the people of the East because they have loaned their money at what they are pleased to call exorbitant rates of interest, they should take into account, and not forget to state the fact, that Eastern people have met with losses in the West almost incalculable in amount.

And what is true of the great States of the West is equally true of the South. New Hampshire has sent millions into the South during the last ten years, and it is there, Mr. President, with a very small prospect of any considerable amount of it ever returning to our people. New England capital has done its full share toward building up the waste places of the great West and the sunny South, but I submit that it is a poor return to be constantly taunted and charged with dishonesty. To-day it is much more difficult for Kansas to get money in New England than it was five years ago, and if these attacks continue the time may come when it will be impossible to do so on any terms that she may offer.

We have loaned our money abroad because we could not use it all at home. We have taken such interest as we could get for it, and we have tried to deal fairly with the people with whom we have traded. The Senator from Kansas says the West has built up and made New England what she is. I do not know exactly what he means by that, but New England has certainly reciprocated in full measure, and I can see no good results that can possibly be reached by attacks of this kind, or by throwing stones at either East or the West so far as their business transactions are concerned.

The savings banks in my State have been in the practice of loaning money to the great West in large amounts. Of the $78,000,000 of deposits, probably one half of it has been loaned upon real estate outside of our borders. Those banks have been recently compelled to reduce the rate of interest to their depositors from 4 per cent to 3½ per cent, and in the near future they will be compelled to reduce it to 3 per cent. Their losses have been so enormous as to compel them to reduce the rate of interest, with a certainty that the depositors will soon have to content themselves with the low rate of 3 per cent.

In view of these facts I think I can stand here to-day and truthfully say that our people have not grown rich at the expense of the West; that they have not been extortionate; that they have not practiced usury, and that they have not wronged the people of the West or the South, to whom their money has flown in an abundant stream these many years.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS] yesterday, in his maiden speech in this body, in exuberant and lurid language closed his appeal for an income tax by electing a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress in the year 1896. I think it is proper that I should use an expression which perhaps might be denominated slang, and say to the junior Senator from North Carolina that it strikes me he is a "little previous" in his political prophecies. The weather is rather warm for that kind of business. The people will take care of the election of 1896 a little later on; and I suggest to the Senator that the political horizon portends a storm for the Democratic party in this country.

We have in New Hampshire a very remarkable editor. Until a few years ago he edited a Democratic daily newspaper with great ability. His editorials were read by everybody. He defended the Democratic party in season and out of season. But free trade and Clevelandism compelled him to leave that organization and join the Republican party, and his paper is now an advocate of the principles of the Rebublican party. A few days ago I found an editorial item in his paper which I commend to the Senator from North Carolina, as follows:

A western astronomer says that he has examined that spot on the sun and finds it to be a storm 86,000 miles long by about 30,000 wide, and having a twisting motion.

Then this former Democratic editor adds:

Thas is about the size of the storm which will overtake the Democratic party next November.

[Laughter.]

If I am not mistaken the tail, at least, of that storm threatens to strike the good old State of North Carolina, and I warn the junior Senator from that State to lose no time in building a political cyclone cellar, into which he can retreat from the fury of the elements in the campaign of 1896.

Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Missouri has indicated his purpose to offer amendments to the bill designed to do justice to fraternal orders, savings banks, and corporations generally. The original bill dealt very harshly and unjustly with corporations. I am not sure that the proposed amendments cover the ground completely. On that point I propose to suggest five objections to the original draft, and I hope the amendments will be made to cover, if they do not already cover, the propositions I submit.

In this connection I desire to say that the denunciations of corporations which we are in the habit of listening to in this Chamber do not commend themselves to me. I am under no obligations to corporations in my State or elsewhere, but I want to say to the Populist Senators and to some Democratic Senators that if they will examine the record of this country they will find that the great corporations, while they doubtless have many things to answer for to the American people, have contributed a great deal to the glory, the welfare, the progress, and the prosperity of this great country of ours. Let us criticise their shortcomings, but not blindly or unjustly denounce them, or make them the victim of unfair legislative action.

The criticisms to which I desire to call the attention of the Finance Committee, in so far as the original draft of the bill relates to corporations, are as follows:

First. It is unjust in that when there are no net profits the proposed law construes and defines current interest on bonds and certificates of indebtedness of any kind to be net profits, and subjects the same to the 2 per cent tax to the injury of individual shareholders or bondholders, while similar interest payments are deducted as part of the necessary expenses of business in computing the net profits subject to the tax to be paid by all other individuals.

Second. It is unjust in that when there are net profits all the individual shareholders are subjected to a deduction of 2 per cent on the aggregate of such net profits before a dividend can be paid, and this without regard to the question whether the individual shareholder has an annual income approaching the amount exempted to all other individuals.

Third. It is unjust in that by declaring interest to the extent earned to be net profits and subject to tax. The proposed law would make the insolvent corporations of the country now in the hands of receivers and operated by the courts liable for an income tax on net profits to the extent that interest is earned, and if enough is earned to pay full interest on the first mortgage then this so-called tax on net earnings would be borne entirely by the holders of the junior securities upon which interest might otherwise have been paid.

Fourth. If a corporation is solvent—earning its operating expenses, rentals, and interest, and nothing more—the proposed law, by construing interest as net profits and requiring the payment of 2 per cent thereon by the corporation, would necessarily render that corporation insolvent.

Fifth. Besides the evident and absolute injustice of these discriminations against individuals who have already associated their capital in industrial or other business enterprises, the proposed law must, if enacted, become a powerful deterrent from all further investments in associations of capital by which so great industrial progress has been made, and the present abundance and cheapness of products secured.

As I said, I hope that the proposed amendments to be offered by the Senator from Missouri cover all the objections which I have raised to that feature of the bill, but if they do not I commend to the Finance Committee the criticisms I have offered, in the hope and belief that they will so amend the bill that no injustice to the corporations of the country will be done.

Mr. President, a few moments ago I referred to the last message of President Harrison, when he was about to retire to the quiet of his home and give up the cares and responsibilities of office to his successor. Now, I wish in a single sentence to give his concluding suggestion to the American people in that great message. He said:

> And this brief exhibit of the growth and prosperity of the country will give us a level from which to note the increase or decadence that new legislative policies may bring to us. There is no reason why the national influence, power, and prosperity should not observe the same rates of increase that have characterized the past thirty years. We carry the great impulse and increase of these years into the future. There is no reason why in many lines of production we should not surpass all other nations, as we have already done in some. There are no near frontiers to our possible development. Retrogression would be a crime.

Mr. President, for one I stand here ready by voice and vote to give my support to all laws which tend to the upbuilding, the happiness, and the progress of this great country, but I am not willing to be a partner to the enactment into law of any legislative schemes of spoliation or which tend to discriminate against the people of one section of the country and in favor of those of another section. For that reason I am opposed to the income, tax feature of the proposed law; for that reason I am opposed to the measure itself. I hope that before the final vote is taken still further modifications may be made in the direction of greater justice and greater equity to all classes of our people and to all sections of our common country, so that if the proposed law shall become an accomplished fact, which Heaven forbid, it at least may be shorn of some of its most objectionable features.

In saying this I have said all I care to say. Under existing conditions I have no disposition to prolong the discussion. If all the Senators on this side of the Chamber felt as I feel, the pending bill never would be enacted into law, unless the Democractic majority compelled a vote by some extraordinary means. But many of my political associates do not so feel. The vote is to be taken. I shall esteem it a great privilege to be permitted to cast a negative vote on the income-tax proposition, as well as upon the final propoposition to enact the measure into law. The fact is, this bill ought not to be enacted into law. It is a wicked and sectional measure.

It strikes down the interests of the people whom I am endeavoring to represent, and it will bring greater disasters to the American people than are upon them to-day. For many long years, amid trial and turbulence, sorrow and suffering, our people will struggle to escape from the influence and the injury that this legislation will necessarily impose upon them. I have confidence, however, that the good sense and the patriotism of the American people will in due time right this wrong, and that before many years elapse we will again have a tariff law on the statute book of this nation which will bring prosperity, peace, and happiness to the people of all sections of our common country, and which will in due time repair the disasters that will necessarily result from this legislation.

Believing this, it is the duty of all to make the best of existing conditions, and to trust the future to heal the wounds that Democratic incompetency and economic false theories have brought upon our land. We have had similar trials in the years that have gone, and in due time the people have always applied the remedy. They will do so again, and under the benign influence of the doctrine of protection our country will achieve greater triumphs and make greater progress than at any time in the history of the past. For that "good time coming" we will patiently wait, with confidence in our principles and reliance upon an awakened and enlightened popular will.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to give notice of an amendment, if the Secretary will take it down. In section 55 of the print which I have here, the separate print, in the 8th line, on page 3, after the words "all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance," I wish to insert the words "except from lineal ancestors or descendants, or between husband and wife."

The bill as now proposed includes in the income to be taxed the value of all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance, and my amendment excludes gifts or inheritances from a lineal ancestor or a lineal descendant, and also gifts from husband to wife or from wife to husband, which can hardly be called a transfer of property. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri to the amendment. I hope they will consider it before that section is reached, and that it will meet their general acceptance. I ask that the amendment may be printed.

Mr. ALLEN obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that by one of the amendments proposed yesterday relating to the corporation tax, the income of the corporation is to be made up by deducting, among other things, interest paid on bonds and losses. That relieves to a certain extent corporations whose indebtedness is a bonded indebtedness, but in a great many States joint stock corporations have no bonds. Their indebtedness would consist of the mortgage indebtedness; the interest which they pay would be upon mortgage indebtedness and not upon bonds, and perhaps upon a line of discounts at the banks. I wish to suggest whether all the money which is paid by way of interest should not be deducted. I have not prepared any specific amendment. I simply wish to call attention to the point at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the remarks of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which have just been concluded, ought not to be passed over in silence either by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] or myself. The Senator from New Hampshire takes me to task somewhat for what I said yesterday regarding the closing days of the Harrison Administration. I do not propose to offer any unnecessary criticism upon that Administration. It has passed into history. The facts connected with it are well known by the people of this country.

Its history can be found in the financial and other reports which were made by officers of the Government during its existence. But I do call attention to and reaffirm what I said yesterday, that it was the poorest policy imaginable for that or any other Administration to take the surplus money which was in the Treasury of the United States, and which was liable to be called for at any time, to pay the current expenses of the Government, and go into the bond market of the nation and become a bidder upon its own bonds, which were of short limitation and would be paid off in the ordinary course of business.

That, too, is more obvious when we consider that it was made apparent to those who at that time were in charge of the financial affairs of the nation that the time would shortly come when this Government would either be required to borrow money to discharge the current expenses or be compelled to issue bonds and place them upon the market, and borrow money for that purpose. I do not say that there was any method in this procedure; that there was any peculiar design upon the part of Mr. Harrison or his Administration in pursuing that course; but I do say that if it had been the purpose of that Administration to cause the issuance of more bonds, to rest as a blight and a curse upon the industries of this country, a more successful way of bringing about that state of affairs than was pursued could not have been chosen.

There was a surplus in the Treasury of the United States. It was known or must have been known that within a few months or a year or so that money would be needed to discharge the current expenses of the Government. Yet in the face of that fact one-quarter of the great surplus, or $100,000,000, was absolutely wasted in being expended for premiums upon bonds. Senators may say it was good financial policy to do so. I do not believe it, regardless of who may say it. I do not believe the people of this country, who pay the expenses of this Government, believe, or can ever be induced to believe, that it was good financial policy.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. From what is now stated by the Senator from Nebraska I infer that he approves the restoration of the sums then used to pay the principal of the public debt by Secretary Carlisle in reissuing substantially the bonds taken up by the Harrison Administration?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not approve the course of Secretary Carlisle at all in that respect. I took occasion to say in this Chamber and to introduce a resolution to the effect that the action of Secretary Carlisle in issuing interest-bearing obligations of this Government was absolutely void.

I say more than that, that I can go into any honest court of the United States of America and demonstrate the fact that it was void. I can not go into a court which is controlled by political machinery, a political court and do it, but I can go where there is an honest administration of the statutes of this nation and demonstrate it against any man alive, because the statute under which these bonds were issued in February, the authority by which they were pretended to be issued, was repealed, and it was repealed years before these bonds were issued by the present Administration. It was not only repealed, but the statute had become exhausted and was a dead letter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it disturb the Senator from Nebraska if I should propound a very simple question to him?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand the Senator from Nebraska to be now, as he has been during the present session of Congress, opposed to the issuance of bonds by the National Government. Is that correct?

Mr. ALLEN. I am, sir; that is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. If President Harrison had not cancelled $259,000,000 of bonds, what would be the condition of the Treasury at the present time so far as bonds are concerned? Would there not be more bonds in circulation than there are now? Hence, what greater trouble or danger is to come to the Government by the issuance of bonds at the present time than if the old bonds had remained in circulation among the people?

Mr. ALLEN. If President Harrison had followed the teachings of the Constitution of this country and had divorced himself and his Administration from the ruling power of Wall street; if he had coined the silver bullion in the Treasury and caused it to be issued and put out among the people of this country, there never would have been a time during the history of his Administration when there would have been any occasion for the issuance of bonds.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand; but the Senator does not answer my question. If those bonds had not been cancelled there would have been $259,000,000 more of bonds in circulation to-day or thereabouts than there are at the present time. Would that have distressed the Senator from Nebraska as much as the issuance of $50,000,000 of bonds did a few months ago?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not at all concede that any such state of affairs as is mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire could have existed. There was no occasion whatever for taking that money and going into the bond market and purchasing the bonds of this Government at a premium of 22, 23, 24, or 25 per cent, and in some instances more than that. It was a sheer waste of the money of the Government. If that money had been held until the proper time, and if the Harrison Administration had divorced itself from Wall street and had coined the silver bullion in the Treasury and lived up in good faith to the requirements of the Sherman act, there never would have been a moment in the history of that Administration when there would have been the slightest necessity for the issuance of bonds. But if you take the position of the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. ALLEN. I must decline to yield any further. If you take the position of the Senator from New Hampshire and say gold is the standard, and that all other forms of money must conform to the gold standard, then I can readily see that the time might have come in the history of that Administration when there would have been an occasion for the issuance of additional bonds. But if there had been good faith—that is, if the Harrison Administration had lived up to the requirements of our form of Government, and had administered the Government in the interests of all the people and not a portion of the people—the time never would have come in the history of the Administration when there would have been the slightest occasion for increasing the bonded debt of the nation.

The Senator from New Hampshire says that the people of his State have lost in the States of Nebraska and Kansas—and he singled out those two States—a great many million dollars which they had invested there. If the State of New Hampshire has lost a dollar in the State of Nebraska it is news to me. I have never heard of it yet, and I think I know something about the State of Nebraska and its growth, and something about its people and their disposition and their capability for paying their debts. If the State of New Hampshire has ever lost a dollar in the State of Nebraska it has not been in consequence of any dishonesty upon the part of the people of Nebraska. It has not been because the people of the State of Nebraska are not a law-abiding and law-observing, honest, high-minded people. If it has occurred it has been through the tricks and dishonesty of their own agents whom they employed to loan their money.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Senator from Nebraska will yield to me just here to correct a misapprehension on his part. I did not say that we had lost anything in the State of Nebraska, as the RECORD will show to-morrow morning, but I did say in Kansas and other great agricultural States of the West, and I I did not enumerate the other States. I could have done so if I chose, and I would not mention Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to repeat that there is no section of this country where the people are more rigidly honest in observing their obligation than in the State of Nebraska. They are a high-minded class of people, an intelligent class, and whatever may be within their power in the way of discharging their debts will be executed to the full measure. Our industries are to-day paralyzed to some extent.

They are paralyzed in consequence of the pernicious policy which has been pursued in this country for the last quarter of a century of contracting the volume of money. Their industries will be impaired to some extent in the future so long as this policy is pursued. But as far as they have any power to discharge their obligations, the people of Nebraska discharge them cheerfully, and are discharging them to-day, and in the course of events they will be able to pay to New Hampshire and the East every dollar which may be due them.

Mr. President, there is no occasion for making charges of this kind. There is not the slightest occasion for it. There is as high a standard of morality and honesty existing in the States of Nebraska and Kansas as there is in Massachusetts or New Hampshire; there is as high an order of intelligence, as high an order of civilization, and insinuations of this kind come with poor grace from that section of the country, which has been made rich in the last century by draining the fields of the West and South.

The junior Senator from New Hampshire this morning repeats the stale remark which has been denied in this Chamber twenty times, that the Populist party is arrayed against corporations. I am at a loss to understand the reason why such remarks should be reiterated in this Chamber so frequently when they have been so frequently denied. There is not a word in the Populist platform, which was promulgated in July, 1892, at Omaha, there is not a word in any State Populist platform in this Union which looks to undue bitterness upon the part of the Populist party against corporations of any character. The statement is untrue.

There is no bitterness. There is no unnecessary hostility upon the part of that party to any corporation exercising legitimate corporate functions. The members of that party desire to treat legitimate corporations as they would individuals exercising a legitimate business function. But when corporations undertake to control the entire policy of the States and the nation, when they undertake to rob the producers of the country through overcapitalization and methods of that kind, then the Populist party rises up and protests against such conduct and calls upon the corporations and those in charge of them to cease conduct of that kind. That is not undue hostility; it is not undue hostility to the exercise of legitimate corporate powers. It is a hostility to the abuse of this power by corporations which endangers the rights of the people and the permanency of the Government itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 24, page 170, after the words "United States," strike out "and not citizens thereof;" so as to read:

> And a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income from all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 54, after the word "accept," in line 25, page 170, to insert "by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and," so as to read:

> And the tax herein provided for shall be assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Have all the amendments to section 54 which have been presented by the committee been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the committee amendments have been disposed of, the Chair is advised.

Mr. HILL. And nothing else?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing else. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. What became of the amendment proposed in line 20, reducing the exemption from $4,000 to $3,000?

Mr. VEST. That amendment is not offered. I will state frankly that when I offered that amendment yesterday I did it under a misapprehension in regard to the views of one of my colleagues upon the committee. I was under the impression that he had agreed to change "four" to "three" before "thousand."

I wish to say, now, that our action yesterday was not induced by any argument made in the Senate, because I did not hear the Senator from New York, as I was called out on committee work; nor did I read his speech. One of my colleagues came to me this morning and said that we misunderstood him, and therefore that amendment is not offered. I take the full responsibility of withdrawing it. It is my fault.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HILL. I will offer an amendment. In section 54, line 20, page 170, before "thousand," I move to strike out "four" and insert "one."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 20, page 170, before the word "thousand" strike out "four" and insert "one;" so as to read:

A tax of 2 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. CAMERON. I will announce for the day that I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent.

Mr. RANSOM. Has the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I do not see the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] in the Chamber. I beg leave to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Carey,	Higgins,	Manderson,	Quay,
Chandler,	Hill,	Peffer,	Washburn.
Davis,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Frye,	Irby,	Platt,

NAYS—42.

Allen,	George,	McPherson,	Roach,
Bate,	Gorman,	Martin,	Smith,
Berry,	Gray,	Mills,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Turpie,
Caffery,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Call,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,	White.
Dubois,	Kyle,	Power,
Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—25.

Allison,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Squire,
Blanchard,	Dixon,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gibson,	Patton,	Wilson,
Butler,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Camden,	Hale,	Ransom,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,
Cullom,	McLaurin,	Shoup,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I move a further amendment. In section 54, line 20, page 170, I move to strike out "four" and insert "two."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, before the word "thousand," strike out "four" and insert "two;" so as to read:

A tax of 2 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $2,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], and withhold my vote.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire again to announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. DIXON. As I before announced, I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I understand that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is absent without a pair. I therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Power,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Quay,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Patton,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hill,	Peffer,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Dubois,	Irby,	Platt

NAYS—38.

Allen,	George,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bate,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Smith,
Berry,	Gorman,	Martin,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mills,	Vest,
Caffery,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Call,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Palmer,	White.
Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—21.

Blanchard,	Davis,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Butler,	Hale,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Ransom,
Cameron,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Daniel,	McMillan,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. In line 20 I now move to strike out "$4,000," and insert "$2,500."

Mr. KYLE. I suggest to the Senator from New York that if he would graduate the tax he would get more votes for the amendment.

Mr. HILL. The graduating system was voted down. Those points were voted down yesterday by a pretty large vote, and this is the only practical way, it strikes me, to reach the same view.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 20, page 170, before the word "dollars," strike out "four thousand" and insert "twenty-five hundred;" so as to read:

Over and above $2,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] being paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Manderson,	Quay,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Teller,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Washburn.

Cockrell,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Palmer,	White.
Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—22.

Blanchard,	Frye,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vilas,
Butler,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Camden,	Hoar,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,
Daniel,	McLaurin,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I now reoffer the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and withdrawn this morning fixing the exemption at $3,000. I desire to say that I thought the amendment was universally approved. From the conversation of Senators, and from the statement made when it was offered by the Senator from Missouri, the amendment seemed to meet with universal approbation.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the amendment has the graduated feature of taxation in it?

Mr. HILL. It is one simple amendment, making the exemption $3,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Without any graduated tax?

Mr. HILL. Precisely.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he himself approved the amendment? He says it meets with universal approval. Does he approve it?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; I approve of it as an amendment to the bill. It tends to make the bill better. Each one of these amendments tends to make the bill better, more justifiable, and more defensible.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator then thinks it is an improvement?

Mr. HILL. I think it was so regarded yesterday when the amendment was offered.

Mr. PALMER. The bill in its present form I think is satisfactory to its friends. The proposition of the Senator from New York to amend meets the views of the avowed enemies of the bill; and it is hardly fair that he should champion this particular amendment.

Mr. HILL. I suppose that perhaps the easiest way to defeat the amendment would be to champion it; but I assumed that Senators around this circle would vote for an amendment upon its merits, and not upon the question as to who championed it. I think an amendment offered here should be determined not upon the question who offers it, whether it is offered by a friend of the measure or an enemy, but upon its merits. I do not propose to thrash this straw over again; I have said all that I desire to say upon that question; but I think it is a mighty poor argument to say that Senators will vote against an amendment fixing the exemption at $3,000 because I offer it and would heartily approve of it if offered by somebody else.

Mr. PALMER. I merely meant to challenge the statement that the amendment was universally approved. I prefer $4,000, and therefore can not assent to this amendment, and never did approve of the proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 20, page 170, before the word "thousand," strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Over and above $3,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I again announce the pair of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was suddenly called from the Chamber, at the door, when the previous vote was taken, and therefore was unable to vote. Had I been in the Chamber I should have voted for the amendment. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIXON (after having voted in the affirmative). As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has come into the Chamber and voted, I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], which I had transferred to the Senator from Ohio. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BRICE. I desire to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Allison,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,
Carey,	Hansbrough	Morrill,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Patton,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Hill,	Peffer,	Teller,
Davis,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Washburn,
Dubois,	Irby,	Platt,

Mitchell, Wis.	Pasco,	Turpie,	Walsh,
Morgan,	Pugh,	Vest,	White.
Murphy,	Roach,	Vilas,
Palmer,	Smith,	Voorhees,

NOT VOTING—17.

Blanchard,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Wilson,
Brice,	Dixon,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Butler,	Gordon,	Ransom,
Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Squire,
Cameron,	McLaurin,	Stewart,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I now renew the amendment which I offered last evening, but which was temporarily withdrawn. I will state what it is. It is in section 54, line 7, page 170, to strike out "1895" and insert "1896," and also in line 8 to strike out "1900" and insert "1901."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 7, page 170, strike out "1895" and insert "1896," and in line 8 strike out "1900" and insert "1901;" so as to read:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1896, and until the 1st day of January, 1901, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually, etc.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire simply to explain the object and effect of this amendment for the benefit of those who were not here last evening when I briefly stated its purpose. The terms of the bill in this respect, as they stand at present, will be retroactive in their effect. The law, if the bill passes, is to take effect on the 1st of July, the middle of July, or the 1st of August. The precise date has not been yet fixed. But by the terms of the bill the tax is to be paid, not upon the income which shall accrue after the passage of the bill, but for six months prior to its passage. The tax is to be paid next July. By the terms of the bill its operations for certain purposes begin in January. The effect of the bill will be that people affected by it must pay not only what income they earn from now until the 1st of January, but upon what they have earned since January last. It makes the bill retroactive in its effect, as I have said.

I see no occasion for so doing, especially in the light of the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in his opening speech, which has never been disputed by anybody, that the bill would bring $25,000,000 more revenue than the necessities of the Government required.

I can see no reason why the whole of this year should be included in the period in which the income is to be computed. By the terms of the bill books are to be kept and other things are to be done, by corporations and otherwise, which ought not to be required to be done before the passage of the bill. Therefore, in my humble judgment, this amendment is a very proper one to perfect the bill. A bill ought not by any of its terms to be retroactive, so as to include a period six months prior to its passage, because it does affect transactions which occur prior to the passage of the bill.

It seems to me that the amendment is a very proper one, and ought to be adopted. Of course, when the bill was reported last December, it was expected that early in the spring it would probably be passed. Some persons thought it would be passed by the 1st of March. There was therefore more propriety in keeping that provision in, because then it would be retroactive for only a very brief period. But now the bill will not pass before the 1st of July. I do not know what day is to be fixed; possibly the 1st of August may be determined upon, and then we will have five months before the income-tax provision goes into effect, although the tax will have to be paid upon moneys earned during that period. It seems to me it would perfect the bill, and in that interest I offer the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], who is absent, and vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lodge,	Power,
Allison,	Frye,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Quay,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Patton,	Smith.
Davis,	Hill,	Perkins,
Dixon,	Hoar,	Platt,

NAYS—41.

Allen,	George,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bate,	Gibson,	Martin,	Teller,
Berry,	Gorman,	Mills,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oregon.	Vest,
Brice,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Caffery,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Palmer,	White.
Coke,	Jarvis,	Pasco,
Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—18.

Blanchard,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Washburn,
Butler,	Hale,	Ransom,	Wilson,
Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Shoup,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	McLaurin,	Squire,
Daniel,	McMillan,	Stewart,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Those are all the amendments I desire to offer at present to section 54. I now ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to reserve the right to submit a motion to strike out section 54, in accordance with the understanding I think I had with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose there will be no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Simply to save the trouble of calling the roll, I give notice that, when we get through with the sections relating to the income tax, I shall make one motion to strike them all out.

Mr. PLATT. Before we pass from section 54, I should like to inquire what is understood by the words "and a like tax," in line 20? I inquire whether it is meant by that language to tax the 2 per cent on the amount of income over and above $4,000, or whether it is meant that a tax of 2 per cent shall be imposed upon all "the gains, profits, and income" derived from "every business, trade, or profession carried on by persons residing without the United States"? Are the persons who reside without the United States, and carry on business, to have an exemption of $4,000, or are they to be taxed on all their incomes derived in this way?

Mr. VEST. The same provision applies to them as to persons in the United States.

Mr. PLATT. Then, they would have the exemption the same as persons residing in the United States?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think it is entirely clear from the language which is used.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read section 55, as follows:

SEC. 55. That in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities, except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation; profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within the year or within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectible, less the interest which has become due from said person during the year; the amount of all premium on bonds, notes, or coupons; the amount of sales of live stock, sugar, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay, and grain, or other vegetable or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, less the amount expended in the purchase or production of said stock or produce, and not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; the amount of money, notes, bonds, choses in action and the value of any personal property received by gift, devise or inheritance; all other gains, profits, and income derived from any source whatever and the share of any person of the gains or profits of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, who would be entitled to the same if divided, whether divided or otherwise, except the amount of income received from institutions or corporations, whose officers, as required by law, withhold a per cent of the dividends, interest, gains, profits, and income made by such institutions, and pay the same to the officer authorized to receive the same; and except that portion of the salary or pay received for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, including Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, from which the tax has been deducted, and except that portion of any salary upon which the employer is required by law to, and does, withhold the tax and pays the same to the officer authorized to receive it. In computing incomes the necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, occupation, or profession may be deducted and also all interest actually due and paid within the year by such person on existing indebtedness. And in addition to $4,000 exempt from income tax, as hereinbefore provided, all national, State, county, school, and municipal taxes, not including those assessed against local benefits, paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; losses actually sustained during the year arising from fires, shipwreck, or incurred in trade, and not covered by insurance or otherwise, and compensated for, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values and losses within the year on sales of real estate purchased two years previous to the year for which income is estimated: Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate: Provided further, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make a deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family, and have joint property interest, the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $4,000: And provided further, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $4,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or in the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid, and shall include that portion of any income or salary upon which a tax has not been paid by the employer, where the employer is required by law to pay on the excess over $4,000.

The Committee on Finance reported amendments to the section, in line 10, on page 171, after the word "purchased," to strike out "within the year or;" in line 11, before the word "year," to insert "close of the;" in line 16, after the word "person," to insert "or which has been paid by him;" in line 18, after the word "sugar," to insert "cotton;" in line 24, after the word "family," to strike out "the amount of money, notes, bonds, choses in action," and insert "money;" in line 25, before the word "personal," to strike out "any," and insert "all;" in the same line, after the word "property," to strike out "received," and insert "acquired;" on page 172, line 1, after the word "gift," to strik out "devise;" in line 2, after the word "whatever," to strike out "and the share of any person of the gains or profits of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, who would be entitled to the same if divided, whether divided or otherwise, except the amount of income received from institutions or corporations whose officers, as required by law, withhold a per cent of the dividends, interest, gains, profits, and income made by such institutions, and pay the same to the officer authorized to receive the same; and" in line 11, after the word "salary," to insert "compensation;" in line 16, after the words "by law to," to insert "withhold;" after the word "profession," at the end of line 19, to strike out "may," and insert "shall;" in line 20, after the word "interest," to strike out "actually;" in the same line, after the word "due," to strike out "and," and insert "or;" in line 22, after the word "and," to strike out "in addition to $4,000 exempt from income tax, as hereinbefore provided;" on page 173, line 2, after the word "mortgagor," to insert "also;" in line 3, after the word "year," to insert "incurred in trade or;" in line 4, after the word "fires," to insert "storms or;" in the same line, after the word "shipwreck," to strike out "or incurred in trade;" in line 5, after the word "not," to strike out "covered," and insert "compensated for;" in the same line, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "and compensated for;" in line 8, after the word "purchased," to insert "within," and in line 20, after the words "joint property," to strike out "interest," and insert "interests;" so as to read:

SEC. 55. That in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities, except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation; profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the close of the year for which income is estimated; interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectible, less the interest which has become due from said person or which has been paid by him during the year; the amount of all premium on bonds, notes, or coupons; the amount of sales of live stock, sugar, cotton, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay, and grain, or other vegetable or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, less the amount expended in the purchase or production of said stock or produce, and not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; money and the value of all personal property acquired by gift, or inheritance; all other gains, profits, and income derived from any source whatever, except that portion of the salary, compensation, or pay received for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, including Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, from which the tax has been deducted, and except that portion of any salary upon which the employer is required by law to withhold, and does withhold, the tax and pays the same to the officer authorized to receive it. In computing incomes the necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, occupation, or profession shall be deducted and also all interest due or paid within the year by such person on existing indebtedness. And all national, State, county, school, and municipal taxes, not including those assessed against local benefits, paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; also losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in trade or arising from fires, storms, or shipwreck, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values and losses within the year on sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated: Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate: Provided further, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make a deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family, and have joint property interests, the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $4,000: And provided further, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $4,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or in the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid, and shall include that portion of any income or salary upon which a tax has not been paid by the employer, where the employer is required by law to pay on the excess over $4,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, to add to the section the following proviso:

Provided, also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as interest or dividends upon the bonds or stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 2 per cent per annum has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to suggest that the amendment would more properly come after the section which provides for corporation taxes. Standing where it does, it might leave a question, as it seems to me, whether it applied to corporation taxes or only to personal incomes, which have been provided for by the section to which it is proposed as an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the proviso will be passed over, because I think it will require some changes after we have discussed and acted upon section 59.

Mr. VEST. I propose to modify the amendment in line 11, before the word "dividends," by striking out the words "interest or;" and in the same line, after the words "upon the," by striking out "bonds or." This is made necessary by another amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the proviso in line 11, on page 174, before the word "dividends," it is proposed to strike out "interest or;" and in the same line, after the words "upon the," to strike out "bonds or;" so as to read:

Provided, also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as dividends upon the stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 2 per cent has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. PLATT. That is all right; but it will be observed that up to this time in sections 54 and 55 nothing has been said about the tax on corporations.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, if the provisions in regard to corporations in a subsequent part of the bill are not agreed to, this becomes unnecessary, but this is the proper place for this amendment at this time, because we are now defining the exemptions and liabilities as to the income of individuals; and in order to prevent double assessments, this amendment simply provides that where the corporation pays the tax the individual shall not pay it.

Mr. PLATT. It provides more than that. It provides that in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from other corporations, etc. However, I am not particular about it.

Mr. VEST. It is intended to apply to the case where a corporation or association receives a dividend from another corporation or association, which frequently happens.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to this phraseology, as I understand the substance of it, if all the provisions respecting corporations are hereafter inserted.

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore I should be glad if the Senator from Missouri would allow this amendment to pass over pro forma until we have disposed of section 59.

Mr. VEST. If section 59 shall not be agreed to, this falls to the ground.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be agreed to or it may be modified.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection. Let the proviso be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Chair understands that the amendment of the committee has been modified as requested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. PLATT. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that by unanimous consent the proviso, as modified, is to be passed over until after the consideration of section 59 of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend in line 1, on page 172, by inserting the words which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, on page 172, after the word "inheritance," it is proposed to insert "except from lineal ancestors and descendants or between husband and wife."

Mr. HOAR. As the bill now reads, if a man die, leaving $5,000, which passes to his widow or to his minor children, that is counted as part of the year's income, or if the husband gives $5,000 of personal property to his wife, which he and she have gained together, for the purpose of buying a house in her name, or because he desires, as a protection against a rainy day, that the property shall stand in her name instead of his, it is to be treated and taxed as an income for that year.

Certainly, we are really in no such stress in this country as to rake such a thing into the drag net of any tax system, whatever it may be. I do not think there is a State in the Union that ever would tax such a transfer of property, which is merely technical, and I do not think any foreign country would do it. I do not know, however, about that.

I hope the amendment will receive the assent of the Senate without any question.

Mr. VEST. We are unable to agree to that amendment as we understand it.

The Senator puts a plausible illustration of his side of the case by saying if a father leaves to a son or a daughter $5,000, or if a husband gives a wife $5,000, the tax in that case would be $100. We can see no reason why the income tax should not be collected in a case of that sort as in any other. Now, let us take another illustration. Suppose a father leaves to a child $50,000,000, or that a husband gives to his wife a million dollars, is there any reason why a party who receives the protection of the Government to that extent upon so large an amount of property should not bear a just proportion of the taxation of the country?

In fact, the argument is a great deal stronger in such a case because the recipient in the case the Senator puts does not work to acquire this amount by actual labor, but it is a gratuity; he spends nothing, and it comes to him by a sort of blind fortune, and yet the Government gives equal protection to it.

If the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts should prevail, then the multimillionaire could give his whole estate to his lineal descendants or to his wife and escape this tax.

Mr. HOAR. Then let there be a limit of $10,000 or some reasonable limit fixed, so as to exempt small property.

Mr. VEST. It is unquestionably that sort of income that should not be exempt from taxation. It is not acquired, as the Bible says, by the sweat of the face, but it comes simply by virtue of relationship or good feeling. We can not agree to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The point in this case is that it is not a transfer of property in any substantial sense. My property is my wife's; my wife's property is mine, and my father's property was mine when he got through with it, except as he chose to give it to other children or to other persons. The community of effort in the household which gains the little accumulation of property is a thing which the instinct of all humanity recognizes, and it is not in any sense for the purpose of taxation a new acquisition to the person to whom it passes. That is the answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Certainly the United States does not need any such thing. The multimillionaire is a rare bird in this country. I do not think we need to be oppressing all the frugal and honest people in this country because there are said to be some multimillionaires in the city of New York. I do not wish to say anything to disturb the sensibilities of the honorable senior Senator from that State [Mr. HILL], but I am afraid the American people will at some time get to wish that there was not any city of New York, if all our ordinary transactions of life are to be cast into confusion and to be regulated on an unjust and unreasonable principle because somebody—generally somebody who lives 2,000 miles from that city—imagines some wonderfully dishonest things are going on there.

By the law of the State to which I belong, and I suppose by the law of nearly every other State—perhaps the civil law of the State of Louisiana is an exception—the gain, the toil, the service of the minor child is the property of the father. When the boy and the girl get to be 16 years of age, if they work, their wages belong to the father. The services of the wife are the legal property of the husband even in many States where separate property is recognized. The husband has a right to make contracts for the services of the wife if he sees fit.

At any rate, it is a joint affair. The wife has as much merit as the husband in laying up the $10,000 or whatever the sum may be. The economy, the frugality, the prudent management is hers as much as it is his; and while he may earn money for which he may work outside, she works in the home without wages. I say it is a foul, a base injustice—and I do not believe any Senator on this floor will deny it—when the husband dies to put an inheritance tax on the widow.

I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH responded in the affirmative.

Mr. HOAR. I want to call attention to what is to become of the United States Senate under this Democratic policy. Here is an income-tax provision. It was crude, unjust, indefensible in many of its details by the admission of the persons who framed it. There have been forty amendments proposed, amendments of substance, amendments of serious principle, and every Senator who proposed or voted for those amendments confessed in so doing that the bill was wrong. Now, there is taken from the Senate of the United States in the introduction of this new policy, whether right or wrong, its capacity as a legislative body.

Here on the question whether a widow shall in her hour of distress pay an inheritance tax on the five or ten thousand dollars which she and her husband have gained together, a majority of the Senate are expected to record their votes, not because they believe in the thing, not because they consider it even decent or tolerable, but simply because they put their judgment and their conscience into the hands of one or two men, who, however respectable and however able they may be, have been burdened and weighed down by having their time taken up by the consideration of this enormous bill covering all the industries of the country.

Mr. President, legislation enacted in that way is not legislation; it is conspiracy, and nothing else; it is tyranny, and nothing else.

Mr. VEST. I want to say a single word. The Senator from Massachusetts has repeated this lecture of his from time to time in regard to coercion by two or three men. I want to say, Mr. President, once for all, that we are endeavoring honestly to make a just and equitable bill, and it is not in his mouth nor within his jurisdiction to denounce everything which does not meet his judgment here as an act of tyranny and an outrage upon the people.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit me. Does not the Senator expect to record against this amendment 43 votes, simply because Senators on that side have engaged to follow him without the slightest regard to their individual opinions?

Mr. VEST. No, Mr. President, and it is an insult almost to ask me such a question in regard to my colleagues. I hope that the amendment we have offered will prevail. I believe it is right.

I am somewhat of a lawyer, and I do not think that hard cases should make the law. If so, we should never have a statute enacted at all. The imagination of the Senator from Massachusetts can always conjure a case which, in his judgment, operates most unjustly and inequitably under any law. I have put my side of this question in a case which he does not pretend to say does not sustain my contention here entirely, but he chooses to put the case of a woman who has worked with her husband for the acquisition of property. Many of them who have not worked in the acquisition of property have received millions upon millions of dollars simply as a gratuity, or by way of descent, as in the case of the child.

I do not admit that all the arguments are upon the Senator's side of this question. The inheritance or succession tax has been adopted in all civilized countries where an income tax has prevailed, or if not in all, in a large majority of them, and it prevails now in a great many States of the Union. In the State of New York there is such a tax. It is considered an equitable and just tax; and I consider it so, because when the child or widow receives from the father or husband an estate, there is no reason, if the income of the child or of the widow is increased to that extent, that the new estate should not bear an equal and just portion of the common taxation of the Government. That is the whole question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I answered to my name on the roll call. I do not like to interrupt this discussion, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, the Senator from Rhode Island having answered to his name, without unanimous consent the debate can not proceed.

Mr. HILL. I do not know that I care about speaking upon this particular amendment, but I shall reserve what I was going to say on an amendment which I shall offer later.

Mr. PEFFER. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. HOAR.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I do not see him in the Chamber at present, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and withdraw my vote.

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). I learn that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], with whom I am paired, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Platt,
Allison,	Hansbrough,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Carey,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Davis,	Higgins,	Morrill,	Teller.
Dixon,	Hill,	Patton,

Coke,	Jones, Nev.	Ransom,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Shoup,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I move an amendment in the same language, with the addition of the words "to an amount not exceeding $5,000." I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "inheritance," in line 1, page 172, it is proposed to insert:

Except from lineal ancestors and descendants, or between husband and wife, to an amount not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. HOAR. The effect of this amendment is to dispose of the millionaire argument and confine it exclusively to little transfers between husband and wife in poor families of sums not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. VEST. Four thousand dollars would be exempted anyhow under the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I know, but I want this to be especially exempted. I want to have this particular thing not counted to be taxed, where otherwise it might be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORMAN. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and withhold my vote.

Mr. SHOUP. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Hansbrough,	Manderson,	Sherman,

Cullom,	Irby,	Power,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLATT. I did desire, and do desire, to offer an amendment in line 13, on page 173, but I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] still wishes to offer amendments with reference to the part of the bill we are now considering, and so I shall wait.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend in line 13, on page 172, after the words "United States," by inserting "not including the judges of the courts of the United States, but." If that amendment shall be accepted I have nothing to say about it.

Mr. VEST. That is all right.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 13, page 172, it is proposee to insert:

Not including the judges of the courts of the United States, but.

Mr. HILL. All the judges of the courts of the United States?

Mr. HOAR. All the judges of the courts of the United States are life officers under the Constitution and have a constitutional right to their salaries during life.

Mr. PEFFER. Has this matter been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet. If there be no objection, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. HILL. It is to except the judges of all the United States courts throughout the country from the operations of this section.

Mr. MILLS. Why should they be excepted?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. The Senator from Missouri says it is right, and whatever he says goes.

Mr. VEST. Whether it goes or not, the Senator from Missouri thinks the amendment is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, before passing from that, to have printed in the RECORD the letter of Chief Justice Taney, which I presented on the 20th instant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

LETTER FROM CHIEF JUSTICE TANEY TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY RELATIVE TO AN ACT TAXING THE SALARIES OF THE JUDGES OF THE COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1863.

SIR: I find that the act of Congress of the last session, imposing a tax of 3 per cent on the salaries of all officers in the employment of the United States, has been construed, in your Department, to embrace judicial officers, and the amount of the tax has been deducted from the salaries of the judges.

The first section of the third article of the Constitution provides that—

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges of both the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

The act in question, as you interpret it, diminishes the compensation of every judge 3 per cent, and if it can be diminished to that extent by the name of a tax, it may, in the same way, be reduced from time to time at the pleasure of the Legislature.

The judiciary is one of the three great departments of the Government created and established by the Constitution. Its duties and powers are specifically set forth, and are of a character that requires it to be perfectly independent of the other departments; and in order to place it beyond the reach, and above even the suspicion, of any such influence, the power to reduce their compensation is expressly withheld from Congress and excepted from their powers of legislation.

Language could not be more plain than that used in the Constitution. It is moreover one of the most important and essential provisions; for the article which limits the power of the legislative and executive branches of the Government, and those which provide safeguards for the protection of the citizen in his person and property would be of little value without a judiciary to uphold and maintain them which was free from every influence, direct or indirect, that might by possibility, in times of political excitement, warp their judgments.

Upon these ground I regard an act of Congress retaining in the Treasury a portion of the compensation of the judges as unconstitutional and void, and I should not have troubled you with this letter if there was any mode by which the question could be decided in a judicial proceeding. But all the judges of the courts of the United States have an interest in the question, and could not therefore with propriety undertake to hear and decide it.

I am, however, not willing to leave it to be inferred from my silence that I admit the right of the Legislature to diminish, in this or any other mode, the compensation of the judges when once fixed by law, and my silence would naturally, perhaps necessarily, be looked upon as acquiescence on my part in the power claimed and exercised under this act of Congress, and would be regarded as a precedent establishing the principle that the Legislature may, at its pleasure, regulate the salaries of the judges of the courts of the United States, and may reduce their compensation whenever Congress may think proper.

Having been honored with the highest judicial station under the Constitution, I feel it to be more especially my duty to uphold and maintain the constitutional rights of that Department of the Government, and not by any act or word of mine have it to be supppsed that I acquiesce in a measure that displaces it from the independent position assigned to it by the statesmen who framed the Constitution. And in order to guard against any such inference I present to you this respectful, but firm and decided, remonstrance against the authority you have exercised under this act of Congress, and request you to place this protest upon the public files of your office as the evidence that I have done everything in my power to preserve and maintain the judicial department in the position and rank in the Government which the Constitution assigned to it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

R. B. TANEY.

Hon. S. P. CHASE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to attend the funeral of my late colleague in this Chamber, Mr. Perkins, which takes place at 4 o'clock this evening. I wish, before I go, to call the attention of the Senate to two amendments which I should like to offer at the present time. The part of the bill to which one of the amendments, at least, applies will probably be reached before I return, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be acted upon now. I shall not ask anything more than a simple viva voce vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PEFFER. On page 176, in line 10, after the word "return," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "return," in line 10, on page 176, it is proposed to insert:

The rendering of such willfully false or fraudulent return is hereby declared to be a felony, and on conviction thereof the person or persons so found guilty, shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a period of not less than one year nor more than five years, in the discretion of the court; and it is hereby made the duty of the collectors of internal revenue to report all cases of such willfully false or fraudulent returns to the district attorney of the particular district, who shall forthwith institute criminal proceedings against such persons.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to say that the law already provides for an offense like this. The general statute covers the case, and I will say to the Senator from Kansas, with great respect, that I do not think there is any necessity for the amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. I should like to have a vote upon it, anyway.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Kansas will strike out of that amendment the phrase "is hereby declared to be a felony." We have a statute definition of felony, which is comprehensive and applies to all cases which are or may be in the power of the court punishable by hard labor. It makes an exceedingly an noying condition of things to undertake to add to that comprehensive definition an enumeration of particular offenses, making them felonies in terms. The Senator is aware, I suppose—certainly the lawyers in the Senate who have had experience are aware—that a very different rule of pleading applies to felonies than to misdemeanors.

For instance, you can not join in the same indictment the count of a felony and the count of a misdemeanor; and there are some other distinctions which it is not necessary to mention. I do not recall all of them now. So it seems to me we had better adhere to our ordinary rule of letting the definition of felony be comprehensive and universal in all cases.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not wish to engage in this discussion. I simply ask for a vote.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the words "is hereby declared to be a felony."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out in lines 3 and 4 the words, "is hereby declared to be a felony."

Mr. HOAR. The word "and" should be stricken out in addition. I move to strike out the words, "hereby declared to be a felony, and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for a division.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to hear the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas read, and then I should like to hear it read as it will stand if the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts should prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. PEFFER and the amendment as proposed to be amended.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Nebraska proceeds I will withdraw my amendment. I shall not take up the time of the Senate this hot day.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas to strike out the word "felony" and substitute the word "offense." That will comply with the wishes of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PEFFER. I prefer a vote on the amendment as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to have withdrawn his amendment. The question recurs, therefore, on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out the word "felony" and insert the word "offense."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the word "felony" and insert "offense."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEFFER. On page 207, line 7, after the word "taxes," I move to insert as a new section what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after section 81, on page 207, as a new section the following:

That section 3339 of the Revised Statutes, and all sections amendatory thereof, be amended so as to provide that the tax on beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors shall be $2 per barrel, and the said section shall be and remain in force as part of this act, together with any and all laws and parts of laws made to carry into effect the provisions of this section.

Mr. PLATT. Will not the Senator from Kansas be likely to return before we reach that part of the bill? The question of the beer tax is a pretty important question, and I should hope there would be a little time for the discussion of it.

Mr. PEFFER. I am quite willing that this matter may be taken up during my absence.

I now ask that I may be excused during the remainder of the day from attendance on the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the request of the Senator from Kansas will be granted. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. HILL. Before that is done, I inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has offered his amendment?

Mr. PLATT. No; but I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HILL. I have some amendments to offer when the Senator from Connecticut finishes his.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to offer an amendment on page 173, to strike out the second proviso, commencing in line 13 and ending in line 21. Let it be stated by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The SECRETARY. On page 173, section 55, it is proposed to strike out the second proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make a deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family and have joint property interests, the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $4,000.

Mr. PLATT. This seems to me to be an important matter, and if it were not so excessively warm to-day, I should like to occupy the attention of the Senate for a few minutes; but as it is, I shall only state in the most concise way I can the reason why I think this proviso should be stricken out.

It will be observed that incomes are assessed upon individuals. The tax is paid by the individual upon his or her individual income, with an exemption of $4,000.

Now comes this proviso, that there is to be only one exemption where the combined income of different members of a family amounts to more than $4,000. That is not right, Mr. President; it is not consistent with the scheme of the bill, and I trust that this question will not be decided by a party vote.

That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband or wife.

That is the first clause, but they have all got to be assessed to the individual; they are not assessed to the family. Each individual member of the family has to have his income assessed and levied under the provisions of the fifty-fourth and fifty-fifth sections.

Take it merely in the case of husband and wife. If the husband has an income of $4,000 and his wife has an income of $4,000 each income would be exempt if it were not for this proviso; but here comes in the proviso and says there is to be only one exemption of $4,000. Is that right? Suppose the minor children in a family by inheritance from their grandfather or from other sources have individual incomes, the combined amount of which exceeds $4,000, and the parents have incomes, there is no deduction for the income of the minor children under those circumstances.

The same reasoning holds true with regard to the next provision, where there are two or more wards comprised in one family who have a joint property interest, the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $4,000. If the incomes are large in a family, this is not practically of any great importance; but if they are small, it is going to work a decided hardship. Any one can see that.

I can see no reason why the income should be assessed on the individual and on all the individual members of a family, and then the deduction should be made for the family alone. It seems to be an inconsistency.

I do not know where this provision came from. It was not, unless I am very much mistaken, in any of our former income laws. The suggestion was made to me this morning that it was taken from an old income law, but I have looked at all of them I could find and I did not find this provision in them. I may be mistaken about it, but whether it is in other income tax laws or not, it is not right.

Mr. VEST. This provision is taken from the income law which was formerly enacted by Congress.

Mr. PLATT. The law of what year?

Mr. VEST. In the laws enacted in 1864 and 1867; and it is the provision in the bill as it came from the House, which is now pending.

Mr. PLATT. I could not find it in the Statutes at Large.

Mr. VEST. It is identical word for word, except as to the amount, and it was based upon the idea, I suppose—that was the theory upon which we adopted it—that where the parties were living together and the family expenses were in common, there should not be this separate exemption, but only one exemption for the entire family; and the same way in regard to wards where they had a joint interest, which could not be separated, and lived together, the theory of this income tax being that the amount of necessary expenses to a family, which is fixed by this bill at $4,000, should be exempt from taxation. Where they may have separate estates, yet if they are living together as one family, and sharing expenses as a household, the old law made this exemption, and we have adopted the identical language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. I find that the provision was in the old income law, but I could not find it in the Statutes at Large, although I looked for it, but I am sure it was not in all of them. We have had several such laws. It does not matter, however, whether it is the old law or not, it is not right, and it ought to be stricken out. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I do not see the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] in his seat, and I make the same transfer of pairs I made on the previous vote, so that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will stand paired with the Senator from South Dakota, and I vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to again announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. CAFFERY. I announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Hoar,	Quay,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Cullom,	Hale,	Morgan,	Squire,

Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Kyle,	Peffer,	Wilson,
Call,	McMillan,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether he has an estimate from the Treasury Department, or whether he has made any estimate himself as to the amount which the income tax will probably yield?

Mr. VEST. There never has been any estimate from the Treasury Department, except one made in an informal way by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the result of the tax upon corporations.

I will say very frankly to the Senator from Ohio, that the general estimate has been at $30,000,000, but I have never been able to find any reliable data on which to base an estimate, and I do not think anybody knows or can state what it will be.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some statistics upon that point. It is very important if we pass an income tax that we should have an income tax which will yield a considerable revenue.

Mr. HILL. I think the Senator labors under a delusion. It is not apparently of the slightest consequence how much it yields in revenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is of very great consequence how much it yields.

I have endeavored to procure statistics from the Census Bureau as to the probable number of persons who will pay the income tax under the provisions of this bill, but I can find no data given by the Census Office which will even enable me to form an opinion upon the subject.

I have found, however, in one of the statements of the Census Bureau, important facts which may throw some light on the subject. I find that the total valuation of property in the United States was estimated by the Census Bureau in 1890 at $65,037,091,197. The estimated value of real estate, with improvements thereon, was $39,544,544,333; of live stock on farms and ranges, farm implements, and machinery, $2,703,015,040; of mines and quarries, including product on hand, $1,291,291,579; gold and silver, coin and bullion, $1,158,774,948; machinery of mills and product on hand, raw and manufactured, $3,058,593,441; railroads and equipments, including street railroads, $8,685,407,323; telegraphs, telephones, shipping and canals, $701,755,712; miscellaneous, $7,893,708,821.

So it will be seen that nearly two-thirds of the property of the United States is in lands with the improvements thereon, and the balance is divided among the number of items which I have given, the largest of them being $8,685,407,323 in railroads.

Mr. President, when you come to the homes and the farms of all the people of the United States, included in the term real estate, of course they are practically exempt from taxation; because there is no provision here which would make the home fall under the income tax, provided it is occupied by the owner. It is only where real estate is rented that it furnishes what is called an income.

The house in which a man lives, however expensive it may be, would not contribute anything towards this fund. So it will be at least safe to say that two-thirds of the real estate held by the people of the United States can not be embraced in the income schedule because it is occupied by the owners, and there is no provision in this law which would require the return of such property when so occupied.

It is true if a man makes money out of his farm, after deducting a great many things, he will be taxed on the overplus, but there is probably not one in a thousand of the farmers of the United States who would come within the limit of $4,000. All the farms, therefore, would be practically exempt from the income tax.

Mr. President, let us go a little further. The bill as it now stands eliminates from taxation all debts and credits of the country, amounting to untold billions of dollars. The reason of that is that the creditors are as numerous as the debtors. Every debt represents a creditor as well as a debtor, and where a debtor owes to his creditor the debtor is authorized to deduct from his income, however much it may be, all the interest he has to pay and the other expenses attending it, and the creditor will be to a large extent exempt, because the large creditors in this country are also generally very heavy debtors, and one will balance the other.

I doubt very much whether, under the operations of this bill, you will derive any revenue from debts and credits. The greatest debtors in our country are the largest business operators, all the interest they pay will be deducted from their income, and for the last year, I think, it will exceed in almost every case the income, and the creditor also is apt to be a debtor. Therefore, if he should honestly return his income, it would probably not be more than has already been deducted from the assets of the debtor, or from his possible income if he is not in debt. Therefore we must eliminate from the computation the property of the debtor and the creditor. In all our returns no notice is taken of the amount of debts and the amount of credits, and only fixed property, real and personal, can be estimated in this list.

If you take the entire aggregate of $65,037,091,197 and make the reduction from real estate and the improvements thereon, when it is occupied by the owner and yields no rent, Senators must perceive, as well as I, that the amount of this property which is occupied and free from the income tax will probably amount to nine-tenths of all the real estate in the country. Probably not one-tenth of the real estate in this country is rented so as to yield an income under the provisions of this bill.

Further, the old law, which has been referred to as having yielded $30,000,000, and one year during the war, I think, yielded $80,000,000, was based upon the idea of a deduction of only $600. This exemption was increased after the war was over, and finally it was placed at $2,000, when the income tax diminished rapidly, owing to the increase of the limit of exemption. When the exemption on incomes was only $600, the tax yielded some forty or fifty million dollars a year, and when the exemption was raised, first, to $1,000, then to $1,200, and finally to $2,000 (after which the income tax was repealed), the amount of income fell off very rapidly, and was reduced to less than one-half.

It is also true, and it is a fact known by every Senator here, that the great body of the property of the people of the United States is held not in great masses such as will be taxed under this bill, but is held in small amounts. A man would be considered quite rich in Ohio who had $50,000 of property; but he would not count as part of his property for taxable purposes the house in which he lives, or the land, because that would probably be balanced by the expense of conducting the farm. So that a man must have at least $100,000 in active operation, yielding a rental, a profit, or an interest, in order to have an income going beyond the exemption of $4,000.

Indeed the wealth of some of the wealthiest States in this country rests upon unimproved real estate, which yields no income whatever. Under this bill the taxes upon such property paid the State, city, and county authorities may be deducted, and that may exceed all the rents, and yet the owner may be worth a quarter of a million dollars. A tax thus levied upon incomes above $4,000 implies that the tax shall extend to only a few. In our country it is not common, especially in the country, to find men worth more than $100,000. A man is considered quite rich who is worth that amount; and yet he would be entirely exempt from the tax.

If Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who are responsible for the conduct of the Government, for the payment of the interest on the public debt, and the payment of our current expenses, desire to provide measures for revenue, they must provide revenue measures that will yield money. If you would apply a general income tax of 2 per cent on all incomes above $1,000, I venture to say you would get three times and perhaps four times as much revenue as when you confine the levy of the income tax to men who are very wealthy, and all who would be considered very wealthy who were called upon to pay this tax.

It is to be remembered that this tax is not levied upon the value of the property; it is only levied upon its income producing value after all the other exemptions and limitations are drawn from it. So it would be confined to comparatively few, and upon those it would not be very severe. The probable result of such a tax no man can tell. I suppose the Secretary of the Treasury would not undertake to estimate the amount which will be derived from it. No man can tell. I believe it is simply a blow aimed at comparatively few people and it will not cause any sensible increase of the revenues of the Government. That is the view I take of it. I may be mistaken. If it yields ten or twenty million dollars it would be far beyond my expectation.

It seems to me when we are now seeking to provide revenue for the support of the Government we ought to take those sources of revenue which are sure and potent, and that will be sufficient to meet the exigencies of the nation. In my judgment this income tax as it is now provided for, the Senate having refused to lower the limit so as to reach a larger number of persons, is a delusion and a snare. If it yields $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 at the most, it is a discriminating tax against a few persons and it would be of but little advantage. There are a thousand taxes that might be named which would furnish several times as much revenue and would not be felt in the slightest degree by the people of the United States.

A tax of two mills on a pound of sugar would yield more revenue than this boasted income tax. It will be looked upon as a discrimination against the few, as a blow aimed at people who have been industrious, vigilant, and careful, who have husbanded their resources, and it will not yield you the revenue you demand. In my judgment it will be the most unpopular and the most unproductive tax that has ever been levied in the United States of America.

Mr. HILL. Is there an amendment now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment pending at this time.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill on what principle or theory it is that the judges of the United Srtes courts are to be exempted from taxation under this proposed act?

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from New York want an answer now?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. VEST. This question was brought into the debate by an amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] several days ago. The Senator from Massachusetts caused a letter addressed by Chief Justice Taney to the Secretary of the Treasury to be printed and laid upon our desks. In that letter the contention was made that the provision of the Constitution that the salaries of the judges of the United States courts should not be diminished during their tenure of office applies to an income tax, which creates a burden upon those salaries. I say, with the greatest respect for that great lawyer, Chief Justice Taney, that I do not think the legal argument is a sound one. At the same time, the amount involved in the tax is so inconsiderable, that in order to economize time and prevent discussion, we concluded to waive any objection to the amendment and leave it to the Senate to determine, without the committee taking any part, except as Senators personally, in regard to it.

I am frank to say that I would have no feeling about it if the matter were decided either way. There is great plausibility in the contention made by Chief Justice Taney in the document I have referred to. At the same time it can be said that there is no very conclusive reason why officers holding their positions for life and receiving salaries, and considerable salaries, from the Government should not bear their proportion of the common burden imposed upon all the people receiving incomes throughout the country. We have no feeling about it, and do not propose to take any part in it except individually.

Mr. HILL. I do not propose to criticise the action of the committee in accepting so readily and without debate the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. Still, I do not suppose it can fairly be said that it was accepted in order to prevent a few moments' consideration. I can hardly suppose that because it was a heated afternoon, therefore it was wiser to accept it than to antagonize it. I supposed that in making up a bill it should be framed upon some principle, and not simply with a desire to gratify the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, much as the Senator from Missouri would like to do so. I supposed an exemption of such an important character as that of the judges of the Supreme Court, of the judges of the circuit courts, of the judges of the district courts, should be made upon some principle and some reason, and that those who are responsible for the bill had investigated the subject and come to some mature determination.

I assume that the ground upon which it may be said that the judges of the United States courts should be exempted from this tax is because of that provision of the Constitution of the United States which provides that these judges "shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office;" that it would probably be held that Congress could not by the passage of a statute take away from them any portion of their stipulated salary; and that what it could not do directly it could not do indirectly by means of an income tax. That is the plausible theory if not the strict legal ground upon which the exemption should be made. It can stand upon that ground, or it can not stand at all. Therefore, if that be so, the committee should go further, and the amendment which I now propose to submit for the consideration of the Senate, it seems to me, is one which should be adopted.

I offer as an amendment a provision that the salary of the President of the United States shall be exempted from the provisions of this act. The Constitution provides that "the President shall * * * receive for his services a compensation which shall be neither increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States," etc. If you exempt the judges of the courts because of that constitutional provision—and I assume that it must be done, not because of a mere freak, not because somebody asks it, but because of some principle, some solid ground upon which we can stand—then why ought not this amendment to be made?

The President of the United States happens to be a resident of the State of New York. This income tax bears pretty heavily upon the State of New York, and I think the Senator from Missouri in the kindness of his heart will agree to exempt at least one resident of that State and not allow his official salary to be tampered with. It seems to me under the provisions of the Constitution he is entitled to it, if the judges are. The President does not ask for it. I am not authorized to speak for him in this or any other matter, but I think if you exempt the judges at the personal request of the Senator from Massachusetts you might at least grant this in behalf of a resident of my State who now occupies the place of President.

Mr. VEST. As this is probably the last President we shall have from New York, the appeal is almost irresistible. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I am afraid if you keep on with this kind of taxation it will be the last Democratic President from any State in the Union for a long number of years. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order must be preserved in the galleries. The officers of the Senate will see that the rules of the Senate are not violated.

Mr. HILL. I think my good-natured friend from Missouri now sees the propriety of the amendment, and without calling the roll I hope it may be adopted unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

The salary of the President of the United States shall be exempted from the provisions of this act.

Mr. HALE (at 3 o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Tennessee, who is in charge of the bill. The Senator knows and appreciates the fact, as I and all of us do, that we are at the end of a hard-worked week. The weather is almost insupportable; the air of the Chamber is very bad; and as a matter of safety and common sense in consulting the health of Senators, it seems to me that the session to-day should not be greatly prolonged. Besides—I know the Senator will appreciate this consideration—the funeral of an associate of ours, a former member of this body, is fixed for 4 o'clock to-day. A number of Senators desire to be present and will leave the Chamber for that purpose.

Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact, which I think we all appreciate, that the debate upon this portion of the bill has run itself about out, and that we can probably on Monday, after the rest we shall get over Sunday, come in here and proceed to vote upon the provisions of this part of the bill, and that we shall make more progress in that way than to keep an unwilling Senate here, I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that it be the understanding that at 4 o'clock he will move either to adjourn or go into executive session. Then Senators who desire to attend upon the sad services to which I have referred will be enabled to do so, and yet not depart from the Senate without its will and wish.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have pressed from time to time, and continuously, the consideration of the bill, and I feel a very earnest and a very great anxiety to press it to a conclusion at the earliest moment possible. I have been appealed to, however, after the notice I gave yesterday evening, by a number of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, for the reasons assigned by the Senator from Maine, to consent to the suggestion now submitted. However great my anxiety to make progress, I have quite as great, if not a greater anxiety to oblige a majority of this body whenever it may choose to express itself. Believing as I do, from the suggestions made to me both publicly and privately, that the Senate really desires to abandon work at the hour named, much as I personally regret it, I will consent to the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the pending question?

Mr. HILL. It is on my amendment, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

That the salary of the President of the United States shall be exempted from the provisions of this act.

Mr. VEST. The same argument applies in favor of that amendment as to that in regard to the judiciary. I have not had time to refer to an act of Congress in regard to the salaries of the judges, and I can not recall from memory the provisions of the act. I know that during my service in the Senate we have from one session to another been passing special acts refunding to judges of the Supreme Court the income tax which was paid by them. Possibly some older member of the Senate can recall the provisions of that act, but I know we have been engaged in that sort of legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that in consequence of the decision of the courts in some of the States that Congress has no right to levy a tax upon an officer, a servant of the State, usually all such persons have been exempted.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Therefore there ought to be a provision to exempt all officers of a State.

Mr. HOAR. That is in the bill now.

Mr. VEST. It is in the bill now.

Mr. SHERMAN. The President of the United States is protected by the Constitution just as much as the judges of the Supreme Court. We have no right to lower his salary by a tax. Therefore I shall vote for the proposition to amend without any hesitation. I think the same provision has been in all the income measures, that the act shall not extend to judges of the courts of the United States, nor to the President of the United States, whose salary, by express provision of the Constitution, can not be reduced.

Mr. VEST. I have no objections to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from New York as to the place where his amendment should be inserted. The Chair presumes it will come in at the end of section 55, and if there is no objection it will be placed there.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Chair that it be placed immediately before the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which exempts the judges. The President should be exempted first, of course, and then the judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the wording of the amendment will be changed, so as to insert the amendment after the words "United States," in line 13, section 55, and the clause will then read:

Not including the salary of the President of the United States and the judges of the courts of the United States, but.

Does the Senator from New York wish to offer another amendment?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; I move to amend section 155, by striking out, after the word "securities," in line 7, page 171, the words:

except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the point I desire to make is that while it is competent, while it is proper, that bonds themselves should be exempted, because the contract so provided, and as a matter of propriety, there is no reason why the interest upon exempted bonds should not be included in the amount to make up an income. There is no reason why the interest should be exempted.

I hold in my hand the statute under which these bonds were issued, and the provision is simply that the bonds shall be exempt from taxation. The interest upon the bonds is an entirely different matter, foreign to the bonds themselves. The United States has the right to say, and properly, that its bonds may be exempt from taxation, but the income from them is properly subject to this tax.

It is a part of a man's income. Of course bonds of the United States are not subject to State, county, or local taxation. They are exempt from all that class of taxation, but when it comes to income taxation instituted by the Federal Government the interest upon bonds is no more sacred than any other species of income from property. By keeping this provision in the bill you again make another discrimination which ought not to exist in the bill.

This brings up the point suggested the other day by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], namely, that under a direct tax whereby land is to be taxed you can not tax land directly except upon a basis of population; and by virtue of an income tax you do not increase the tax upon land but you tax the income from the land. Yet you refuse to tax the interest upon bonds simply because there is a statute of the United States which provides that the bonds shall be exempt.

The Constitution says in substance and legal effect that real estate shall be exempt from all Federal taxation, except taxation imposed upon a basis of population. This proposed act provides not that real estate shall be taxed, but that you shall tax what arises out of the real estate—the income from it. I doubt very much the constitutional power of Congress to do that. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts upon that legal proposition; but it being a debatable question, I do not offer an amendment to exclude the income from real estate. That question will be left to the courts. But there is no reason under heaven, simply because there is a statute of the United States which provides that the principal of the bond shall be exempt from taxation, why you can not include the interest upon the bonds in making up an income tax.

For this reason, Mr. President, I propose this amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will not be adopted. If it is his desire to show the consistency of the framers of the bill, or to bring out in sharp relief before the country with how little care or sense of legislative responsibility it has been framed, or with how much less care and sense of legislative responsibility Senators have voted upon it, I sympathize very much with him in that purpose, but this is a matter which affects the public faith. To my mind it is a breach of the public faith when the United States has promised to pay a certain sum of money at a certain time with interest to withhold a part of that promised sum under the guise of taxation.

Mr. President, this question affects what is one of the brightest jewels in the diadem of this Republic. There never was a nation on the face of the earth exposed to such a temptation as were the people of the United States at the close of the war with the burden of an enormous debt on their shoulders. There were a hundred devices, fiat money, and other similar devices, proposed to the people of the United States as a mode of breaking their plighted faith. The people saw through them, resisted the temptation, and took upon their shoulders manfully the burden of a public debt of upwards of $4,000,000,000,000. They have paid that debt off until the interest upon the public money, which was 7 per cent, the bonds selling at a discount, has become 3 per cent, and the bonds selling at a premium. There never was another nation on the face of the earth, a monarchy, oligarchy, or republic, which would have met that temptation with the heroic and splendid public faith with which it was met by the self-governing people of the United States.

Even Great Britain, who has been in the habit of taunting us and of volunteering her advice to us as to our financial management, took out the interest on her Spanish loan made during the great war with Napoleon. We stand preëminent, conspicuous, and alone in the scruple with which we have adhered to our plighted public faith. I like to keep this thing to tell an Englishman who undertakes to talk to me about the comparative sense of honor of republics and monarchies, that we have paid every sixpence of this enormous debt, principal and interest, and then remind him that England deducted her taxes from the interest on her Spanish loan. It is a thing which he does not like to hear any more than I like to hear his patronizing and presumptuous criticism.

I hope this is a matter which no party necessity, no political temptation will cause us to trifle with or to tamper with for a moment. If you can issue a promise to pay and pay it in thirty years with 6 per cent interest and deduct 2 per cent in the guise of taxation, you may deduct the whole of the 6 per cent interest under the guise of taxation.

Mr. President, I hope we shall expose the folly, as I think it is, of our Democratic party managers in some other way than by adopting this proposition.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it would require no declarations on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts to show that he and the Senator from New York are actuated by the same motive. They both desire to defeat this bill and they are both engaged in a raid upon it from the smallest to the largest provision that can be found within its limits. The committee in charge of the bill ask no favors from either of those gentlemen, and expect nothing except attack. We are ready to meet them anywhere in regard to any provision of the bill and do the best we can to show that it is not only an equitable and just measure, but as carefully prepared as any other bill that has been presented to Congress.

I do not claim that this measure is perfect. That would be an assumption which would be absurd upon the face of the statement. But I do claim that it has been carefully prepared, considering the subject-matter, and that it is defensible; and I stand here to-day ready to defend it. But, Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Missouri claim that they have adopted the precedents which have been followed in other cases in this particular paragraph?

Mr. VEST. There is very little precedent in regard to an income tax; but if the Senator means in regard to the bond question which is now before us, I say yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has this been the course followed heretofore?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, Congress has never attempted repudiation, if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. ALDRICH. I simply want to find out whether the previous statutes upon this subject used the phraseology of this particular provision.

Mr. VEST. When the first income tax was created I think the same language was contained in the act, or equivalent words; but whether that was the case or not, I can state that the Congress of the United States would do nothing which would be in the nature of a repudiation of its solemn contracts.

Mr. ALLISON. I have here the act of 1864.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he had better let the Senator from Iowa read the former act.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I find the following proviso in the act of 1864, which was not changed, I believe, until the income expired:

Provided, That income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States shall be included in estimating incomes under this section.

Mr. HILL. It was very unkind, I think, for the Senator from Iowa to read that provision.

Mr. VEST. I see nothing unkind in it. It is a provision contained here in the present bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is only one slight difference. In one case interest is included, and in the other case it is not included.

Mr. VEST. The language here used, "except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation," might not have been in the old law, although I think I can find words equivalent to it in another part of the act. Whether that is the case or not, does the Senator from Rhode Island, who seems to enjoy this criticism, indorse the proposition of the Senator from New York to tax the interest upon these bonds?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not talking about that. I am talking about what has been done heretofore.

Mr. VEST. That is what we are talking about in the Senate, and everything else is simply leather and prunella. This alliance between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Rhode Island seems liable to a little breaking up occasionally when it comes to legitimate results. Does he indorse this amendment, and is he willing to go before the people of Rhode Island and say that notwithstanding the statute under which the bonds of the United States were issued declares that those bonds shall be exempt from taxation, he is willing now to put an income tax upon the interest?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I stand by the committee in this particular case.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator stands by the committee for a partisan reason. I want to know what he would do as a Senator of the United States in regard to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will tell the Senator. I would stand by the committee as a Senator.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Massachusetts talks about recklessness in legislation. What must any Senator think of an amendment like this, which would strike down the credit of the United States Government like an ox in the shambles? What would become of the credit of this Government if, in the face of a statute under which a bond was issued to an honest bona fide purchaser, whether foreign or citizen, which provides that that bond shall be exempt from taxation, we proceed to put a burden upon it, and to put taxation upon it under the quibble that we have got a right to do something with the interest that we can not do with the principal?

Mr. HALE. What interpretation does the Senator put upon the provision of the act of 1864?

Mr. VEST. As it was read by the Senator from Iowa, it simply applies to bonds of individuals, without saying anything about Government bonds.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us see what the language is. It is more sweeping than I supposed it was:

Provided, That income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States shall be included in estimating incomes under this section.

It does not seem as if language could be selected that would more clearly include all interest upon United States securities of every form as a part of a man's income to be taxed than the language which I have just read.

As I have said, it is stronger than I supposed it was. It has no exception like the clause which the Senator has in the bill, but it is sweeping. It applies to securities which had been issued before and to all securities, and it declares in terms that they shall be reckoned as a part of the income which shall be taxed. Is not that the fair construction of the language?

Mr. VEST. What is the date of that provision?

Mr. HALE. It is the act of 1864.

Mr. VEST. I have sent for the statute which——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to give him the language of the act of 1862, to which I thought he alluded?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will allow me to make one remark, I will hear him with pleasure. I have sent for the statute we had in our committee room when this matter was under consideration, which provides that interest upon the bonds of the United States shall not be taxed.

Mr. HALE. To what act does the Senator refer?

Mr. VEST. I refer to the act for which I have sent and which I shall produce here. I do not recollect it, but it was in our committee room when we were considering this question.

Mr. HALE. This is the act of 1864.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me read the act of 1862.

Mr. HALE. Let us hear that act read.

Mr. VEST. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire has the act to which I referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. The act of 1862 made a discrimination. It imposed a graduating income tax of 3 per cent and 5 per cent, and then came this provision:

Provided, That upon such portion of said gains, profits, or income, whether subject to a duty as provided in this act of 3 per cent or of 5 per cent, which shall be derived from interest upon notes, bonds, or other securities of the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty not exceeding 1½ per cent, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

So it appears that Congress started out with a 3 per cent and a 5 per cent income tax, graduated and reduced, but provided for a duty of only one and one-half of one per cent upon the interest of United States securities in the act of 1862.

Mr. HALE. I doubt whether the Senator from Missouri will find anything in the act that contravenes or takes from or qualifies the provision which I have read, which is so clear and explicit, from the act of 1864. I am confident that that remained the law and was executed as such. It in general terms applies to everybody, and everybody who was subject to the drag net of the income law, I think the Senator will find, paid his tax upon all avails of United States securities until the tax was repealed.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to ask him a question? At the time the act of 1864 was passed, what bonds were in existence issued by the Government which had the provision in them that they should not be taxed? I ask the question as a matter of fact.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that would raise the principle that is familiar to lawyers. The last act would be the controlling act. An act after the act of 1864 issuing bonds and declaring that they should not be subject to taxation would countervail that act undoubtedly; but there is no general act limiting or controlling or changing the income tax law of 1864. I think if anyone will examine the debates it will be found that it was claimed as one of the merits of the income tax that, while the bonds were excluded from taxation by States, the large holders of bonds, drawing large sums of interest from the Government, were by this provision made to stand their part of the tax, and that it was considered not as a weakness of the law, but as a merit and a strength.

Mr. VEST. This provision of the bill declares that where the law of issuance of the bonds provides that they shall be exempt from taxation then this income tax shall not apply. The broad question presented to the Senate is whether we shall, in view of such a provision and with the acknowledged intention, as I assume, that there should be no taxation upon the bonds, principal or interest (for I have no doubt that was the meaning of it), take the responsibility of impairing the credit of the Government and creating a suspicion in regard to the national honor by adopting the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HALE. Are we taking any more responsibility than our predecessors took in 1864, which was after issue upon issue of bonds had been made, and when the same considerations applied that apply now? Then Congress, and the President approving, did not hesitate to lay a tax upon the avails of these bonds as upon the avails upon every other kind of investment. It is no worse now than it was then. There are no considerations now that did not appertain then; and they did not seem to hesitate; they did not seem to consider that they were guilty of bad faith.

Mr. VEST. I will now call attention, as I have found the provision, to the act authorizing the refunding of the national debt, which was passed in 1870, and, as the Senator from Wisconsin

[Mr. VILAS] reminds me, the bonds that are now outstanding were issued under that act. Here is the provision:

Be it enacted, etc., That * * * after fifteen years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum; also a sum or sums not exceeding in the aggregate one thousand million dollars of like bonds——

Mr. HALE. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. VEST. Page 177 of this volume, "Laws of the United States relating to Loans and the Currency"— and bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum; all of which said several classes of bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempted from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority——

Mr. HALE. That is it.

Mr. VEST—

and the said bonds shall have set forth and expressed upon their face the above specified conditions, and shall, with their coupons, be made payable at the Treasury of the United States. But nothing in this act, or in any other law now in force, shall be construed to authorize any increase whatever of the bonded debt of the United States.

Mr. HALE. That provision of course is familiar. It has been recognized and never questioned in the States. It applies to State, local, or municipal taxation. I think the Senator will find, as I suggested a few moments ago, that there is nothing in any general law which countervails the proposition and policy embodied in the act of 1864, that these bonds should pay their part, take their share of the burden; that the holders of them should contribute like other investors.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Maine is a valuable auxiliary in any debate, but his zeal overruns the letter and spirit of the law. Here is the language, if he pleases:

All of which said several classes of bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

Mr. HALE. Where does the Senator find that?

Mr. VEST. I find that here in this statute.

Mr. MILLS. It is the act of 1870—the refunding act.

Mr. VEST. This is the law refunding of the national debt, the act of July 14, 1870, under which these bonds were issued.

Mr. MILLS. And under that act every bond now in existence has been issued.

Mr. VEST. There is not a bond of the United States to-day that is not subject to that provision. Yet the Senator from New York proposes in the face of that enactment that we shall put a tax upon the interest on these bonds. It is a question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had almost forgotten that during the war we did subject United States securities to the income tax, but I was quite sure in my own mind, though I could not turn my hand to it, that subsequently Congress declared expressly that no tax whatever should be put on Government securities. It is found in the funding act, a very proper place for the provision. Indeed, I would not vote for such a tax, whether the provision was there or not. I do not think as a moral question we have any right to tax the agencies and means of the Government of the United States to borrow money. It seems to me it is a dishonest thing for the Government to issue its notes and then levy a tax upon them. I should not vote for any provision imposing such a tax, whatever might be the law; but as the law is explicit that no tax shall be levied, that ends it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri seems to be in a very extraordinary frame of mind. He repels with great indignation my undertaking to stand by the committee.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. What I said was that I am not in any degree willing to support this amendment, or, for the sake of exhibiting the infirmities of this legislation or the carelessness with which it has been prepared, do something which seems to me to be a violation of the public faith.

The Senator, however, does me no more than justice in one respect when he says that I heartily agree with the Senator from New York (if that be the opinion of the Senator from New York, an opinion which has not yet been disclosed); and at any rate when he says that I desire to defeat the bill. I do. I think that the advent of the Democratic party into power, with the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Texas, and the Senator from Arkansas as its financial representatives, has been a greater calamity to this country pecuniarly than the rebellion itself.

Mr. VEST. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I do not speak, of course, of the infinite woe and wretchedness and suffering occasioned by the loss of life and health on both sides in that great struggle; I do not speak of the danger to the last hope of public liberty on the face of the earth which was occasioned by the attack on it in which the Senator from Missouri and his associates took part; I have nothing to say about that; that has gone by; but so far as the cost in money, in the destruction of property, in the destruction of credit, in the misery of poor and honest households, in the starvation of men who have been accustomed to the comforts and the pleasures and the delights of human life, this year's work of the Democratic party has been twofold worse than the four years of the rebellion itself. I hope the bill will be defeated. Whether it is defeated or not, I not only hope, but I know, that its authors will be hurled from power whenever the American people can get at them.

The Senator says he is prepared to stand by the work of his hands anywhere. One would think that the place to stand by it would be in debate in the Senate of the United States, when the other side are attempting to pass the bill, but the Senator and his followers and his associates have stood here for six weeks, when the great details of the bill have been under discussion, dumb as if they were practicing for a deaf and dumb asylum, or as if they lived all their days in a deaf and dumb asylum. There has been no defense of the work of the committee.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who brought in the bill, denounced as wicked and flagitious almost everything which the bill now contains as you have amended it. The Democratic platform of 1892 denounced as wicked and flagitious the things you are attempting to do by the bill, and if that be sound doctrine, you have done the things you ought not to have done, and you have left undone the things which you ought to have done. The defense of the bill has come so far not from the Democratic leaders, but from the Populist Senator from Nebraska and from nobody else.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the urgency produced by the condition of business affairs in the country has imposed upon the Democratic portion of the Senate immense difficulties. We have been enduring punishment for which we ought to have large credit. One of the inflictions which we have borne has been the necessity of submitting to the assaults, unjustifiable, malignant assaults, coming from the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator seems to forget that all the members of this body are his equals. The Senator has said that the pending bill will bring upon the country greater inflictions than did the war of the rebellion.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Massachusetts said the Democratic party would do so.

Mr. PALMER. The Democratic party. That does not come well from men who, when the war of the rebellion was flagrant, never raised a hand in defense of the integrity of the country. I have listened to these affectations of patriotism and fervent love of country, and I look on the other side and see gray-haired men who, when the hour of peril came upon the country, were quietly at home pursuing their own vocation, making money when they could. Now they are as arrogant and overbearing as if they themselves had taken part in the contest and had done their whole duty as citizens and as soldiers.

Mr. President, these things have been exceedingly hard to bear. The Democratic party here is engaged in an honest effort at adjusting these great economic questions in such manner as will best promote the interest of our common country. We have felt the necessity for urgency, for action. We have sat quietly and borne more than men ought to be required to bear, not for want of earnestness, not for want of ability to defend the policies we maintain, but simply because the urgent demands of the country require acts and require votes. The country is suffering as the result of policies which have been in progress in this country for twenty-five years; and shall we be taunted for our silence when we have been silent because the country is suffering and practical legislation is demanded?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me for one moment? No human being ever thought of taunting the Senator from Illinois for silence.

Mr. PALMER. I ask pardon of the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I say no human being ever thought of taunting the Senator for silence.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator is witty, it is lost upon me, for I have not heard it. I have no doubt the remark was a witty one.

Mr. HOAR. What I said was that no human being ever thought of taunting the Senator for silence.

Mr. PALMER. For silence?

Mr. HOAR. He has contributed his full share to the debate.

Mr. PALMER. Loquacity is an indication of age, and if the Senator's loquacity and mine are tested, he is much the older man. Old men are garrulous, but my venerable friend from Massachusetts is far older than I if garrulity is to be regarded as the test of age. I am glad the Senator did not expect me to be silent. I have borne very much. I have been silent because my desire that this legislation shall be placed upon the statute book has overcome my desire to speak, which is almost as strong as that of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts. I have restrained myself, but he has not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Illinois has undertaken to make a suggestion as to who did and who did not take arms on the side of the country in the late war. It was my misfortune to labor under an infirmity of vision which made it impossible for me to have been accepted as a soldier or to have rendered any efficient service anywhere. I do not think anybody in Massachusetts, certainly no soldier in Massachusetts, thinks that I failed to perform to the full extent of my power, physical or mental, in any way, the services of a good citizen during the rebellion. The whole war was not fought out by the brigadiers-general.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I most heartily apologize for any language which may have amounted to an imputation upon the patriotic men who remained at home during the war and did their duty there. But I must confess that in the face of these frequent allusions to the war and to the part taken in that struggle by gentlemen with whom I politically act, I become impatient, especially when I feel that the imputations ought not to come from those who took no part in the controversy. I detest, I say I detest, I deprecate, these allusions to the past. We are now one country and one people.

The past ought to be forgotten. I ask pardon of the Senator for even supposing that his age is equal to mine. When we gray-haired men pass away from this sphere of action I trust no other recollections will be left than those of fraternity and love between the people of this country; and I trust the time will come when we can discuss a great public question and dispose of it without allusions to sectionalism and to past controversies which have been happily settled, controversies which were brought upon the country by the mysterious dispensation of Divine Providence, terrible at the moment, but grand in the result.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Illinois, before he sits down—he seems to be adopting somewhat amicable forms of expression—allow me to remind him that I did not make any attack on the conduct of anybody in the war. On the contrary, if I said anything, it would seem to be an extenuation, for I said that the mischief which the Democratic party is doing now was pecuniarily a great deal worse than that of the war.

Mr. PALMER. Extenuation is sometimes an assault. The sort of extenuation which is earnest, sincere, kind, and gentle may be received kindly, but the extenuations which carry with them the sting of an apology are much worse than a direct blow.

Mr. President, I did not mean to interrupt the progress of this bill. I most earnestly desire that this work shall be closed. It may be wrong; it may be bad; the country will determine.

Mr. HARRIS. Agreeing with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in the opinion that we can and will finally dispose of the bill in the next one or two days, in accordance with the agreement which I made with him a short time since, and with what I understand to be the wish of a very large number of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 25, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 23, 1894.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by the Speaker, who was greeted with applause.

Prayer by the Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SUPREME LODGE, KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House H. R. 4701, to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, these amendments are acceptable to the friends of the measure; and I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

WATER MAIN ASSESSMENTS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HEARD, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER.

LABOR DAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday.

Mr. McGANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES OF RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 544) to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of railway postal clerks.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, that bill is identically the same as the bill (H. R. 5064) which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads at the present session, and I move that this bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, to that I will have to object. I understand that the bill involves an additional annual expenditure of from $600,000 to $700,000, and it is too large and important a bill to be considered in this way.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let me be heard just a moment. I would state, Mr. Speaker, that the bill carries no appropriation with it whatever. The present classification of the railway postal clerks was formed when there were but 100,000 miles of service in this country, and when the number of postal clerks was 3,500.

Mr. SAYERS. I must object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I trust that the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I do object to it being considered just now.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It has been carefully considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House; it has passed the Senate: it has been presented to every member of the House; and I trust the gentleman from Texas will allow this bill to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I do object to the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask that it be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table for the present. The gentleman will not object to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid the following Senate bills before the House; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (S. 447) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of a certain land warrant to Emma A. Ripley—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1490) to pension Mollie Crandall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1343) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Joseph G. Utter—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 199) for the relief of E. R. Shipley—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 313) appropriating funds for investigations and tests of American timber—to the Committee on Agriculture.

A bill (S. 211) for the relief of St. Charles College—to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HATCH, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. GEORGE W. HOUK.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order heretofore made, setting apart this day, from the hour of 2 o'clock, for eulogies on the late Hon. George W. Houk be changed, so that Saturday, the 7th day of July, at the same hour, shall be set apart for the same purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the special order setting apart this day, from 2 o'clock, for eulogies on the late Representative Houk be vacated, and that Saturday, the 7th day of July, beginning at 2 o'clock, shall be set apart for the same purpose. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Indiana.

WILLIAM H. AND GEORGE BOBINGER.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have a bill re-referred, which has been improperly referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to return the bill to the House, and suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as it relates to a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Committee on the District of Columbia will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7502) authorizing the sale of title of United States to a tract of land in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, to William H. and George Bobinger.

Mr. HEARD. It relates to a piece of land attached to the Government reservoir, which is under the control of the engineers of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

WATSON VS. BLACK.

Mr. LAWSON, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report in the contested-election case of Watson vs. Black, from the Tenth Congressional district of Georgia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments a bill (H. R. 1929) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Eau Claire, State of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendment a bill (H. R. 106) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Omaha, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ELIZABETH CITY, N. C.

Mr. MCKAIG, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments a bill (H. R. 3756) to provide for the erection of a public building at Elizabeth City, N. C.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT AMERICUS, GA.

Mr. MCKAIG also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment a bill (H. R. 52) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Americus, in the State of Georgia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. SWEET, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 7151 a bill (H. R. 7558) to provide for surveying and estimating the cost of canals and the location and cost of reservoirs for the reclamation of arid lands in certain States and Territories, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BYNUM in the chair.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas, in charge of this bill, spoke yesterday of having general debate at various points in the bill where it might be desired. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] informs me that when the subject of deficiencies in the Department of Justice is reached he would be glad to occupy thirty minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. There will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SAYERS] something further about these Indian depredations judgments. I understand that no appropriation is made here for the payment of any of those judgments.

Mr. SAYERS. No appropriation is made. When we reach the judiciary clause of the bill that question can be considered.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I give notice that I shall want ten minutes when that matter is reached.

Mr. SAYERS. There will be no trouble about getting time for reasonable discussion.

Mr. PICKLER. There are several judgments of that kind for depredations in my State, about which, as I understand, there is no question whatever, and I think we ought to have the appropriations to pay them.

Mr. SAYERS. When the proper place in the bill is reached the gentleman will have an opportunity to present any amendment that he desires relating to that matter. The question will not be reached until toward the close of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. But when it is reached we shall have an opportunity?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the chairman of the committee indicate the part of the bill in which it will be proper to offer these amendments? There are some of these judgments that are absolutely just and ought to be provided for.

Mr. SAYERS. When we reach page 61 of the bill that question will come up for consideration.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I give notice that I shall want some time when that point is reached.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk, reading the bill by paragraphs, read as follows:

Intercontinental Railway Commission: To pay the salaries of the three United States commissioners of the Intercontinental Railway Commission in full for all services heretofore rendered or that may hereafter be rendered, $22,929.67.

Mr. SAYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk:

Page 2, lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out $22,929.67 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And to reimburse them for expenses incurred or to be incurred, $12,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNAL REVENUE.

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1893, $4,000.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. There is an amendment to that paragraph?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 7, after line 9, insert: "To pay C. H. Rhodes, collector of internal revenue for the eighth district of Kentucky, his salary for the period from November 4 to November 5, 1893, inclusive, $35.68."

The amendment was agreed to

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of buoyage: To pay amounts set forth in House Executive Document No. 103, of this session, for expenses of buoyage, excluding Pacific railroads, for the fiscal year 1892, $2,414.43.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call attention to the policy of the Committee on Appropriations touching the payment for transportation and services rendered by the nonaided branches of the Pacific Railroad. Gentlemen are aware that the Pacific Railroad was built by two corporations, one the Union Pacific Company and the other the Central Pacific Company, whose roads met at Ogden, making substantially a continuous line from the Missouri River to San Francisco. Since that time a great many thousand miles of railway have been built and leased to these roads respectively.

I think perhaps that the Southern Pacific Railroad, with its many branches running through the southern portion of the country, leased the Central Pacific. But let that be as it may, gentlemen understand the difference between the Pacific railroads proper and what are called the nonaided lines of the Pacific railroads.

Now, the nonaided lines in mileage, in value, in business exceed many times the original Central and Union Pacific roads. There came up a question, as gentlemen may recollect, whether or not the compensation for services performed by these nonaided lines, so-called, for the Government in transportation and otherwise should under the Thurman act be carried into what is known as the sinking fund or should be counted in ascertaining that fund.

There was contention on that subject between the Government and these nonaided lines. The question was litigated in the Court of Claims, and finally in the Supreme Court of the United States, where several years ago it was fully discussed, and judgment rendered against the United States for the amount due for such services. Those judgments have never been appropriated for, although they were rendered against the Government and have been bearing interest.

I only desired, however, to call attention to the fact that this deficiency bill providing for deficiencies of this year excludes any appropriation for the remainder of this year for transportation or other services performed by the nonaided lines of those roads, and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that for many years Congress has in the Army and Navy appropriation bills and in the Post-Office appropriation bill appropriated for such services, and that the companies are receiving, and have for many years received, their pay under such appropriations. But the Committee on Appropriations in this bill, following the policy, I believe, heretofore adopted, has refused to recommend the appropriation of a small balance necessary to pay those nonaided lines in full for the service for the present year.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Which one of the nonaided lines?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The Southern Pacific. It is proper enough for me to say that the nonaided lines of the Union Pacific are paid. It would take some time to explain how and why; but in the settlement with the Government they are fully paid; at least they were the last time I investigated the matter a couple of years ago, and I am satisfied that such is the case.

Mr. GEARY. Are we to understand that the nonaided portion of the Union Pacific receives this money while the nonaided portion of the Central Pacific does not?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Precisely.

Mr. GEARY. Why is that?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Merely because we have the power. In other words, the Thurman act is so administered as to allow, in making up the sinking fund under that act, the earnings of the nonaided lines of the Union Pacific to be treated as money; and they are so credited.

Mr. DALZELL. But is it not the fact that the nonaided lines and the aided lines belong to the same corporation?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes, I suppose that is true; I understand it is.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Really the Southern Pacific has absorbed the Central Pacific. The lease is the other way.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, yes; the lease is the other way; but the gentleman from California was asking me why there had been this discrimination by reason of which the Union Pacific in its settlement gets full pay for services on nonaided lines, whereas there is no payment for services to the Southern Pacific on its nonaided lines.

Mr. DALZELL. But what I am seeking——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I was answering the question of the gentleman from California. The question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] relates to another matter.

But all I desire to say at this time is that this Congress and the last Congress and the Congress before—and I was going to say the one before that, for I believe the remark should include the Fiftieth Congress—have appropriated in the regular annual bills for pay to the nonaided lines of these two roads for services performed for the Government, while we are refusing to pay the small sum which may be left, known as a deficiency.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is there any such direct appropriation in the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, certainly.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know of any such appropriation; and I have had charge of that bill. It is true that the Quartermaster-General, in his settlement with the companies, may pay them; but there is no direct appropriation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, there is an appropriation for transportation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; an appropriation for transportation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am speaking——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then this is not a question of legislation——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, no; the law so provides—the law as settled by the Supreme Court. But the Committee on Appropriations follows a different rule. Our committee prohibits by a provision in the bill the payment of any of this money for services to the Pacific railroads on the nonaided branches.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Your notion is that the other bills ought to make the same prohibition?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, no; not at all; I am merely calling the attention of the House to the fact that the law as adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States gives pay for services performed for the Government by the nonaided lines of these railroads; and this pay has been allowed to the other roads; they are being paid.

The Union Pacific always has been paid even before the Supreme Court of the United States settled the law. The Central Pacific has never been paid until that decision was made; since which time it has been paid for current service, except the small amount that may be left by way of a deficiency from year to year. This is all I wanted the House to understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of freight and transportation of officers traveling under orders under the appropriation "Pay, miscellaneous" (except for service over Pacific railroads), being for the service of the fiscal year 1893, $4,110.47; in all, $5,110.47.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26, line 21, strike out "forty-seven" and insert "thirty-seven," and in line 22 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay accounts on file for burial expenses of marines, freight, straw, express charges, gas, and water, being a deficiency to the appropriation "Contingent, Marine Corps," 1893, and prior years, $472.50.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I ask to have read what I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1894.

MADAM: Relative to the above-cited claim, I have to advise you that it is inadmissible upon the evidence now on file, and that it has been deemed advisable to have a special examination of the same.

Owing, however, to the limited appropriation by Congress to cover the expenses of special examiners for the next fiscal year, and the large number of cases now awaiting special examination, it is impossible to state definitely when it will be reached for investigation, but it will be placed in the pending files of this Bureau and taken up in its regular order.

It is proper to add that unless Congress shall appropriate an additional amount for the expenses of this branch of the service, it is not believed that the above cited claim can be disposed of within the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

Very respectfully,

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Mr. COGSWELL. This is a letter which is being sent out by the Pension Bureau direct to the applicants themselves, stating that because of an insufficient appropriation for the pay of special examiners' cases needing such examination will have to wait a year or two before they are reached.

I now send to the desk to be read a letter which is sent to claimants through Congressmen, in answer to Congressional calls for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C. June 13, 1894.

MADAM: Relative to the above cited claim, I have to advise you that it is inadmissible upon the evidence now on file, and that it has been deemed advisable to have a special examination of the same.

Owing, however, to the large number of cases now awaiting special examination, it is impossible to state definitely when it will be reached for investigation, but it will be placed in the pending files of this Bureau and taken up in its regular order.

This information is furnished in response to the request of the Hon. WILLIAM COGSWELL, to be advised as to the status of your claim.

Very respectfully,

D. I. MURPHY, Acting Commissioner.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that when the Pension Bureau answers the claimant directly, it sends a letter like the one first read by the Clerk, intimating dereliction of duty on the part of Congress in making appropriation of the necessary funds. But when it sends a letter to the same claimant, which goes through our hands, it omits the reflection which it casts, or seemingly casts, on Congress of making insufficient appropriations. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who had charge of the legislative bill which carried this appropriation, a gentleman who I know would not for a moment advise an appropriation less than required, if it be true that in the legislative bill appropriating money for these special examiners a totally insufficient amount was recommended by his subcommittee?

I should be glad to ascertain if it be true, as alleged in this communication that I have caused to be read, that this House has passed a bill which has not given the money necessary to take care of the special examination claims, or whether the suggestion is an unfair reflection upon the liberality of Congress towards the Pension Bureau.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Pensions submitted an estimate for the special examination force for the ensuing fiscal year of $500,000.

The appropriations for the current fiscal year, including the deficiency allowed at this session, if I am not incorrectly informed, amounted in the aggregate to $400,000. The subcommittee in charge of the legislative appropriation bill gave the whole question a very thorough and exhaustive examination, and reached the unanimous conclusion, as I remember, that $200,000 would be sufficient for that service for the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Next year.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; for the next year. I have just sent to the committee room to get the exact appropriations which have been made for this service for the fiscal years which have preceded, and perhaps in a moment will have them at hand. But I am able to state, in advance of the exact figures, that the appropriations for this service for the last three years have averaged about $200,000 per annum, as I now remember.

Mr. COGSWELL. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. DOCKERY. In a moment.

The committee investigated the whole question quite thoroughly, and thought the appropriation carried by the legislative bill of this session would be sufficient for the next year.

I may say, however, in justice to the Bureau, that the Commissioner insists that the amount should be $500,000. The subcommittee, however, did not concur in that view.

I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COGSWELL. I want to ask the gentleman if I am to understand that the committee are of the opinion that the amount carried in the legislative bill is sufficient for the purposes of special examination of pension claims, and if from that I can draw the inference that the Pension Bureau is unjustly reflecting upon Congress and the Committee on Appropriations, when it writes to a claimant that, owing to the insufficiency of the appropriation, his or her claim can not be touched or looked into during the year 1895.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the question involved is a difference of opinion between the Committee on Appropriations and the Pension Bureau; and in reaching the judgment we did, which so far as I remember was an unanimous conclusion, the committee consulted the appropriations that have been made for prior years, a statement of which has just been handed to me by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. I find that in 1887 the appropriation for this service amounted to $320,000; in 1888, $225,000; in 1889, $225,000; in 1890, $225,000; in 1891, $225,000; in 1892, $215,000; in 1893, $200,000, with a deficiency of $25,000; for the fiscal year 1894, $200,000, with a deficiency allowed at this session of $200,000, or $400,000 altogether for the present fiscal year.

Mr. SAYERS. As against how much for the past two years?

Mr. DOCKERY. As against one appropriation of $215,000 for 1892, and an appropriation of $225,000 for 1893. Of course, the issue involved here is simply one of opinion. The Census Bureau insists that it should have $500,000. The committee thought that $200,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. An increase of $200,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; $200,000 altogether. That is $25,000 less than the last fiscal year, including a deficiency of $25,000 for the last fiscal year and $15,000 less than for the fiscal year 1892.

Of course, the matter is now pending in the other body, and until action is had there in connection with the conference, or further action on the part of the House, it can not be said what appropriation will be made for this service for the next year; but the committee felt that $200,000 would be ample for the service, and so reported.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the bill is pending in the other branch of Congress, and has not become a law, and no one can fairly say what the appropriation for 1895 will be on this particular subject. Yet I desire to have it go upon record that the Pension Bureau, since the action of the House, has been sending out to the claimants for pensions in this country the statement that, because of the insufficiency of the appropriation for the year 1895, these claims can not be handled or reached or touched during the fiscal year 1895.

Now, if the statement of the gentleman in charge of the legislative bill is correct—and every gentleman will take his statement as correct, and I have stated heretofore that nobody believes he would intentionally report an item of appropriation for this matter that was insufficient—we have the fact that this information is being sent out to claimants, that this House has been derelict in its duty, that it has not provided money enough, when the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill is that the amount which this House appropriated in the bill sent over to the Senate is sufficient.

I desire it also to go upon record that when the Pension Bureau answers this same call of this same widow, through a communication which passes through my hands, it sends a different wording, which I am supposed to read, than it sends direct to the claimant herself, which is a reflection upon Congress, while the letter that goes through my hands to the same claimant contains no such reflection. Now, there is trouble somewhere. Either the Pension Office is giving wrong information, unjustly reflecting upon this House, or else we have failed to make a sufficient appropriation for these claims for 1895.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should be glad to have the gentleman state in that connection, what I believe to be the fact, that the minority of the Committee on Appropriations concurred in the view that $200,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I desire to say that there is not a Republican in this House but will vote to make that $500,000, if the Pension Commissioner says it is necessary to have that amount in order to carefully conduct this branch of the service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman if the Pension Bureau did not inform the gentleman that it would require $500,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Were there any members of the committee who insisted that it should be $500,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. Not to my knowledge or recollection.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, let me make a statement in this connection. I happen to be a member of that committee, and in the minority; and I crave the attention of the committee while I state that for the present year the appropriation was $200,000. The Commissioner of Pensions by the 1st of January had spent the whole of that $200,000, namely at the rate of $400,000 a year, and came and asked a deficiency for $200,000 for this year, not for the next year, but this year. Congress voted it, and the Committee on Appropriations recommended it.

Mr. BRETZ. That is, $600,000?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No; that is $400,000 for this year. Now, then, my recollection is that it was referred to in the committee, and it was understood at the beginning of the coming fiscal year this same Commissioner of Pensions could take $200,000 and expend every cent of it by the time Congress meets next December——

Mr. DOCKERY. He could, if there is no limitation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (continuing). As he did this year; and if he comes for a deficiency for this service of $200,000 or $300,- 000 on the 1st day of next December for the remainder of the fiscal year, I have no doubt that he will get it.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is your motion?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, just wait a minute. Believing that fact, I have, as one member of the minority, knowing the great desire of the majority of the committee not to have its bills larger than was necessary——

Mr. DOCKERY. No, no.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; knowing the great desire of the committee, perhaps not in this exact item, but all along the line, not to have its bills larger than necessary, and believing that the Commissioner of Pensions, following his own example, could use all this sum between this and next December, I made no question about it. And let me say further, that I stand ready here and now, or at any other time, to meet the estimates of the Commissioner of Pensions for this service in connection with the administration of his office; believing, however, that that fund is not properly used by him, in good faith, to dispose of claims pending, but in the main to use it to harrass those who are already on the pension roll and then to posture before the country, constantly thundering about frauds upon the pension roll.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Illinois is correct in the general statement that the committee did not desire to make appropriations in excess of the needs of the public service. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has not proposed to increase the amount. Why do not you propose to increase the amount?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This is the deficiency bill, I will say to my sagacious friend from Indiana, providing for the services of this year, and not for the service of next year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Why did you not move in the committee to increase the amount? Why did you not report it here?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Because I am in the minority upon that committee, and because I knew that this Commissioner of Pensions could make this expenditure at the rate of $400,000 for the coming fiscal year as he has for the present year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois thinks the amount is not sufficient, why does he not move to increase the amount?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that a short time ago you stated that you were willing to allow $500,000, the estimate made by the Commissioner. Why were you not willing to vote for it when it was in the committee?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why did you not move to increase the appropriation to that amount in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I was not a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The Committee of the Whole House, where these bills are to have consideration, can amend them; and the very object of consideration of appropriation bills in Committee of the Whole is to allow gentlemen like my honorable friend an opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. The information was not then in my possession.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh!

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. You had the estimates made by the Commissioner, and I did not know what they were.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The estimates are here in the public offices and have been since last November.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. After awhile I will become as conversant with these matters as you gentlemen who have been here so many years.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman states that he lacked knowledge.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I do, sir, or I would have made the motion in the committee.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman's knowledge hereafter will equal his zeal now.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I trust so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to say one thing further to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The bill that we are now considering is a bill making deficiency appropriations for the remainder of this year, which expires on the 30th day of June instant. The appropriation he referred to comes on the legislative bill for the service of the next year. Therefore, why do not you, who in over thirty years have grown gray and almost bald in the service and know more about the estimates of the public service than any of us, rise in your place and move to amend this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two upon this subject, though it is entirely foreign to the bill. The entire discussion arises upon a motion to strike out the last word. There is no necessity for any appropriation whatever for the present year, from the most liberal standpoint, for this service, or for the feeling indicated by the speeches of the gentlemen. The Commissioner of Pensions for the present fiscal year has every dollar that he has asked for.

Mr. HOLMAN. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SAYERS. We might as well be fair to one another and be honest with one another. The Committee on Appropriations in this matter followed the example set by the gentleman from Indiana in the last Congress, when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriations were not $400,000.

Mr. SAYERS. You appropriated only $200,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. And there were deficiencies of $200,000.

Mr. SAYERS. There was no deficiency last year. Now, let us look into this business. We all stand alike in the committee. There was no diversity of opinion in the Committee on Appropriations about the appropriation that was carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of $200,000.

Mr. COGSWELL. Because we were informed that it was sufficient; and now we find the Pension Office sending out to our constituents letters in which there is a statement that we have failed to appropriate enough.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us see. For the fiscal year 1892 only $215,000 was appropriated, and that was sufficient for the purpose. For the fiscal year 1893, when my friend Judge HOLMAN was chairman of the committee, an appropriation of only $200,000 was made and $25,000 as deficiency, which makes $225,000; and for the years 1893 and 1894 the estimate of the Commissioner for this purpose was only $215,000 for each year.

Inasmuch as the expenditure for 1892 had been only $215,000, and as the expenditure for 1893 was $225,000, and as the Commissioner of Pensions did not hesitate during the fiscal year of 1893 to ask for a deficiency, we thought that instead of appropriating the round sum of $500,000 we would appropriate, as has been done during the past two years, $200,000, and if it became absolutely necessary to appropriate more in the way of a deficiency we could do it.

As has been said, I believe, by the gentleman from Illinois, this is a fund which may be very large, which may be very small, or which may be medium in amount. It is within the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions to expend this money either by wholesale or by retail, and the Committee on Appropriations, sustained by the House, and following the precedents established in the two former years, recommended the appropriation of $200,000.

Mr. COGSWELL. What does the gentleman say to the Commissioner of Pensions sending broadcast over the country a letter such as I have had read from the Clerk's desk stating that we were derelict in our duty, when he and I, as members of the Committee on Appropriations, supposed we were appropriating a sufficient amount?

Mr. SAYERS. In reply to that, Mr. Chairman, I simply say that the executive branch of the Government and the legislative branch of the Government in many of these matters of appropriation stand opposed to each other, the one wanting to have as much money as possible, and the other anxious to appropriate just as little as the Executive Departments can get on with.

A MEMBER. Has not that contention between the executive and the legislative departments always existed?

Mr. SAYERS. I believe so.

Mr. COGSWELL. One more question. Will the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Missouri authorize me to write to this widow and state that they are of the opinion that this letter of the Commissioner of Pensions is wrong, and that the amount appropriated is sufficient? [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly not.

Mr. DOCKERY. And I would be quite unwilling to undertake to revise the correspondence of the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If you will send her this debate she will see that the Commissioner is not correct in his statements.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is well to be absolutely frank and fair about these matters, and yet I am restrained by the rules and care not to tell the whole truth.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Why not?

Mr. DOCKERY. The situation has been outlined somewhat by the remark made awhile ago by the gentleman from Illinois—if I misquote him he will correct me—that he did not believe this money was being properly expended.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I did say that. That is my opinion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ask me something easy.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the light of remarks which were made on the floor—I am not referring to committee matters—by the leading Republican member of the subcommittee that reported this bill, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], criticism can not properly come from that side of the House.

The gentleman from Illinois will recall the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Maine in reference to this very item. We made the suggestion that perhaps there ought to be a limitation on this appropriation so as to avoid a deficiency for the coming fiscal year, but upon reflection the gentleman from Maine very properly concluded that he would not offer an amendment that would place a limitation on the amount so as to restrict the entire expenditure to $200,000, as it might interfere with the proper administration of the office.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As the gentleman has appealed to me in regard to what I have said about the expenditure of this sum, will he allow me to interrupt him right there? I remember what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] said about this on the floor of the House, and the Committee on Appropriations, I am satisfied, did not undertake to hedge around this expenditure because of the power of the chief of this Pension Office to make this, that, and the other claim that he has not had money enough, or that his notions of sound administration have been interfered with. And now let me explain my remark.

When I said I did not believe that this money was being properly expended I ought to have added—I will add it now—that in my judgment all through the present fiscal year, in the expenditure of this great sum of $400,000, almost twice as much as what has been expended heretofore, and to be followed by a like expenditure for the coming year, the trouble is that the Commissioner of Pensions, instead of disposing of claims and seeking to aid worthy claimants to establish their cases, as the law and as this appropriation originally contemplated, has been hunting for alleged frauds and expending this money in trying to find somebody that was on the pension roll that he could put off the roll.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, without entering at all into the question of the accuracy of the statements made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I think it is apparent to the committee that for some reason there was no consuming desire on the other side of this Chamber to increase this amount. And I am glad the gentleman from Illinois has made his statement, because it fully answers the somewhat impetuous observation made by his colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] when he started out in this debate with the statement that no member on that side would refuse to vote $500,000 if demanded by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Just at this point let me say, in justice to my colleague and in justice to myself, that the Commissioner of Pensions can between this time and the next session of Congress expend every cent of this money, which will be at the rate of almost $500,000; and Congress will no doubt make an additional appropriation for the coming year, as it has done for this year. And making the criticism that I do upon the Commissioner of Pensions, I stand ready here, if the House believes it ought to be done, to vote for an appropriation of $500,000 for the coming year so as to give this man no illegitimate excuse. He has no legitimate one.

Mr. COGSWELL. The gentleman from Missouri no doubt quoted the remarks of Governor DINGLEY as he thought correctly; but upon receipt of this letter—the first letter read—I took it to Governor DINGLEY, who read it, and said, "It is just what I expected; and it is just what I told the House when the legislative bill was up."

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, I want to say just one word and then I will dismiss the subject. In my judgment the amount is sufficient, and I would not add anything more but for the observations of some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. I simply wanted to establish the "truth of history," and that is, that there was no desire on the other side to increase this amount beyond $200,000.

Mr. COGSWELL. But Governor DINGLEY says he gave notice to the House just what would happen.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has been profitable only to the extent of showing that there is a wide disagreement between the Democratic members of the Committee on Appropriations of this House and the Commissioner of Pensions as to the amount of money necessary to take care of the claims of the old soldiers who are waiting to have justice done them by this Government.

Now, one of two things is true: either the Commissioner of Pensions is correct in his statement to the old soldiers that the appropriations are inadequate to enable him to properly consider their claims or he is not. If he is correct, then this Committee on Appropriations should make this appropriation $500,000 as recommended by the Commissioner, instead of $200,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is nothing involved here except a difference of opinion; and the gentleman's colleague [Mr. CANNON of Illinois] has stated the position correctly—that if $200,000 should not be sufficient, Congress, when it reconvenes, will make the amount good by a deficiency appropriation, which has been the usual course heretofore.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But, Mr. Chairman, it is because of this "difference of opinion" that thousands of letters are being received by the old soldiers in response to their inquiries at the Pension Office, that their claims can not be considered in the Pension Office until after 1895 because of the deficiency in the appropriations made by this Democratic committee of this House.

Now, the gentleman says, if I understand him correctly, that the appropriations already made are sufficient. If that is true, and the Commissioner of Pensions is falsely making the statement which has been read from the Clerk's desk in the letter sent up by the gentleman from Massachusetts, then I say that he should be denounced, not only upon the floor of this House, but in every section of the country where there is an old soldier, for the fraud that he is perpetrating upon the members of the Grand Army of the Republic. These men who have filed their claims are notified in such letters as I have referred to that their claims will not receive consideration for a year and a half; and the Commissioner gives as excuse that it is because of inadequate appropriations by this House.

Mr. MARSH. The language the Commissioner uses is "inadequate force."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Inadequate force and inadequate appropriations.

Mr. MARSH. And allow me to say that there are 22,000 of these claims that are hung up because of this inadequacy of force.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If this Commissioner of Pensions is making false and fraudulent statements to the old soldiers, as the gentleman from Missouri and the other gentlemen in charge of this bill indicate, then I say our reprobation of such conduct should be emphasized by a resolution of this House denouncing him for the false statements he is making to the old soldiers; but, on the contrary, if the Commissioner of Pensions is correct, if in order to provide for these claims and do justice to the old soldier he should have an appropriation of $500,000 instead of $200,000, that it is the duty of this House to increase this appropriation from $200,000 to $500,000.

And I repeat what I said a few moments ago that if the gentleman in charge of this bill will make it $500,000 for that service I will guarantee him here and now on behalf of the Republicans of this House that there will not be a Republican vote against that increased appropriation.

Mr. ENLOE. Is that provision in this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Why, Mr. Chairman, look at this matter a moment; while the Committee on Appropriations of this House and the Commissioner are quarreling over the amount of appropriations what is the condition of the soldier?

Mr. PICKLER. He is dying.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, he is dying, as my colleague from South Dakota says, in want and poverty, because he can not get what is justly due him from the Government. His claim is pending here, and this Commissioner says he must wait months and years before it can be considered; that it can not be reached even for consideration until after 1895.

Now, you should take some action one way or the other. You should either denounce, by a proper resolution of the House, the conduct of this Commissioner in making these charges against one of the leading committees of the House, or we should give him additional appropriations to enable him to care for the old soldier and avoid further delay.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend propose to increase the amount for the current year?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I propose whatever is necessary to accomplish that end.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ENLOE. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that all debate be closed on this amendment in five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I have been looking for the clause in this bill on which this debate has occurred.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is on the letters of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ENLOE. I understood from the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that there was perhaps a paragraph in the bill appropriating $200,000 for the purpose of permitting the special examiners to investigate these claims, and that he wanted the gentleman in charge of the bill to increase that amount to $500,000.

But when I come to the examination of the bill I do not find any such proposition in it. This whole debate is entirely irrelevant, and if it has any connection whatever with the pending bill it is simply a proposition to instruct the Commissioner of Pensions as to the performance of his duty.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] introduces letters here from the Pension Office to a claimant stating that unless Congress shall appropriate more money the claim will not probably be reached until 1895.

Mr. COGSWELL. Oh, no; not until 1896.

Mr. ENLOE. I understood the gentleman to say 1895.

Mr. COGSWELL. That it will not be reached for consideration until 1895, but it will be 1896 before it is determined.

Mr. ENLOE. That it would not be reached before 1895, but that that was the outside limit.

Mr. COGSWELL. Not at all.

Mr. ENLOE. Well, however that may be, it is immaterial for the purpose of argument. I take it to be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to go forward now and expend the money that has been appropriated in the proper investigation of the claims, and look to Congress at the next session for any deficiency that may arise.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. And he will do it.

Mr. ENLOE. I have no doubt that he will.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. How does the gentleman from Massachusetts know that?

Mr. COGSWELL. Will my colleague from Massachusetts vouch for that statement?

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. COGSWELL. That the Commissioner of Pensions will go ahead, and if the appropriation is inadequate to take care of all these cases, nevertheless he will proceed with them and look to Congress in the future, and that therefore his letter to the claimants is false and misleading?

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. COGSWELL. Then I would like to know how the gentleman can make the statement he has made in view of that letter.

Mr. ENLOE. I believe I have the floor, and only a few moments remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor and declines to yield for an interruption.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a question.

Mr. ENLOE. I can not yield for an interruption. I have but a few moments remaining.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will give you more time.

Mr. ENLOE. The House might not consent.

I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have the utmost confidence in the integrity of the Commissioner of Pensions, but I do not concur with him in all things about the administration of his office. If I had the administration of it I would administer it somewhat differently from what he does.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How would the pensioners come out if you had the management of the office?

Mr. ENLOE. I can tell the gentleman that the honest pensioners would get their money, and the frauds would get none if I could possibly prevent it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How many efforts would the gentleman make to find any honest pensioners in the country? Does the gentleman think that he would find any?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes; a very large number of them, and a very large number of fraudulent ones, too.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I think the gentleman would look much sharper for the dishonest ones than for the honest ones.

Mr. ENLOE. That is entirely a gratuitous inference on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, I do not ask the gentleman anything for the information.

Mr. ENLOE. I have never, since I have been in Congress, opposed the payment of a pension to a man who was honestly entitled to it, and my record will bear me out in the assertion, and there is no soldier in the country who will assert that I ever have occupied any other position, and there is no man who can justly make complaint against my position unless he is a fraud himself and urging a fraudulent claim upon the Government, or unless he has constituents who are claiming fraudulent pensions.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman means to make a personal insinuation, I will give him such a reply as he deserves.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhauted.

Mr. ENLOE. I mean to say that if the gentleman puts me in the attitude of trying to prevent any man who is honestly entitled to a pension from receiving it, then I wish to put him in an attitude that he will not want to occupy.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The committee will be in order.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made his own attitude. I put him in no attitude.

Mr. PICKLER. Why does not the Commissioner find some of these frauds?

Mr. ENLOE. He is finding them.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

Mr. ENLOE. I hope the Commissioner of Pensions will look to the law for his instructions in the performance of his duties, and not to what is said here.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is not in order. If members have no respect for themselves, the Chair hopes and trusts that they will have some respect for the rules of the House. Gentlemen will take their seats. The Chair will treat the formal amendment as withdrawn, if there be no objection, and the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Transportation of Indian supplies: For this amount for necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by act approved July 13, 1892, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, $3,000.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 34, after line 5, insert the following:

"For the amounts authorized to be allowed Ely Moore and Daniel Woodson by joint resolution approved April 2, 1894, and found due and certified for appropriation by the accounting officers of the Treasury, $7,355.84."

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to raise the point of order on the amendment, that there is no law authorizing the appropriation, and therefore such an appropriation can not be carried on this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to that point of order; and in order to do so it will be necessary to go somewhat into the history of this claim. A resolution passed through both Houses, and was approved by the President, on the 2d day of April of this year, directing the payment of this amount to these parties. It was referred to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury, and it was then ascertained that the fund from which the payment should be made had heretofore been paid out and exhausted.

In other words, it was an Indian trust fund. Now, under the law of 1837, which was embodied in sections 2093 and 2094, it is provided that before trust funds shall be paid to Indians, all necessary expenses in connection with the sale of those lands shall first be paid. In violation of that general law and of the Revised Statutes, the appropriation bill of March, 1893, paid out all the money belonging to the Delaware and other tribes, leaving this account still unpaid.

Now, the Supreme Court, in another case of just the same character, to be found in volume 110 of the Reports, page 688, decided that this was a claim against the United States, and that if the United States paid out trust funds, they were responsible for the same. Now, on investigation it is found that the money was due to these men; that Congress by an appropriation contrary to the Revised Statutes had paid out the money, leaving these men still unpaid, and therefore the Government is responsible for the amount.

The Secretary of the Treasury submitted this resolution to the Speaker of the House, notifying him of the fact that there was no money in that appropriation to pay it. The Speaker transmitted it to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations referred it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the first time it was directed to our attention was on Thursday last, after the Indian appropriation bill had passed. Besides, I do not believe that the Indian appropriation bill ought to carry deficiencies; but the Indian appropriation bill had passed, and we respectfully referred the resolution back to the House, by instruction of the committee, and asked that this amount be made an item in the deficiency bill. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it is a part of the existing law of the land. It passed on the 2d day of April, 1894.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, the jurisdiction of the several committees of this House is well established, not only by the letter of the rule, but also by precedents that have been made from time to time. Now, this is in no sense a deficiency. If it had been a deficiency, Congress, instead of making an appropriation to pay it out of a trust fund, would have made an appropriation out of the general revenue. The resolution to which the gentleman refers, and which I have before me, directs that a certain sum of money be paid out of certain trust funds belonging to certain tribes of Indians.

It was found after the resolution had become law that there were not funds sufficient out of which to pay the amount specified in the resolution. These facts being admitted, and having been stated by the gentleman who proposes the amendment, it occurs to me that the appropriation, if it should be made at all, should come upon the Indian appropriation bill, or from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the appropriation out of which this money was to be paid is exhausted, as the gentleman says it is, it seems to me it is clearly a deficiency.

Mr. SAYERS. I stated what you say. I am making your statement and not mine.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. I accept the statement. I say it is true. The gentleman repeats that the fund is exhausted. I say that it is exhausted; and if it is exhausted, what does constitute a deficiency if this does not? If it is a deficiency, then it ought to be a part of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman a copy of the joint resolution referred to?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir; I send up the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky). This amendment appears to be "for the amount authorized to be allowed Ely Moore and Daniel Woodson by joint resolution, approved April 2, 1894, and found due and certified for appropriation by the accounting officer of the Treasury, $7,355.84." It is admitted, the Chair understands, that no funds——

Mr. SAYERS. The Chair will understand that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund belonging to the Indians, and not out of the general funds in the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it to be admitted that this money is to come out of a trust fund, which trust fund is exhausted. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Chair will sustain the point of order, believing that under the rule the item ought not to be in this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of building and care of grounds, and other necessaries, directly ordered by the Attorney-General, on account of the fiscal years 1890 to 1893, inclusive, $4,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman from North Dakota desire to offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I do not care to offer an amendment, but I desire to be heard upon this part of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow us to proceed with the consideration of the bill, with the assurance that he shall have an opportunity to speak before the bill is finally reported to the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. With pleasure.

The Clerk read as follows.

To pay the fees and expenses of the deputies of O. P. Fitzsimons, marshal of Georgia, 1879, 1880, and 1881, $4,370.38. Said sum to be paid direct from the Treasury to said deputies now holding claims against said marshal's office, in the following manner, namely: First, $1,000 to James B. Gaston, and the balance to be pro rated among all said deputies, according to the amounts found due said deputies, by Hon. W. R. Hammond, auditor of the United States circuit court, northern district of Georgia, in the suit of United States vs. O. P. Fitzsimons and others.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 47, after line 7, add: "Provided, That the United States marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts in the States of Montana and Washington, shall hereafter receive the same fees, compensation and expenses for their official services and disbursements as are now allowed by law to the United States marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of United States courts of the State of Oregon.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order against the amendment that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Montana on the point of order.

Mr. HARTMAN. I hope the gentleman will not press that point of order. I frankly admit that the amendment is subject to the point of order, and the only question is whether I can convince the gentleman that he ought in justice to withdraw it. The situation is this: In all of the intermountain States and States lying west of the Missouri River and east of the Pacific coast these officers receive certain fees for their compensation. The fees received by the officers there are exactly double the fees that are received by similar officers in Montana and Washington.

Now, the same distances exist in those two States between the stations where the marshals have to travel, the same distances exist between the points where the district attorney has to go in the performance of his official duties, and the expenses are even greater in Montana and Washington than in California and the other Western States, and it does seem to me that the gentleman ought to be willing to place us upon the same basis as the other States that present similar conditions. It is true that there is now a bill pending for the purpose of paying these officers by salaries, but that bill is not a law and may not become a law, and if it does not become a law then we shall continue to be discriminated against by our officers receiving only one-half the amounts that like officers receive in the other States. I therefore ask the gentleman to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I think that the fees of the officers of the United States courts in California and the other States named by the gentleman ought to be reduced to the same footing as the fees of like officers of the courts in other parts of the country, and therefore I can not withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. I suggest to the gentleman that California does not come in that category. Oregon and Washington may, but California does not. The officers of our courts do not receive those double fees.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to the widow of R. F. Brattan, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland, $4,255.75.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 9, page 51, the following, to wit: "And to pay to W. Jasper Blackburn, formerly a Representative in the Fortieth Congress from the State of Louisiana, $5,597.23."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the amendment, and ask the gentleman to consent that we may go on through the bill and return to the amendment later.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I have a similar amendment that I would like to submit.

Mr. MEREDITH. I have a like amendment. When shall we reach the consideration of these amendments?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman may offer his amendment now, and I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MEREDITH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, after line 13, add the following:
"To Louis McKensie, $2,098."

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MEREDITH. This amendment, it seems to me, ought properly to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order will be reserved on these amendments, and they will be returned to, to be considered together.

Mr. MEREDITH. When shall we have an opportunity to return to them?

Mr. SAYERS. As soon as we get through with the bill we will then go back to these amendments.

Mr. MEREDITH. I can not be here all the time, and if this question is to be discussed I would like to have it discussed while I am here. This is Saturday afternoon, and I am compelled to leave between 4 and 5 o'clock. I would be glad if this amendment could be passed on now.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, we will take up the first amendment. I presume the whole of the evening will be consumed on it.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I would like to have my amendment read, so that it may be pending with the others.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between lines 9 and 10, or page 51, the following:
"To pay to the executor of Nathaniel Boyden, late a member of the House of Representatives of the United States for the Fortieth Congress, the sum of $5,652.78, the remainder of salary due and unpaid said Nathaniel Boyden as a member of the House of Representatives for the Fortieth Congress."

Mr. SAYERS. A point of order is reserved on that amendment also. It is understood that I reserve points of order on all three of these amendments.

Mr. TERRY. I would like the gentleman to state what the point of order is against my amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state it when the question comes up.

Mr. TERRY. I would be glad to know what the point is.

Mr. SAYERS. Let the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to state, in this connection, that I reserve points of order on these provisions which the committee has incorporated in this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. The point comes too late.

Mr. TERRY. I think it is not too late. If a point of order is to be made against my amendment which provides for payment to a man now living, I reserve a point of order on these provisions for the widows of deceased members.

Mr. SAYERS. They have all been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to reserve a point of order on the text of the bill after amendments have been offered.

The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas desires that these three amendments be passed over with points of order reserved upon them.

Mr. SAYERS. I do. Now, let the Clerk read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

To pay to James Kerr, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress, for services in compiling and arranging for the printer and indexing testimony used in contested-election cases, as authorized by an act entitled "An act relating to contested elections," approved March 2, 1887, the sum of $500, and an additional sum of $900 to such employés as were actually engaged in the work designated by the said James Kerr, and in such proportion as he may deem just, for assistance rendered in the work; in all, $1,400.

Mr. SAYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows.

On page 53, after line 8, insert:

"To pay the following employés who were necessarily employed by the Doorkeeper during the period from November 4 to December 3, 1893, namely: Two session folders, at $69.66 each; ten laborers, at $59.79 each; one riding page, $75; and one page in the folding room, $75; in all, $887.22.

"To pay the following employés who were necessarily employed by the Postmaster during the period from November 4 to December 3, 1893, namely: Three messengers, at $114.60 each; and four messengers, at $99.67 each; in all, $742.48.

"To pay J. F. Snyder, disbursing clerk, and Thomas G. Kalbfus, assistant disbursing clerk, for extra services rendered, $300 each; in all, $600.

"To pay F. T. Dennis as extra compensation for services rendered as assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the first and second sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay William J. Assman the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger in the Hall Library at the rate of $3.60 per day from July 1, 1893, to June 30, 1894, inclusive, $594.

Mr. SAYERS. Another amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, after line 16, insert:

"To pay George L. Browning and Alphonso Gibbs, for extra services rendered in the folding room, $300 each, $600.

"To pay M. M. Robinson the difference between the amount of his salary of $1,200 per annum, for extra services rendered as assistant to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $300.

"To pay Joseph Y. Brattan, for services rendered as clerk to the late Robert F. Brattan, from April 1 to May 10, 1894, inclusive, $132.25.

"To reimburse Augustus Hall for amount expended for assistance in caring for the annex folding room to June 30, 1894, $213.

"To pay J. Martin McKay for extra services as foreman of the folding room, $171.36.

"To pay Isaac F. Smith for services rendered as messenger to the Committee on Indian Affairs, $200.

"To pay Peter J. McDonald the difference between his salary as folder and that of acting assistant foreman of the folding room, at $1,200 per annum, from January 20, 1893, to January 20, 1894, $300."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Nathaniel W. White, $240.37; in all, $1,038,698.12: Provided, That none of the judgments herein provided for shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "cents," in line 1, page 61:

"For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases since June 30, 1891, as certified by the Attorney-General April 19, 1894, in response to the Senate resolution of April 14, 1894, and in amount in accordance with the act of March 3, 1891, amounting to a total of $514,924.93, as follows.

Mr. PICKLER. It is not necessary now to read the list of names following.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from South Dakota to reserve his amendment until we get to the next clause in the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I did not suppose it would be in order under the next section, inasmuch as we are now under the head of "Judgments of the Court of Claims." I am not particular, of course, where the amendment is inserted.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me a moment, I desire to offer a general amendment to this provision at the proper time, covering all of the cases embraced under the act of March 3, 1891. Then I propose to discuss the matter fully, and the gentleman can offer his amendment at that time.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I wish to offer an amendment under that heading also—a judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. SAYERS. Does it embrace the same subject-matter?

Mr. BOWERS of California. It embraces one of the Indian depredation claims reported from the Court of Claims.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, in order that the bill may be symmetrical appropriations should be made in the following order: For the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, next for the payment of judgments of the United States courts, and then follow the judgments in Indian depredation claims.

Mr. PICKLER. The amendment I have offered relates to the judgments in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HERMANN. I shall move to strike out the amount in that paragraph, and insert the additional amount necessary to embrace the judgments in Indian depredation claims rendered by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SAYERS. I was about to state, Mr. Chairman, that I will not raise the point of order on account of the gentleman's amendment not being presented in its proper place.

Mr. PICKLER. That is right.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Then the amendment will come in in the next section?

Mr. SAYERS. Under the head of "judgments in Indian depredation claims."

Mr. HERMANN. And at that time we can discuss the entire question.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK], who is much interested in this subject, wishes to be heard upon it, and I think it will be more satisfactory to all concerned if the gentleman from Texas will consent to let this whole matter—this part of the bill covering these claims—go over until Monday.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection.

Mr. BOWERS of California. With the understanding, of course, that general debate shall then be had?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. That we are to have ample time?

Mr. SAYERS. Of course.

Mr. HERMANN. It is further understood, Mr. Chairman, and I want to see that there is no misunderstanding, that when this question comes up again it will all be considered—the amendments that are proposed and all—under the head of "Indian depredation claims."

Mr. HARTMAN. Without any right being waived?

Mr. SAYERS. Of course.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the clause beginning on page 61 with line 21, and ending with line 4 on page 62, be passed over until Monday, with the understanding that gentlemen may have an opportunity to offer amendments as indicated to this particular clause, making appropriations for the payment of judgments that have been already rendered in what are known as Indian depredation cases by the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HERMANN. Meanwhile, I give notice that I will offer an amendment when that particular clause is reached.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I would like to have a word in explanation of this matter. I have noticed heretofore in making these agreements to let a particular section go over, that after we have got through with the reading of the bill amendments have been stopped on the other clauses by bringing in a rule, or something of the kind, that shuts them out.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman knows that I have never done anything of the kind. He knows that I will carry out in good faith any understanding that may be had.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I know the chairman will. I am satisfied that will be the case.

Mr. TAWNEY. It gives to any member the right to offer amendments here, as I understand it?

Mr. SAYERS. To that particular clause, of course, it does.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to give notice that I intend to offer an amendment, in the event of the failure to insert certain amendments in this clause, to strike out the paragraph. I wish that right to be reserved.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And at that time I shall give my reasons for the motion.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it understood that we are to offer amendments to page 61, the paragraph under the head of "Judgments in Indian depredation claims," rather than under the head "Judgments of the Court of Claims?"

Mr. SAYERS. That is the understanding—that is, beginning with line 21 on page 61 and ending with line 4 on page 62.

Mr. PICKLER. Then, at the proper time I will reoffer the amendment which has been read in part by the Clerk.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, just one word. Is it understood that these amendments must all be offered at this time?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. They can be offered on Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] asks unanimous consent to pass over the portion of the bill beginning with line 21, on page 61, and ending with line 4, on page 62, and that all gentlemen having amendments proposing to pay judgments of the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, be permitted to offer those amendments to that section. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] for information, if the item in regard to United States judgments covers a judgment in favor of Thomas Fletcher, marshal of the eastern district of Arkansas, for $3,207.16 and $8.10 costs?

Mr. SAYERS. I am informed that it does, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TERRY. It was duly certified to you by the Attorney-General, was it not?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. And is included in this?

Mr. SAYERS. I am so informed by the clerk of the committee.

Mr. TERRY. With that understanding I will offer no amendment.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 9, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 9, after line 22, by inserting:
"For post-office and court-house at Bay City, Mich., for completion of brick walk, $1,100."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 9, to insert the amendment reported by the Clerk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to offer another amendment, to come in on page 53.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 53, before line 9, insert:
"To pay Clifford Lucas, for additional compensation for services as messenger under the Clerk during first and second sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $100."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection——

Mr. TAWNEY. I object, unless the chairman of the committee will also include an amendment which I have, providing for the payment of $500 to Mr. L. M. Olson, of Winona, Minn., and a messenger in the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman raises a point of order it must prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is objected to.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I believe the entire bill has been completed, with the exception of three amendments which have been offered, one by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], one by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH], and one by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON]; and also the clause known as the Indian depredation clause. The bill has been completed with the exception of those four matters, three amendments and one clause of the bill. Now, inasmuch as gentlemen who are interested in those amendments and that clause are desirous that they shall be considered on Monday, or on Tuesday if the bill should not come up before then, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement will not preclude other amendments to that section, will it?

Mr. SAYERS. No, all amendments to pay judgments on Indian depredation claims will be in order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. That matter is open for amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. We may offer all the amendments we like to that clause?

Mr. SAYERS. To pay Indian depredation claims. Of course this understanding does not include amendments for other purposes, except those which are strictly germane to those judgments. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] insist on his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will include my amendment, I will not.

Mr. SAYERS. I can not do that. The committee has not examined that matter yet, and the amendment which I wish to offer is meritorious.

Mr. TAWNEY. This has been before the Committee on Accounts, and would have been reported to the committee——

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman the difficulty under which he labors, and I do not think he ought to insist upon his proposition. The trouble is that the gentleman's amendment should have gone to the Committee on Accounts and have been reported to the Committee on Appropriations for action. Now, the gentleman has failed to get any action on his amendment by the Committee on Accounts, and I do not think it is quite fair to the other amendment that he should insist upon an amendment which ought to have first gone to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement in regard to this proposed amendment of mine?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I introduced a resolution at the beginning of the extra session of this Congress which went to the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts has had it under consideration. The subcommittee, to which it was referred, made a favorable report to the committee and the committee was to have disposed of it last week, but the chairman of the subcommittee that had it under consideration was not present. He is out of the city and they could not dispose of it at that meeting in time to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say this to my friend, that if the Committee on Accounts will report the matter favorably to the Committee on Appropriations when the next general deficiency bill comes up, we will consider it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman do that, and have it put on the deficiency bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not control the committee, but we will consider it.

Mr. TAWNEY. This gentleman was a messenger in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses. He had the misfortune to lose both his hands. Immediately after the adjournment of the Fifty-second Congress, on the 4th of March, the Doorkeeper of the House discharged this man and paid the salary due him from the 4th of March to the 7th of August to a man who never saw the Capitol or performed a day's service for the Government. Now, the subcommittee for that reason decided to report the resolution favorable to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman if the matter is reported to the Committee on Appropriations it shall receive fair consideration.

Mr. TAWNEY. With that understanding, I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the amendment of Mr. SAYERS was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BYNUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

AGREEMENT WITH YUMA INDIANS.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to transmit to the House a duly attested copy of the Senate bill 1919, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians in California for the cession of their surplus lands and for other purposes," to take the place of the original copy, which has been accidentally misplaced.

The resolution was agreed to.

VENTILATION.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report, which will take but five minutes. I do not propose to ask any action, but there is a report and resolution from the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics that I desire to submit. I would like to have it read from the desk and then printed in the RECORD; and I give notice that it will be called up by the chairman of the committee in a few days after it shall have appeared in the RECORD, after members shall have had an opportunity to read it.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if the committee have reported and had printed the evidence alleged to have been taken by the committee in this matter.

Mr. WALKER. The evidence is not concluded, and it was not thought advisable to print it at the present time.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me it would give more information to the House if we could have the evidence than it would to have the resolution and report of the committee. If that is not to be done, I shall have to object to receiving the report at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to printing this resolution and report in the RECORD?

Mr. PAYNE. I do.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the gentleman will let it go over until Monday. This is a privileged report, and I wanted to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PAYNE. How is it a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that if it presents a privileged matter it would come up for immediate consideration. The gentleman from Massachusetts, however, asks unanimous consent that the report and resolution be read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WALKER. The chairman will call it up at some subsequent time; in a week or ten days from now.

Mr. PAYNE. I object, unless we can have the evidence.

Mr. WALKER. I ask, then, that the report and resolution be printed in the RECORD, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics.

Mr. PAYNE. But members desire to know what this committee is doing, and what is meant by these comments in relation to the ventilation of this House, and they especially desire to have the evidence.

Mr. WAKLER. The evidence is incomplete, but when it is completed, at the proper time it will be printed. At present the committee is not prepared to print it, and they think it would be an injustice to the parties interested to print the evidence until the whole case is made up. It is ex parte evidence thus far, and I do not think it would be fair to the Architect of the Capitol to print it in an incomplete form. The committee desire to do him no injustice, but wish to treat him fairly in every respect.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me that it would be a great deal fairer to the Architect to have the evidence printed as it is, so as to show what has taken place before the committee and to enable members to make their own comments on it.

What I desire is to have the evidence come in with this report, and then, if the evidence is not complete, this committee is certainly not prepared to make this report.

Mr. WALKER. Then I shall amend that by moving that the evidence be printed with the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman modifies his motion so as to include an order to print the testimony.

Mr. WALKER. I move to recommit the resolution, and that the report be printed in the usual form, and that the testimony be printed with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that motion will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5806) to authorize the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct and maintain a wagon bridge over the Mississippi River; and

A bill (S. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. EVERETT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence from Monday to Wednesday inclusive, on grounds of health.

Mr. CAMPBELL, on motion of Mr. TRACEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

The House then, on motion of Mr. SAYERS, (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on the District of Columbia was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7502) authorizing the sale of title of United States to a tract of land in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, to William H. and George Bobinger, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COBB of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7559) to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GRADY: A bill (H. R. 7560) to fix the standard and regulate the quality and price of gas within the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALL of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 7561) to remove from the rolls of the Army the charge of desertion against Neil Patton, late of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, and to grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOSES: A bill (H. R. 7562) granting a pension to Tenderson Smith—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REYBURN: A bill (H. R. 7563) for the relief of Lepine C. Rice, assignee of Robert Erwin, of Savannah, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALDWIN: Protest of citizens of Duluth, Minn., against the passage of House bill 7125—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BOEN: Protest of Lutheran Church, by H. Johnson, pastor, of Norman County, Minn., against changing the preamble of the Constitution—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of 150 citizens of Salina, Kans., for the suppression of lotteries in Kansas City, Kans.—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ENLOE: Petition of N. A. Farnsworth, administrator of Ebenezer Barkley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HERMANN: Resolutions of Oregon State Grange, for election of Senators by the people and for free coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. REYBURN: Petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, in favor of the Manderson-Hainer bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, papers to accompany House bill 7554—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAWNEY: Petition of George J. Hillyer and other citizens of Winona, Minn., and officers and members of Pioneer Council, No. 300, Royal Arcanum, praying for certain amendments to the tariff bill relative to fraternal beneficiary organizations—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TYLER: Papers to accompany House bill 7556—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 25, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art King of kings and Lord of lords, we pray that Thy blessing may rest upon our sister Republic, bound to us by strong ties of gratitude and affection, which at this moment is stirred to its very depths by a heinous crime, almost unparalleled in history. Grant unto the people of that nation wisdom, intelligence, self-control, submission to authority; and may those who are in charge of the state have the guidance and direction of Thy Holy Spirit, that they may be led into wise counsels and prompt action in the adoption of most salutary and admirable expedients.

We pray, O Lord, that Thy heavenly consolation may be vouchsafed to the widow and children who are bereft by this frightful calamity; and grant, O Lord, that the enemies of mankind who are inflicting atrocities upon the nations may be restrained by Thy Providence, helping the good men of every nation to act in such a way as that this enormity shall be stamped out from the face of the earth.

Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord, our rulers and our people from the dangers to which they are exposed, and may we return in quietness and peace to dwell in conservatism, and in accordance with the laws of the land and the laws of God.

May the grace of our Father in Heaven rest upon us, upon our afflicted sister country, and upon all lands, in this extremity, so that we may come at last to the unity and brotherhood intended by Thy Son, the Ruler of the world. We pray through His hallowed name, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT CARNOT.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the duty devolves upon me as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate to make the saddest announcement that can be made to the American people in respect of any event outside of their own borders. It is the death by assassination of President Carnot, of the Republic of France. In view of that very impressive and alarming event, at which the nations of the earth will feel a serious shock, I present for the consideration of the Senate the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unites with the American people in expressing to the people of France their sorrow and sympathy in the national bereavement they are suffering from the cruel blow of an assassin, which was aimed at the peace of France and fell upon the heart of President Carnot; and, as a mark of respect due to the memory of the wise, virtuous, and patriotic President of the Republic of France the Senate will, at the close of this proceeding, stand adjourned until to-morrow at 10 o'clock a. m.

2. That the President of the United States is requested to communicate this expression of national sorrow to the Government of the Republic of France and to Madame Carnot.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the grief of a national bereavement never falls upon France without exciting the sympathies of the American people. In the earliest days of this Republic France won the gratitude of the people of the United States and created a sentiment of the deepest and most sincere regard which has united the names of Washington and Lafayette in a sacred memory that is imperishable.

In the progress of both nations towards the highest attainments of civilization and government France and the United States of America have moved abreast and in the front rank of the great powers of the world without controversy or jealousy. In the noble purpose of securing to their people the blessings of liberty regulated by law and founded upon the sovereignty of the people France and the United States have achieved a common result and established immutably the true and just basis of human government.

It is not to be expected that ungrateful and vicious men will not find a pretext for license and anarchy in their daring efforts to abolish all restraints that interfere with their wicked passions and indulgences, or that they will not appeal to the sacred name of liberty as a shelter for their mischievous designs. Under forms of government less liberal towards their subjects and more repressive of the common liberties of mankind, the same pretexts for crime are found by such persons in their fierce denunciations of tyranny. But in each case government owes the duty to the people of stern and summary repression of crime, and especially all crimes that threaten the integrity of the state and the peace of the country.

President Carnot, the honest friend of liberty, regulated and supported by law, was marked as a victim by men who, being criminally insane, hold society and law in contempt and cruise through the world in the propagation of political piracy and murder. Because he loved the liberty of law he was selected for violent and brutal sacrifice, and has perished at the hands of an assassin.

Carnot came from a family of heroic men, who never faltered in their love of liberty established in justice and regulated by law. His grandfather so loved the liberty of France that he was the one senator who alone voted in the French Assembly that the First Consul was not an emperor; that France was a republic; and that imperial power was not the legitimate offspring of the French revolution. He had voted to execute Louis XVI, and he refused to restore the powers of royalty in the person of Napoleon Bonaparte.

In casting his vote against the elevation of Napoleon to imperial titles and powers, he declared "that he would vote against an empire for the same reason that he had voted against a life consulship, but without any personal animosity, and that he was quite prepared to render obedience to the Emperor should he be elected. He spoke in high praise of the American form of government, and added that Bonaparte might have adopted it at the time of the treaty of Amiens; that the abuses of despotism led to worse results than the abuses of liberty, and that, before smoothing the way to this despotism, which would be all the more dangerous because it was reared on military success, it would have been advisable to create institutions for its due repression. Notwithstanding Carnot's opposition, the motion was put to the vote and adopted." When he voted in the National Convention for the execution of Louis XVI he said: "In my opinion both justice and good policy require the death of Louis; but I must confess that never a duty weighed so heavily upon me."

The son of this great war minister of France was the father of the stricken President of the Republic. He was a pronounced republican, so pronounced, indeed, that he refused to take the oath of allegiance to Louis Napoleon as Emperor of the French, and declined a seat in the French Assembly to which he was elected during a period of voluntary exile. In the Second Empire he was classed as a socialist, but his patriotism was recognized as being devoutly sincere even by Napoleon the Third.

No man in France has inherited greater honors or a better title to the love of the French people than Marie François Sadi Carnot, and no man's life has better justified his right to the distinguished tribute to his worth bestowed upon him by France in his election to the Presidency of the Republic. His administration of the Government has been that of peace, attended with great prosperity. There is no stain of innocent blood upon his historic record. That which flowed from his pure and generous heart to appease a thirst for revenge upon society and upon government, because they reprobate the crimes of anarchists, is sacred to every human being in the world who is in harmony with the purposes of republican institutions and the desire to establish personal and national liberty on foundations, laid by the people, of the right to make their own laws and the duty of unqualified obedience to their authority. It was the highest aspiration of Carnot thus to establish justice and thus to secure liberty to France, and his death is a sacrifice to the cause he so worthily supported. America deplores the severe cost, alike to France, to Carnot, and to the cause of self-government of this noble effort.

I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I heartily approve the resolution which has been offered by the Senator from Alabama, and all that he has said in favor of its passage. The people of France and the people of the United States have been bound together by a tie of sympathy and fraternity ever since the period of our Revolution. France then created an obligation which has never been forgotten by the people of the United States. When the French people meet a great disaster such as the one which has just befallen them so suddenly in the death of President Carnot the people of the United States sympathize with them, share in their sorrow, and denounce with horror the crime which has been committed—a crime so causeless, so cruel, so merciless, that we can not express it in language. When under like circumstances a similar misfortune fell upon the people of the United States the Republic of France expressed and emphasized its sympathy. We follow its example with the confident hope and belief that unnatural crimes like this can not weaken the faith of the French people in republican institutions or impair the strength of their Republic.

I therefore heartily second the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 26, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 25, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., the Speaker in the chair.

The Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, our Father and our Friend, in life we are in the midst of death. Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble. In the morning we are like the grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth; but Thou, O God, art the same yesterday and to-day and forever, and Thine eye shall never fail. We lift up our hearts to Thee this morning to thank Thee for the preservation of our lives, for the temporal blessings conferred upon us, and for the rich provisions of Thy grace.

O Lord, may Thy blessings descend upon the people of our land, especially upon all in high places of power and authority. O Lord, defend them from all evils and keep them from the hands of the assassin. Preserve them from sickness, from danger, and from sudden death. May Thy mercy extend to our sister nations. Suppress all anarchy. Subdue all wrongdoing. Give to the people a love of order and a reverence for authority, and grant that the Prince of Peace may soon reign in every heart, to Thy name's honor and glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ASSASSINATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

The SPEAKER. The House will receive a message from the President.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the message.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The shocking intelligence has been received that the President of the French Republic met his death yesterday at the hands of an assassin. This terrible event which has overtaken a sister republic can not fail to deeply arouse the sympathies of the American nation, while the violent termination of a career promising so much in aid of liberty and advancing civilization should be mourned as an affliction to mankind.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 25, 1894.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the civilized world is shocked and sorrow-stricken by the announcement of the assassination of the President of the French Republic. He was in many respects an ideal President, and was loved and respected in his own country and regarded with confidence and admiration in other countries. His death is a serious calamity for France and for Europe, and all over our country the people are filled with sympathy and sorrow.

France is one of the great republics of the world. The relations of our country with that country are peaceful and cordial, and we should show in a marked and conspicuous manner our sorrow for the sad affliction which has fallen upon our sister republic. I therefore ask that the resolution which I now offer be adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States of America has heard with profound sorrow of the assassination of President Carnot, and tenders the people of France sincere sympathy in their national bereavement.

That the President of the United States be requested to communicate this expression of sorrow to the government of the Republic of France and to Madame Cornot; and that, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the President of the French Republic, the House of Representatives do now adjourn.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, all the people of the United States to-day share in the grief and horror of the French nation at the great calamity which has fallen upon them, and this House but expresses the universal feeling of the American people in the resolution that is proposed. It is a calamity not alone to the French people that President Carnot has been stricken down, for nations are so interdependent in this time in which we live that it is a blow felt by every lover of liberty and order in the world.

President Carnot, at the present time of critical questions pending in Europe, was a man whose personality was of grave and great importance aside from and above his political position. He was chosen in 1887, at a time when there were other and far more brilliant names presented for the Presidency—Mr. Brisson, Mr. Floquet, M. De Freycinet, and Jules Ferry—names that were known far more widely than his, but the reputation he had earned in the Chamber of Deputies (a body which exactly corresponds to the House of Representatives of the United States), by his temperate, moderate, sensible, and laborious course through years of patriotic service, had built up for him a strong name and won the confidence of all, so that he was chosen President; and it was a most hopeful sign, in this our day, that a nation believed to be the one most easily charmed with and led aside by brilliant qualities should have, in a moment of grave trial, selected as chief ruler a man who was the very embodiment of saving common sense.

He was about to be reëlected President of the republic; and at this time, when social disorder is threatened in so many places, when the interests of great nations are liable to come in conflict and plunge the world into tumult and strife, we can feel not merely personal grief and anxiety for the wanton murder of a good man fallen by the red hand of crime, but a wider sorrow for the loss of a wise statesman in such high responsible position that the whole of mankind suffered a blow when he fell.

I join with my colleague [Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky] in the expression of the sympathy which I believe every individual in this House and in the nation shares with the French people.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously adopted; and, in accordance therewith (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

Also, resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts relative to national legislation against the lottery traffic—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RITCHIE: Petition of Toledo (Ohio) Council, No. 21, Royal Arcanum, favoring exemption of fraternal beneficiary societies from the operation of the income-tax law—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 26, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 27, 1894, directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to reëxamine Treasury settlement No. 5441 of January 22, 1885, a report of the Second Comptroller in the matter; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, the original report of Maj. Clifton Comly, Ordnance Department, United States Army, dated February 17, 1894, "On the operations of the division of military engineering of the international congress of engineers, held in Chicago last August under the auspices of the World's Congress Auxiliary of the Columbian Exposition," together with the papers referred to in the report and list of contents of the same; which, on motion of Mr. MANDERSON, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a memorial of the Pharmaceutical Society, of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating rgainst an increase of the internal revenue tax on alcohol; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Michigan State Assembly, Knights of Labor, praying for the passage of the so-called Gresham bill, in regard to claims arising under the eight-hour law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of Dan J. Wilson and sundry other citizens of Jackson, Mich., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of J. S. Meier and sundry other citizens of Flint, Mich., remonstrating against an increase of the duty on wrapper tobacco beyond that provided for in the so-called Wilson tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of J. L. Allen and sundry other citizens of Kalamazoo, Mich., and the petition of David Inglis and sundry other citizens of Wayne County, Mich., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income tax of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MARTIN presented the petition of J. T. Moore, A. A. McGrew, H. B. Sparks, and sundry other citizens of Crawford County, Kans., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, praying for the passage of a bill now pending before the Congress of the United States, providing for a permanent exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition, to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in 1895; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution requesting Senators and Members of Congress to vote for and aid in the passage of a bill now pending before the Congress of the United States, providing for a Government exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in 1895.

Whereas the Cotton States and International Expositon to be held in Atlanta, Ga., during September, October, November, and December, 1895, is to be in no sense local, but is for the purpose of bringing about closer commercial relations between this country and Mexico, Central, and South America, and the West Indies, which would result in largely increasing the trade between the United States and the said countries; and

Whereas the holding of such an exposition will do great good to the entire country, and especially to the Southern States and the State of Louisiana, and such a movement should be encouraged by all persons; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Congress of the United States providing for a Government exhibit at said exposition: Therefore

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That said exposition is strongly indorsed, and the objects sought to be accomplished are worthy the active and earnest support of every Southern State.

Be it further resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State are urgently requested to vote for and aid in every possible way to secure the passage of the said bill in Congress providing for said Government exhibit at said exposition.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this preamble and of these resolutions be duly certified and forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

G. W. BOLTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
H. R. LOTT,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Approved June 22, 1894.

MURPHY J. FOSTER,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

[SEAL.]

T. S. ADAM, Secretary of State.

Mr. PROCTOR presented the petition of H. R. Conger and sundry other citizens of Burlington, Vt., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Walsh County, N. Dak., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented sundry petitions of citizens of Hughes County, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for a substantial protective tariff rate on wool; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I present sundry resolutions adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Massachusetts, copies of which have been furnished to the Chair. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that he has copies of the resolutions before him and intended to lay them before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts; which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, in the year 1894.

Resolutions relative to the appointment and removal of veterans in the national civil service.

Whereas a bill is now pending before Congress "to insure preference in appointment, employment, and retention in the public service of the United States to veterans of the late war;"

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in General Court assembled, believe it is expedient that Union veterans should be preferred to other applicants for positions in the national public service where they present equal qualifications for the discharge of their duties; and that they should be protected from removal for causes disconnected with their efficiency and faithfulness in the performance of such duties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives from this Commonwealth in the Congress of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 5, 1894.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

SENATE, June 8, 1894.

Adopted, in concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

A true copy. Attest:

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts; which were ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, in the year 1894.

Resolutions relative to national legislation for the suppression of the lottery traffic.

Whereas the lottery until recently established in the State of Louisiana has been transferred to the Republic of Honduras, where its managers propose to continue its business and to export tickets and circulars to the United States;

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of Massachusetts, in General Court assembled, respectfully urge upon Congress the enactment of legislation which will prevent so far as possible the introduction of lottery matter into the United States from foreign countries, and its transportation from State to State.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and also to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 17, 1894.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

SENATE, May 21, 1894.

Adopted, in concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

A true copy. Attest:

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR presented the following resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS in the year 1894.

Resolution concerning the extermination of the gypsy moth.

Whereas the Ocneria dispar, or gypsy moth, an insect pest, has found a lodgment in this Commonwealth, and careful and persistent work is necessary to prevent its spread over other territory of the United States, and this Commonwealth has appropriated and expended under the direction of the State Board of Agriculture large sums in the work of exterminating said pest; and said board believes that the sum of $100,000 appropriated for the year ending on the 1st day of March, in the year 1894, is insufficient to complete the extermination of said pest;

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in General Court assembled, request the Senators and Representatives from this Commonwealth in the Congress of the United States to urge upon Congress the necessity of prompt and vigorous action to exterminate said pest, and to use their influence to secure from Congress an appropriation of $100,000 to assist this Commonwealth in defraying the necessary expenses of the work.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 17, 1894.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

SENATE, May 21, 1894.

Adopted, in concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

A true copy. Attest:

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the lottery traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts praying that an appropriation of $100,000 be made for the extermination of the gypsy moth; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, praying that preference in appointment, employment, and retention in the public service of the United States be given to veterans of the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2070) to provide for the restoration to the State of Michigan two flags carried by the Twenty-second Michigan Infantry Volunteers and now in the War Department, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 14th instant, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. VILAS on the 11th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

LOUIS A. YORKE.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke, to report it favorably, and I ask that it be acted upon. A similar bill has heretofore passed the Senate, and I desire to get it to the House of Representatives.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the action of the board by which Passed Assistant Paymaster Louis A. Yorke was examined for promotion be set aside and declared null and void; and the President is hereby authorized to appoint him to the office to which he would have been promoted but for said action, and to retire him in that grade as of the date he was wholly retired, charging him with all extra pay and allowances paid him at that time: Provided, That he shall not receive or be entitled to any pay, compensation, or allowance whatever prior to appointment under this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2161) to increase the pension of Graham McClossen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

COLUMBIA RIVER QUARANTINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence and reports in the Department, and all information he may possess concerning the importance of and urgency for the establishment of a quarantine hospital at or near the mouth of the Columbia River, and to inform the Senate whether any Congressional action is necessary concerning the same.

PERSONS ENGAGED IN PROTECTED INDUSTRIES.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 448 on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are, or may be claimed to be, affected by tariff legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the resolution read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN May 15, 1894, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are, or may be claimed to be, affected by tariff legislation; the total number of persons engaged in such industries whose wages are not or will not be affected by tariff legislation, and the proportion of the population of the United States who depend upon the foreign market for the sale of their products, classifying such industries respectively; such information to be based on the census of 1890. Also, that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and required to inform the Senate of the total number of such persons who are native-born citizens of the United States of America, the total number who are naturalized citizens, and the total number of such persons who are aliens; and at what ratio, if any, alien mechanics and laborers have been taking the place of native and naturalized citizens of the United States in the protected industries of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that I object to the consideration of the resolution, but it seems to me that it asks for information which it would be absolutely impossible for any officer of the Government to furnish. As was suggested by some Senator on a former occasion when the resolution was before the Senate, if anyone is to supply the information it ought to be the Superintendent of the Census rather than the Secretary of the Treasury.

As I said a moment ago, I do not know that I object to the consideration of the resolution, but my present inclination is to move to refer it to the Committee on Finance. If the resolution is considered I give notice that I shall make that motion.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the resolution be considered. I do not understand the Senator from New Hampshire to object to its consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, resumed the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that there is a motion pending to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope Senators on the other side of the Chamber will permit the resolution to go through. I understand the information to be in the Treasury Department. If it is not there, the resolution does no harm. If it is there, it strikes me that the Senate and the country ought to know it. This is the fourth or fifth time that I have undertaken to get consideration of the resolution. I am not pressing it for any partisan purpose; I am pressing it for the desired information. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will not undertake to bury the resolution in a committee, and by that means stifle the inquiry.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I have no disposition to do that. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that he proposes to ask for information to how many people will be affected by tariff legislation. I also call his attention to the significant fact that we have not yet passed the tariff bill. In the nature of things we do not know what the tariff legislation will be. I hope it wi'l be very different from the kind the Senator from Nebraska w ll probably vote for.

I did not know that there was a motion pending to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance. I should have made such a motion myself if it had not been pending. I hope the resolution will be referred to that committee for consideration and report.

Mr. ALLEN. Information of this kind was furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1886, and it is information that I look upon as very valuable. There is a precedent for a resolution of this kind, and I can not see why Senators should object to its consideration at this time and not permit it to go through.

Mr. MORRILL. The resolution really requires amendment. I made the motion on a former occasion to refer it to the Committee on Finance with no purpose of burying the resolution in the Committee on Finance, but it really deserves to be amended. For instance, take the question where one man in a family of five is employed in a manufactory that has received protection; should he and his family be included, or only one? There are a great many other points in the resolution. Anyone who will examine it will see that it would be certainly proper to have it amended.

Take some villages that are supported by and dependent entirely upon a manufacture of some article of commerce, the question arises, how many are there affected by it? Then the question arises, what will you call protected manufactures? Are they agricultural products or manufactured products, and what products are receiving protection?

Certainly the resolution should be amended by the Committee on Finance, where both parties are represented. The Senator from Nebraska has drawn the resolution so that it suits him, of course, but I do not think it will be regarded as a fair proposition by anyone on either side of the question of protection or nonprotection. The resolution surely ought to be considered and amended by the proper committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I could not hear what the Senator from Vermont said. I do not know what he did say, and therefore I do not know whether his remarks call for reply from me. But I do want to say to Senators on the other side that this is the fourth time, I think, I have undertaken to call up the resolution and get some action of the Senate upon it, and each time there has been a dilatory motion of some kind made or an objection interposed. While I have no desire whatever to employ any law of retaliation, I do propose, if this resolution can not go through, that the business which is done here in the morning hour shall be done in its order if I am in the Chamber—that nothing shall be taken up by unanimous consent when I am here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays; but first, as there appears to be a lack of a quorum, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. VEST. I should like to hear the resolution read.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the roll be called first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the lack of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Bate,	Frye,	Martin,	Teller,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Vest,
Blackburn,	George,	Mitchell, Oregon	Voorhees,
Call,	Hale,	Morrill,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pasco,	Washburn,
Coke,	Irby,	Patton,	White.
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Davis,	Lindsay,	Perkins,
Dolph,	McLaurin.	Platt,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to their names. No quorum is present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. HUNTON, and Mr. HILL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], with the liberty of voting to make a quorum. For the present I withhold my vote.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], with the privilege of voting to make a quorum. I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. CALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand that there is no quorum voting. Under my pair I am entitled to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Having reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN. I understand there is no quorum, and as I reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. If necessary to make a quorum I have the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have a right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hale,	Perkins,	Shoup,
Dolph,	Higgins,	Platt,	Teller,
Frye,	Manderson,	Proctor,	Washburn.

NAYS—27.

Allen,	Coke,	Jarvis,	Pasco,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Berry,	George,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Harris,	McLaurin,	Voorhees,
Blanchard,	Hill,	Martin,	Walsh,
Call,	Hunton,	Mills,	White.
Cockrell,	Irby,	Mitchell, Wis.

NOT VOTING—42.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Roach,
Brice,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Smith,
Butler,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Squire,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Camden,	Gray,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Vest,
Carey,	Hawley,	Patton,	Vilas,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Power,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Kyle,	Quay,
Dixon.	Lodge,	Ransom.

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

CLAIMS FOR INSURANCE PAID ON VESSELS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am authorized by the Committee on Claims to report a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution reported by him, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to cause the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to reëxamine the Treasury settlements made in 1884 and 1885 and numbered 5000, 5085, 5201, 5300, 5303, 5363, and 5368, heretofore certified to Congress for appropriation in favor of the respective claimants for insurance paid by them on vessels, and to submit the reasons for the certification, together with a detailed statement of the facts upon which each originated; and report the same to Congress in a manner similar to the report submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, January 31, 1891 (printed in Senate Executive Document No. 98, second session Fifty-third Congress), in regard to certain other Treasury settlements certified to Congress for appropriation at the same time.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the Senator asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the request.

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I ask that the resolution may be laid before the Senate to-morrow morning.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo.; and

An act (S. 499) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 55, line 7, on page 171, after the word "securities," it is proposed to strike out "except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation."

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in charge of this portion of the bill, an amendment on page 171, line 8, after the words "United States," to strike out the word "as," and insert the words "the principal and interest of which;" so as to read, "except such bonds of the United States, the principal and interest of which are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation," the object being that the bill, if it shall become a law, will show on its face that both the principal and the interest are exempt from Federal taxation.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw the amendment which I offered on Saturday last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to say in withdrawing the amendment that one of my objects in offering it was to call the attention of the country to the fact that this exemption, which seems to be a necessary one under the law, at least I am disposed to conceive it to be necessary at this time, takes out from the operation of the act $635,000,000 worth of property represented in Government bonds, the point being that it is claimed that this income-tax provision is designed for the purpose of reaching the wealth of the country and equalizing taxation. It is said that the wealthy men of the country have their money so invested that they can not be reached by other methods or systems of taxation, and that the object of the income-tax provision is to reach that class of people; but as it stands, it is impotent for that purpose, and $365,000,000 are necessarily exempt from its provisions.

I move to amend in the same section by adding, after the word "taxation," in line 9, the words "and except the bonds of any State, county, municipality, or town."

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from New York that the bonds issued by the United States in aid of the Pacific railroads are not exempt by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HILL. I so understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. And therefore I think the amount of those bonds ought to be included. I understand the amount of the bonds of the Pacific railroads is included in this six hundred and some odd millions.

Mr. HILL. No, sir; they are not.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only bonds exempt from the income tax are those issued under the funding act of 1861.

Mr. HILL. There are some $64,000,000 of bonds issued in aid of the several Pacific railroads, and those are open to taxation as the bill now stands, and properly so, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "taxation," in line 9, section 55, it is proposed to add, "and except the bonds of any State, municipality, or town."

Mr. HILL. The object of the amendment appears from a bare statement of the amendment itself. It was stated in the brief debate had upon this question last Saturday that one of the reasons why the Government ought not to tax Government bonds is that it necessarily decreases the value of those bonds, aside from any other question which might arise in regard to repudiation. The propriety of exempting the bonds of any State, county, municipality, or town, it seems to me, is clear. In the first place, such a taxation necessarily decreases and diminishes the value of those bonds. It is a direct attack by the General Government against the States and against the administration of the States.

When I say "States" I mean to include the subdivisions of the States, namely, counties, municipalities, and towns. The right of the State to float its own bonds, and thereby I mean to include all these county, municipality, and town bonds, ought to be clear. In the first place, nearly all the Government bonds of the country—in fact, all the Government bonds which can strictly be called such, because the Pacific railroad bonds are not distinctly such—are exempt from taxation by the terms of the pending bill and by law. It seems to me that in justice to the States the same privilege should be accorded to them, namely, that the States should have the right to float their bonds without any governmental taxation.

I am not here prepared to say that technically the power of the Federal Government to tax the income from such bonds may not exist. It has not been decided by any express authority. I think there is considerable doubt about the constitutional right of the Federal Government to tax the income from those bonds. As it has been said before, the right to tax involves the right to destroy, and the Federal Government has no power, either directly or indirectly, to destroy the bonds of a State. If it can diminish their value, then it can destroy them.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Do I understand the Senator from New York to say that there has been no direct decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, as far as he is advised, to the effect that Congress has no power to impose a tax upon State or municipal securities?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am under the impression that there have been several decisions directly in point upon this question, against the power. I think I can find them.

Mr. HILL. Of course, it was held that the General Government had a right to impose a 10 per cent bank tax, which was a tax upon the institutions of the States. Indirectly it was a tax upon the banks of the States, being a tax upon their circulation. That, however, was held not upon the ground we are now discussing, but upon the broad ground that the General Government under the Constitution being vested with the power to create a uniform currency, therefore, by virtue of that power, which superseded all others, Congress had the right in its discretion to tax the circulation of State banks.

But the decision is not placed upon the particular ground of the right to tax the bonds themselves as the creatures of the State government. It was simply upon the ground that the General Government, being vested with the power to create a national currency, and as the State currency more or less conflicted with it, therefore the General Government had the right to do it. That is the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wallace, 533. That is not an authority for this power.

Now, aside from the question of the exercise of a doubtful power, it strikes me that in justice to the States, which we all represent here upon this floor, as we are representatives of the States as well as of the nation, and the proposed law will bear harshly upon the States, we ought to leave to the States and to the subdivisions of the States also the right to issue bonds, and that they should not be subjected to Federal taxation. As a matter of propriety, I do not think it wise in framing a bill of this character that we should seek to fill it full of doubtful questions, which must go to the courts to be disposed of.

This is all I propose to say at present upon the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the question which was before the Senate when we adjourned Saturday was a very different one from that now presented. It was then contended by the Senator from New York that United States bonds should be taxed by the bill.

Mr. HILL. No; that the income from United States bonds should be taxed, where the law, as I then understood it, only specified that the bonds themselves shall be exempt.

Mr. VEST. Very good; I will take it as the Senator has modified it, that the income on United States bonds should be taxed.

Mr. HILL. Yes; where only the bonds themselves are exempt by statute.

Mr. VEST. The contention then was that no law could be found which exempted from taxation principal and interest of United States bonds.

Mr. HILL. I made no such contention.

Mr. VEST. It was made upon the other side of the Chamber. That law was found, and that question was disposed of. I take it for granted that no Senator here wishes to put a tax upon bonds, the principal and interest of which, by the law of their issuance, are exempt from taxation. That is settled.

Now, the Senator from New York proposes to exempt, in the pretended interest of States and muncipalities, the immense amount of indebtedness in this country which is represented by the bonds of cities, towns, and States. It is apparent on the statement of the question that that is not in the interest of the States or municipalities. They issue bonds; they are sold upon the market; they go into the hands of holders.

The uestion now before the Senate is whether those holders shall not pay their proportion of the burden imposed by the proposed law. Upon page 188, in section 54, which is put in as a substitute for sections 59, 60, and 61, it will be found that States, counties, and municipalities are exempt from the 2 per cent tax upon their net profits with other corporations; and there is also a pending amendment, which I suppose will be adopted——

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, if he will permit me, what are the net profits of States, counties, and municipalities?

Mr. VEST. I do not know that there would be any net profits, unless it should be said that what they had in their treasuries over and above their operating expenses would be considered as profits. But whether there be any profits or not, that question is removed from all doubt and discussion by the absolute provision of the proposed law. An amendment is pending, as I was proceeding to observe, which exempts the profits of all corporations, their bonded or other indebtedness. So we are remitted to the simple question whether the holders of bonds of cities, towns, and States should not pay the 2 per cent tax with the rest of their fellow-citizens.

There is no good reason why they should be exempt. Take a millionaire, who invests his immense fortune, fifty or a hundred million dollars, in State or municipal securities; shall he be exempt? What would be the result of such legislation? It would be to place an enormous premium upon these securities in contradistinction with other securities of the country. I take it if the income tax is to be defended at all, it should be defended upon the ground of placing an equal burden upon all the people of this country; in other words, that the protection given by the Government to the property of the citizen should be met by a tax upon the citizen, no matter what property he may hold, unless it be within the exemptions of the bill for benevolent, charitable, or educational purposes.

Now, what argument can be made that the holder of State or city bonds, which have been put upon the market and sold and the money received by the State or municipality, and expended by it, should be exempt from taxation? Is that not an investment? Is that not as much an investment as any other which can be made by the citizen? I can not conceive where there is anything in the shape of an equity which should prevent such securities from sharing the common fate under this measure given to all others.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed, and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri begs the question. He refers to that clause in the proposed amendment which provides that "nothing herein contained shall apply to States, counties, or municipalities," and seems to desire us to infer from that clause that some special favor has been granted to the States, counties, and municipalities by reason of it. None has been accorded. What have the States, counties, and municipalities, which they themselves own, which could be taxed?

Their property consists simply of their real estate; it consists of the revenues which they derive by taxation for the support of their respective localities; and you can not under the Constitution tax their real estate, in this way at least. They have nothing else to tax. Therefore this exemption adds nothing to their constitutional rights and takes nothing away. It confers no special privileges upon them. But the attack upon the States is made in this indirect way by providing that their bonds shall be subject to taxation.

Mr. President, we are not only legislating for bonds which have already been issued by States, counties, and municipalities, but we are now legislating in regard to the income derived from future bonds. Will the Senator tell me that the clause in the bill which virtually allows the income from that class of securities to be taxed will not greatly diminish the value of those bonds when they are sought to be put upon the market? If it be fair and right that the General Government's bonds should be exempt from this provision (and I am not now discussing the question of the original fairness or the propriety of that proceeding; it is so denominated in the bonds, and I am not quarreling with that provision), it seems to me, even though there may be a constitutional right to tax, which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] very much doubts, yet that as a matter of propriety, State, county, and municipal bonds should also be exempted.

Mr. President, the mere fact that a millionaire may own a large number of bonds and that he ought to be taxed is no argument upon this question. A millionaire may own a large number of Government bonds and he ought to be taxed.

Mr. VEST. There is a contract in that case.

Mr. HILL. But we are now making a new contract substantially, because we are now making a law which is to apply to the future issue of State bonds. When, for instance, A bought a year ago $10,000 worth of State bonds of New York, of course he bought them under the idea and theory that they would not be subject to Federal taxation of this character. It is true there is no contract which prevents the Government doing so, but how will it be in regard to future bonds which the State governments may seek to negotiate?

With this provision staring them in the face, will not the States find great difficulty, except with increased rates of interest, in floating their bonds? I submit that in justice to the States, where you are taking away from them these vast fields of revenue, you ought to leave them something, and the right to float their own bonds, free and exempt from this species of governmental taxation, ought to exist.

I submit it will make but very little difference to the parties who own the bonds. I answer the Senator's argument in this way: that it will make but very little difference to those who hereafter purchase such bonds; but when the States, counties, and municipalities proceed to negotiate their bonds in the future they will find that the bonds have fallen in value just by reason of this very provision. The people who buy the bonds will insist upon higher rates of interest to overcome the tax which we are imposing by the terms of the bill.

Mr. HIGGINS. I suggest to the Senator from New York that thereby it will increase the State taxation to meet the interest upon the bonds.

Mr. HILL. Of course that is so. State taxation and county taxation and municipal taxation will be increased, because they all stand upon the same basis. In the first place, it is a doubtful constitutional power. But I am not disposed to press that question. In the second place, as a matter of propriety it ought not to be done, when all your Government bonds are exempt under a contract made years ago, with which I am not quarreling; let bygones be bygones. All the bonds which may be issued in the next six months, as it is anticipated by some that bonds will be issued, will be exempt from this class of taxation. If any Senator's own State wants to negotiate some bonds, your own town or municipality, what reason is there for subjecting those bonds to this new taxation, which will more or less diminish the value of the bonds and increase the rate of interest?

Mr. President, the true theory of the Government is that the States, whether they are limited in the contract or not, can not tax a Government bond. I am not now speaking of the question of interest; that is a different question; but the broad principle is asserted by the General Government, regardless of the question of contract, regardless of what the statute is under which they were issued, is that the States can not tax Government securities. The principle is what I am speaking of. I say a broad reciprocity on the other hand ought to exist, namely, that when the Federal Government is framing a system of Federal taxation it ought to exempt State, county, and municipal bonds and place them upon an equality, so that the States will not be compelled in the markets of the world or the markets of the country to negotiate their bonds at a higher interest. It seems to me this is fair and right; and whether it did or did not occur to the Finance Committee in the original framing of the bill, is a matter of no consequence. The question now is, Does it not meet the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from New York permit me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Has the Senator examined the question whether the United States can tax the income of a bond which by the statute has been made exempt from taxation; in other words, whether the State can exempt its bonds from all taxation?

Mr. HILL. I have no doubt the State can do it, and that if the State has done it in any particular instance it is beyond the constitutional power of the Government to tax it directly or indirectly.

Mr. PLATT. The States when they issue bonds——

Mr. HILL. Sometimes do that.

Mr. PLATT. Exempt them from taxation as a usual thing, but whether they go so far as to say in the statute "all taxation, State and Federal," I doubt. I understand that it is conceded that you can not oblige an individual to incorporate in his taxable income the salary which he derives from a State. Now, the States in some respect are independent and sovereign. As to their management, as to their autonomy they are independent and sovereign. For some purpose a State deems it necessary to issue a loan. How far can it go in exempting that loan from taxation by the Federal authority? I have not investigated the question; I thought perhaps the Senator from New York had done so.

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; I have investigated it, allow me to say right here, in my own State. I know numerous instances where bonds have been issued under the authority of the State by municipalities. I know in the city of Brooklyn for the erection of armories several hundred thousand dollars of bonds were issued, and by the terms of their issue they were declared to be exempt from all taxation. Of course I am free to say they did not have in view at that time any Federal taxation. But I submit that where by the terms of the act under which the bonds are issued the Federal Government has no right to tax those bonds where it is provided they shall be exempt from taxation. In other words, we do not tax the salaries of State officers, county officers, municipal officers. Why? Because it is held expressly by the Supreme Court that they are a part of the means or instrumentality of a State government by which to conduct its affairs, and as each State has the right to borrow money, as each municipality is invested with power to borrow money, and therefore the power to issue bonds, the right to protect those bonds from Federal taxation, it seems to me, is a power that must clearly exist.

Mr. HIGGINS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from New York that in one sense it is true the power to tax is a power to destroy. There is no limit upon the discretion as to the amount of tax, which could be laid as heavily as you please, and therefore the power of the State to borrow, which may be indispensable for the proper conduct of business and affairs, is thus subject to this measure. It seems to me under our Federal system an impairment of sovereignty is contrary to our theory and system of government, and it might prove destructive of the ability of the States to conduct their affairs.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New York whether in his opinion the law which exempts Government bonds from taxation was intended to include or does include taxation of the interest derived from the bonds? I have here the statute of February 25, 1862, providing for the issuance of a large number of 5-20 bonds and the first issue of greenbacks, and I will read the language of the act.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me right there? The original act under which bonds were issued and the acts usually, prior to about 1870, specified that the bonds themselves should be exempt from taxation, but they said nothing in regard to the interest. In 1870 and about that time, as was explained by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on Saturday, all the bonds were refunded, and it was then provided in the refunding act that both the principal and the interest should be exempted, and all the bonds now outstanding, with the exception of the Pacific Railroad bonds, have been issued under those refunding acts, the bonds amounting to $635,000,000. So there is no escape, it strikes me, from the exemption which has already been placed in exempting that class of Government bonds; in fact, exempting of Government bonds except the bonds issued in aid of the Pacific railroads, which, of course, are not technically Government bonds.

Mr. PEFFER. I think it is important that we have this matter disposed of now, and I will read the language of the original act of February 25, 1862:

> And all stocks, bonds, and other securities of the United States held by individuals, corporations, or associations within the United States, shall be exempt from taxation by or under State authority.

I understand the Senator from New York to claim that the funding act of 1870 provides that there shall be no taxation of the interest. I will see in a moment how that is.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in the act of 1870, which the Senator has before him.

Mr. PEFFER. I have the act, but I have not yet found the exemption.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator want the exemption in the act of 1870?

Mr. PEFFER. I have the act of 1870, but I do not find the exemption.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is in the middle of the first section of the act of July 14, 1870. Shall I read it to the Senator?

Mr. SHERMAN. He has it.

Mr. PEFFER. It is as follows:

> All of which several classes of bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempted from the payment——

Mr. CHANDLER. That is it.

Mr. PEFFER—

> Shall be exempted from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority, and the said bonds shall have set forth and expressed upon their face the above specific conditions, and shall, with their coupons, be made payable at the Treasury of the United States.

That, I see, covers the whole case. It had not occurred to me that the interest was exempted under the funding act, but I see that I was mistaken.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any interest in making this absolutely bad bill any better, and yet I can not help saying that I hope the Senator from Missouri upon reflection will not place the States and municipalities of this country in a worse condition when they are borrowing money in the future than the United States will find itself when borrowing money. I remember very well when the act of 1870 was passed. I had forgotten about it the other day when the Senator from Missouri was speaking and I read the original income-tax law of 1862. Now it all comes to my mind that when the funding act of 1870 was passed it contained these words:

> All of which said several classes of bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempted from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any for m by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

It was distinctly understood that this exemption of the interest upon United States securities excluded a United States income tax. I suppose the Senator contends now that a United States income tax upon Government bonds would be a breach of the promise contained in the act of July 14, 1870. At any rate, I so contend, and I know that was the contention of the framers of the act.

I think the distinguished members of the Finance Committee now on the floor upon this side of the Senate will confirm my statement that the idea of an income tax was distinctly in mind and there was to be no income tax hereafter imposed upon the interest due and payable by the United States upon any of its funded loan.

That being the case, I certainly believe the Senator from Missouri upon reflection will see that it is wise to grant the same exemption from a United States income tax to State and municipal loans. The Government of the United States has the best credit of any known institution upon the face of the globe. The Government of the United States can borrow money cheaper than any State, corporation, or individual; and in order that it may borrow money cheaply it certainly does not need any exemption of this kind (which it has put in its statute book as a solemn pledge of the public faith) so much as do the States and the municipalities of this country.

Many of those municipalities, States, counties, cities, and towns find it difficult to borrow money, and they ought to be assisted as well as the Government of the United States can assist them to obtain good credit to borrow money cheaply.

It has been well shown by the Senator from New York that if this proposed income-tax law passes as applicable to future loans of municipalities, whenever hereafter a municipal loan is made the rate of interest thereon will have to be greater or the premium which will be obtained upon the sale of the securities will be less, by reason of the enactment of this income-tax law than would be the case if this income-tax law were not enacted, or if the exemption which is put into this proposed statute with reference to the income from the Government bonds were applied to the income from city, county, and other municipal securities.

Mr. President, we do not want to put this burden upon the local governments of this country. The Senator will find his bill unpopular enough, and the income tax will be odious enough under any condition. He certainly ought to desire, and I believe does desire, to make the imposition of this tax as light as possible upon the persons and corporations on whom it is to be imposed. Therefore, for the sake of the municipalities in his own State, which are borrowers of money and will hereafter be borrowers of money, for the sake of the municipalities of all the States, and for the sake of the States themselves, I hope he will see that it is no more than fair and just and equitable that if the income derived from the interest on United States certificates shall not be taxed, the income derived from State, county, and other municipal securities shall not be taxed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, this section proposes a tax of 2 per cent upon incomes of any person arising from interest derived from bonds or stocks and notes. There is no limitation. It applies to the bonds of municipal corporations as well as the bonds of private corporations. It relates to the bonds issued by a county, by a city, and by a State. Even were there no constitutional inhibition I would entirely agree with the contention of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]; but I do not believe there is any constitutional power in Congress to impose this tax, and for the reason I shall state. A municipal corporation is, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United State, a portion of the sovereign power of the State, and according to the same decisions is not subject to taxation by Congress upon its municipal revenues.

That was decided first in the case of the United States vs. The Railroad Company (17 Wallace, page 322), reaffirmed in the case of Stockdale vs. Insurance Company (20 Wallace, page 330), and since then in several other cases. It has been followed up and supported by the opinions of the Attorney-General to the same effect, 13th Opinions, 67, by Attorney-General Hoar; 12th Opinions, 282, by Attorney-General Stanbery, and also in 12th Opinions, 176 and 276.

If the revenues of a municipal corporation are not subject to Federal taxation directly, then they can not be impaired indirectly by levying a tax upon incomes growing out of those revenues or growing out of bonds issued by the municipal corporations.

Away back some twenty-five years ago four counties in the State of Kentucky, two counties in the State of Tennessee, the State of Kentucky itself, and the city of Louisville all became subscribers to the bonds of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company and furnished money in order to enable that company to build its road. The internal-revenue law of 1864 levied a tax of 5 per cent upon the income of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. The company declined to pay the tax on the ground that although the tax was levied upon the corporation it was really a tax upon the revenues of the holders of the bonds, and they being State, county, and municipal corporations were not subject to taxation, either directly or indirectly.

The Supreme Court of the United States sustained the company in that contention, holding that it was indirectly a tax upon the revenues of a State, county, and municipal corporation.

Mr. HOAR. I was called out for a moment when the Senator was speaking and lost the first part of his statement of the case. Will he be good enough to repeat it?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Two counties, I think, in the State of Kentucky, perhaps four in Kentucky and two in Tennessee, or vice versa, the State of Kentucky itself and the city of Louisville each and all subscribed for the bonds of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, and furnished money to enable that company to build its road. Subsequently the United States in the internal-revenue act of 1864 levied a tax of 5 per cent against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. The company declined to pay the tax upon the ground, as contended, that it was a tax not on the company, but really upon the revenues of the State, counties, and municipalities. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The United States vs. The Railroad Company (17 Wallace, 322), and again in Stockdale vs. Insurance Company (20 Wallace, 330), sustained that contention, holding that municipal corporations are portions of the sovereign power of the States and therefore their revenue is not subject to taxation by Congress.

I admit that case is not directly in point, but I contend all the same that the principle enunciated in that case to the effect that Congress has not the constitutional power which is proposed to be invoked by this provision of the bill, and for this reason: If there is no constitutional power in Congress to impose a tax directly upon the revenues of a State, county, or municipal corporation, then there is no power to do anything in the way of taxation indirectly which would in the slightest manner or to any extent whatever impair the value of the securities of that State, or county, or municipality.

As to taxation, as suggested a few moments ago by the Senator from Delaware who sits in front of me [Mr. HIGGINS], if the constitutional power exists to impose taxation it exists to the fullest extent, even to the extent of destroying the thing taxed. If Congress can levy a tax of 2 per cent, or 5 per cent, or any other per cent upon the income that grows out of bonds issued by a State or a county or a municipality, then Congress, I submit, is to that extent impairing the value of those securities, and is therefore imposing a tax which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared over and over again can not be imposed by Congress upon the revenues of a State, a county, or a municipality; and, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], it can make the borrowing of money by a municipality absolutely impossible, and there would be no limit to the power of Federal taxation.

Here is the city of Philadelphia, which is, as I understand, about to issue some ten or twelve million dollars of bonds. It has not yet been done. If this bill becomes a law, will anyone contend for a moment that those bonds can go into the money market at the same money value, the same salable value, that they would go into the money market if no such act existed? Certainly not. What, then, is the result of the proposed legislation? It is to indirectly tax the revenues of the municipalities.

I insist, therefore, that the decisions to which I have attracted attention, although not made in cases directly in point, are of that character which leads inevitably to the conclusion that there is no power to impose a tax upon the bonds of municipalities or the income arising out of them, as proposed by this section. Nor would it make any difference, in my mind, even if there were a provision in the act authorizing the issuance of the bonds that they might be subject to taxation. That would have nothing to do with the power or the lack of power on the part of the Federal Government.

Personally, I should be very glad to vote for this provision as it stands, and compel all who are able to hold the bonds of a State, or a county, or a municipality to pay taxes upon the income derived therefrom; but as I look at it, I do not believe there is any such power existing in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HILL. I realize, Mr. President, the natural anxiety of the friends of this measure for its early disposition, and I concur in the propriety of a speedy disposition of the bill. Notwithstanding all that, this is a very important question to the several States of this Union. Its importance will be apparent as time rolls on. Therefore, I must ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments longer while I refer to a decision in 17 Wallace Reports, in the case of the United States vs. The Railroad Company, page 322, which was substantially this case. The case arose under the internal-revenue act of 1864, which was one of those amendments applying to the income tax.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is one of the cases to which I referred.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Oregon read it.

Mr. HILL. I was not aware of that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I did not read from the case.

Mr. HILL. Did the Senator state what the case was?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes, I stated it was the case of the United States vs. The Railroad Company, 17 Wallace, 322.

Mr. HILL. My attention was diverted for the moment, and I did not know that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is one of the cases to which I called attention.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it strikes me there is no answer to this proposition and that it is so just and so fair that it ought to be adopted by the friends of the pending measure. It would improve the income-tax provision. I have no question about it, and I certainly think the bill ought not to be loaded up with provisions of doubtful constitutionality.

I shall not, however, trespass upon the indulgence of the Senate further at this time.

Mr. HIGGINS. I want to say just a word. The pending bill in many respects and in its income-tax provision invades the domain of the States by imposing a tax upon them, rather than relying upon customs and excises as their appropriate and adequate means of revenue, but this proposed tax on the incomes of the bonds of States, counties, and municipalities actually becomes an instrument of levying a tax through State taxation. It requires a State to raise a heavier tax by the extent of this imposition than it otherwise would in order to meet a Federal exaction. It not only invades the domain of the States, which ought to be left entirely and exclusively to the States, but it makes the States themselves, through taxation, the instrument for the collection of Federal taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about this question. The more I think about it the more I become satisfied that it will be ineffective to levy an income tax upon either the officers of the State or upon the State itself, whether the bonds be issued by the State or by the municipal authorities of the State. I think from the decisions of the Supreme Court before me the tax will be invalid.

It seems to me that it would be better to insert at once in this bill an exemption of all taxes on the salaries of officers of a State or upon the bonds issued by a State. It seems to me that the necessary agencies of a State in the conduct of its business, the management of its municipal affairs, the government of counties and townships, the power to borrow money, are indispensable, and without them local government could not be conducted, and the State government could not be conducted, as shown by the fact that every State in the Union has at one time or another borrowed money.

The right and the power in the United States to borrow money exists also among the States and the municipal corporations, and the Government of the United States has no power to cripple their right to borrow money by imposing an income tax or any other kind of tax upon them.

I am supported in my view by two decisions which I have before me, which, although not directly in point, on the whole, I think, raise a question of such doubt that we ought not to impose this tax, but should relieve the States and municipalities from it, and not assert the power to levy it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Missouri ought to accept this amendment. Why was it that in all our loans during the war we provided that our bonds should be exempt from all forms of taxation under State or municipal authority? It was the assertion of the sovereignty of our Government as to its creditors. That exemption runs through all our loan laws. We went further in the act of 1870 and provided that they should be exempt from Federal taxation.

Therefore, it seems to me that as to the power of borrowing money the States are as supreme and independent as the Government of the United States; and if we are to assert the power for ourselves, whether we assert it or not as to the States, that comity which should exist between this great Government of ours, and its several parts, the States, would require that when we are dealing with taxation, unless we are in great stress, we should say to the State, "We accord to you what we exacted from you and do exact from you when we are required to borrow money." That is all.

It can not be claimed for a moment but that this exemption as to our own bonds immensely strengthens them, and it can not be contended for a moment that the assertion of a power to tax State and municipal bonds will weaken them. Why should we do that? If we are under such great stress that we are to get into trouble with the States and municipalities, so be it, but I see no necessity for it. Therefore, I hope the Senator from Missouri will yield the point suggested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. VEST. I have yielded too many points.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the more this matter has been discussed the graver this objection to the bill as it now stands seems. I should be very sorry, indeed, for the sake of any mere present exigency in the contest over the pending bill, to have the Senate do anything which would seem to deprive for all time the United States of any particular resources of taxation, unless it has already been done by the Constitution. I hope for that very reason, without having the question absolutely determined now, the Senators in charge of the bill will allow this amendment to be adopted and the matter postponed for the judicial consideration of the future.

Of course we are shutting the United States out from a very large source of revenue, which we may need in some great public emergency, like that through which we passed in the time of the late war, if we adopt an inflexible principle that we can not tax these salaries under any circumstances.

I should like to hear from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is a trained and profound lawyer, what is the difference in principle, in his mind, if there be any, between this case and the case of Buffington vs. Day? In Buffington vs. Day it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that where the State had contracted with a certain person to perform a certain public function, the sum of money which the State had promised to pay him for that service could not be taxed by the General Government on the ground that it would deprive the State of the power to contract for such service, and so the service could not be accomplished.

What difference in principle is there between that case and the case of the State or the county borrowing money to be paid to obtain for itself that service? If we can tax the one, we can prohibit the other, and if we can tax the other, we can prohibit it; if we can make it inconvenient or expensive, we can make it impossible. The State and the United States are equal, each within its own sovereign sphere, and the Constitution points it out.

Under what authority can the United States tax the right or the power to borrow money by the State of Missouri, and deny to the State of Missouri the right to tax the money borrowed by the United States of America? We have an officer known as the highway commissioner in many of our cities and towns, and, for a salary, he undertakes the duty of keeping the roads in repair; which is an agreed and admitted function of sovereignty.

You can not under the decision in the case of Buffington and Day tax the salary which is paid to that man for doing that thing; but if the town borrows the money and does the thing itself, it is claimed you can tax the money borrowed for this same purpose; in other words, you can not tax the expenditures for performing public services if they are performed by a hired and salaried agent of the public, but you can tax the precise expenditures made for precisely the same service if the public does it itself and takes the expenditure in its own hands. I can not at this moment think of any sound distinction between the two cases. I should be very glad to hear any lawyer or any Senator on the other side point it out.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am so anxious to dispose of this bill, which has been hanging here for three months, that I have refrained, so far as my duty would permit, from making even any statement or argument, although very much provoked at times to trespass on the patience and time of the Senate. While the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was absent from the Chamber, I made a brief reply to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and did not intend to say anything more in regard to the matter.

It seems to me that the decisions of the Supreme Court do not affect this question at all. Every lawyer worthy of the name will admit that the Federal Government can not destroy the official functions of the State either by taxing the salaries of its officers, or by using the taxing or any other power in order to cripple the constitutional duties imposed upon the State governments in the autonomy of our General Government upon the whole government of the country. That is a proposition about which there will be no dispute.

But Senators, it seems to me, run that argument into absurdity, with great respect to them. They now say that you can not indirectly diminish the resources of the States by putting a tax upon bonds which they issue, or that their municipalities may issue. What is the logical and inevitable result of that statement? It is that the supreme power—I use the word "supreme" advisedly—of the General Government to carry on the General Government and raise the money necessary for the General Government, gives that Government the right to use all the property of all the citizens in all the States for that purpose.

If it be held here that we can not constitutionally tax the sureties issued by a State, the same argument will apply to other property within the State; and you must admit that the primary right to use the property of the State by the State government must first be made before the General Government can tax it. For instance, take whisky, which is taxed by the State. According to this argument, we must first wait and see what the extent of the tax put upon it by the State government will be, and let the State have a first lien, so to speak, upon all this property before the General Government can exercise what I say is its primary power of taxation without limitation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me, nobody disputes the double power of taxation, so far as Federal or State taxation is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted, I wish to ask the Senator one question, which may put the point exactly as it is in my mind. Is not the money that the State pays me for a service, for instance, as treasurer or governor or judge, just as much my property as the money that the State pays me for the use of money that I let it have for its public purposes?

Is there any distinction in that respect? If there be none, and if it is my property, the interest on my debt, or the salary of my office, it is just the same. The United States can not tax the salary, because it would make the State's performance of its public functions more expensive or more inconvenient, which is clear and is settled in the case of Buffington and Day; and you can tax the interest on money they lend. What is the distinction?

Mr. VEST. It seems to me the difference is this: You can not tax out of existence an office by taking away all of its emoluments, as would be done by the General Government if it taxed the salary of a State officer to the full extent of that salary, because then you invoke the doctrine, which I admit and every other lawyer must admit, that the Government can not tax out of existence the functions of the States, even in the exercise of its supreme power of taxing them. That would revolutionize the Government and destroy absolutely one portion of it. That goes without saying. But that argument does not apply in this case, because here are simply bonds which are not connected with official functions, bonds which are sold by the State or the municipality and the money taken into their treasury.

The question here is simply, shall these bonds, like other property belonging to individuals, bear their proportion of the common taxation which the Government, through Congress, deems necessary for the purposes of the General Government?

What does the Supreme Court say in the celebrated decision in regard to the taxation upon State banks? The court held that that tax was constitutional. Why? Because the General Government in the exercise of its power to control the finances of the United States had the right to impose that tax in order to strengthen the financial system of the General Government; in other words, the power of the General Government as to its functions was absolute and supreme. If you carry the argument which is made here to-day to its full and logical extent you would cripple the General Government and eliminate that distinctive feature as to its power, and say that the States can issue securities that are not available at all for the purposes of the General Government. What would be the result? Any State could issue securities in which its citizens might invest all their money and thus escape the burden that is imposed upon the balance of the people of the United States.

If this income tax be constitutional it ought to be equal in its terms, and it ought to operate upon all securities alike. If we should do now what we are asked to do, what would be the inevitable result? All the State and municipal securities would immediately go to an immense premium, and all the capitalists of this country would invest in them, because we should make them by act of Congress more valuable than any other investment.

I am not authorized, though Senators appeal to me, to accept this amendment. This provision was deliberately adopted in the House of Representatives and by the Finance Committee of the Senate, and I am unable to find under the old income law where it was proposed to do anything else than what we propose to do now. I am not authorized upon the appeal of anybody to give up one of the most important features of this bill, and destroy the equality which I think ought to pervade all its provisions. If the Senate see proper to overrule the committee and amend the bill as it came from the House by this radical change, of course I am bound to submit, but in any event, Mr. President, let us vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not delay the Senate more than a few minutes in calling attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, made by a judge whose authority is well recognized.

I had a great deal of trouble myself in regard to this matter. During the war, as a matter of course, we extended the taxing power probably far beyond what we should have done in time of peace, and we imposed an income tax upon the salaries of the judges of the State courts and other officers of the State governments. The Supreme Court of the United States in 1870 was called upon to consider the question as to whether it was within the power of Congress to make this levy. The general head of the decision in the case of Collector vs. Day is as follows:

> It is not competent for Congress under the Constitution of the United States to impose a tax upon the salary of a judicial officer of a State.

This was decided in 1870, and the decision was rendered by a gentleman of great reputation in this country, Mr. Justice Nelson. The particular case of the taxing of bonds issued by a State government was not before the court, but the identical subject-matter, the power to interfere with the government of a State in establishing a judicial tribunal or in collecting money for the support of the State government, or imposing taxes by issuing bonds, was necessarily involved. Here is what Judge Nelson says, and it applies just as strongly to the case before us as it did to the case then before the Supreme Court:

> The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other, within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme: but the States within the limits of their powers not granted, or, in the language of the tenth amendment, "reserved," are as independent of the General Government as that Government within its sphere is independent of the States.

Again, he says:

> Two of the great departments of the Government, the executive and the legislative, depend upon the exercises of the powers, or upon the people of the States. The Constitution guarantees to the States a republican form of government, and protects each against invasion or domestic violence. Such being the separate and independent condition of the States in our complex system, as recognized by the Constitution, and the existence of which is so indispensable that without them the General Government itself would disappear from the family of nations, it would seem to follow, as a reasonable if not a necessary consequence, that the means and instrumentalities employed for carrying on the operations of their governments, for preserving their existence and fulfilling the high and responsible duties assigned to them in the Constitution, should be left free and unimpaired, should not be liable to be crippled, much less defeated by the taxing power of another government, which power acknowledges no limits but the will of the legislative body imposing the tax.

Then he proceeds in the same line of argument to show that the judicial power exercised by the State courts was absolutely, and must be absolutely, free and independent from the control of the General Government as any other function of government. It seems to me this principle covers this case.

The case to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] refers does not apply at all. There the Supreme Court decided that the tax of 10 per cent upon State bank notes was valid; but the State banks were not agencies of the governments of the States in any sense of the word, and they did not perform any of the functions of government. They were mere creations for a certain purpose, which might be controlled and taxed by the Government of the United States. Therefore they did not stand in the same position as the power to borrow money or the power to organize courts, or the power to administer justice, or the power to arrest offenders and punish them. Those are distinct State powers.

We have no authority, it seems to me, to levy a tax upon the bonds or securities issued by State or municipal authority. It strikes me so, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment, because I believe that under the circumstances we have no power to levy this tax and ought not now to attempt to exercise it, even if we had the power. We ought not to interfere with the ordinary functions of the State governments in any way whatever; and while I do not suppose I would be regarded as a State's rights man, in the old-fashioned sense of that term, yet I do believe that we should respect all proper rights of the States, and that the General Government should not undertake to tax the securities of the States and municipal organizations so as to interfere with the proper exercise of their powers.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the question whether Congress has the power to enact a statute of this kind. I agree with the Senator from Missouri that in matters within the jurisdiction of Congress, of course Congress is absolutely supreme. But each State is as much a sovereign power in its sphere as the General Government.

I intend to vote for this amendment without reference to our power, upon the theory that as an act of courtesy we should not tax the securities of a State unless there is an absolute necessity for the revenue. That nobody will claim, and because there is no such necessity we ought not to raise the question whether we have a right to levy such a tax.

I repeat that as an act of courtesy to the States, State securities should be exempt. For that reason I shall vote for the amendment, but I do not wish to be so committed by that vote that I may not say at another time under different circumstances that the Government of the United States may go to the extent of taxing securities of the States.

Mr. HOAR. I put a question to the Senator from Missouri and his answer has not removed and indeed has not tended to remove the difficulties which were in my own mind. But I desire to say that I wish to confine myself in voting for this amendment to the reason stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], that it is not expedient to raise this question or to interfere with the money-borrowing powers of the State and municipal instrumentalities, there being no public urgency which requires it. I leave the question of absolute power to future consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were here I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay" I presume.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). Once for all for the day I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I should like to know if the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. QUAY'S name was called). I was requested to announce for the day the pair of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I desire to announce for the day my pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is absent from the city.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that my vote be recorded, as the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] I am informed would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN. Is the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] is not in the Chamber. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Squire,
Chandler,	Gray,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hale,	Perkins,	Washburn.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4701) to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEARD, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and Mr. HARMER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining "options" and "futures," and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House requested the Senate to furnish a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 1919) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians in California, for the cession of their surplus lands, and for other purposes, the original having been mislaid.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 5806) to authorize the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct and maintain a wagon bridge over the Mississippi River; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of opening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask that the antioption bill be laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR. I think that measure went to the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining "options" and "futures," and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in order to deal with this bill now and to displace the pending measure, except by unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOAR. If it is to be considered I wish to address the Senate on the question of reference.

Mr. HARRIS. The regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was not apprised as to the purpose of the Senator from Minnesota, and in order that the matter might be brought before the Senate, he laid the bill before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; it will go over for the present.

DUPLICATE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to transmit to it a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 1919) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians in California for the cession of their surplus lands, and for other purposes, to take the place of the original copy, which has been accidentally mislaid. The request of the House of Representatives will be complied with in the absence of objection.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend section 55, page 171, in line 9, by inserting after the word "taxation," the words "and except the bonds of any State;" so as to read:

Except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation and except the bonds of any State.

Mr. President, whatever may be said in regard to the propriety of exempting municipal, town, or county bonds, it appears to me that there can be no sort of doubt about the propriety of the exemption of State bonds. For every conceivable purpose the State should be placed upon an equality with the General Government. If the General Government can exempt its bonds from Federal taxation and can exempt its bonds from State taxation, the State sovereignty should have the same right and the same power, especially under a tax like the one now proposed. It strikes me that no reason can be urged why that power should not be allowed to remain in the State government if it does not already remain there under the Constitution.

I do not care to repeat what I have already said, first, that under the Federal Constitution it is a matter of grave doubt whether any right of taxation such as this exists. Whether that be true or not, the propriety of the State having a right to have its bonds exempted is manifest. I need not reiterate the argument that it affects the value of the bonds. That was the very reason why the General Government in its original act and in the funding act provided that its bonds should be free from taxation, both State and Federal. It was not simply to guard against the aggrandizement of the States. That was not it. It was to give those bonds a value, to give them a market, to make them easily negotiable in the markets of the country and the world. It is conceded that the Government can not tax these bonds directly, and what it can not do directly, it can not do indirectly. It can not tax the income of these bonds, because from the very nature of things it affects the value of the security.

Mr. President, the sovereignty of the State is equal, within its sphere, to the sovereignty of the National Government. The General Government has by law and by contract exempted from taxation $635,000,000 of its bonds, being technically all the Government bonds in existence. That very exemption, which is continued in the pending bill, gives a value to Government securities. It is a right which it seems the General Government has always exercised, a right depending upon the discretion of Congress. It strikes me that as a matter of propriety this exemption ought to be allowed, as a question of State rights, placing the two sovereignties side by side with the right of each one to make its securities equal before the law and equal before the world on a question of negotiation.

It is idle to say that this legislation does not strike at the value of State securities. It does. I have changed the amendment which before included towns, municipalities and counties. Now the broad question is presented, State rights vs. National rights. Shall the National Government step in here and be allowed to tax the incomes upon State securities?

It is said that the tax in form is against the individuals who own the bonds. So in the case in 17th Wallace the tax in form was against the railroad company, but it was held that the tax was virtually against the city of Baltimore, and that those revenues could not be diminished by Federal taxation.

The same principle, sir, exempts these bonds from governmental taxation. There will be enough legal questions arising under the bill to keep our courts busy during its term of five years without adding any more to them. I fail to see the force of the suggestion made that we ought not to tax income from these bonds because the income belongs to individuals. The Senator from Missouri made the suggestion that we have a double taxation upon whisky, and asked whether anybody raised the point that that can not be done.

Whisky is not one of the instrumentalities of a State government that I know anything about. It may be one of the instrumentalities of the State of Missouri, but it is not of my State or of any other State, I think. I do not believe the Senator thinks it is one of the instrumentalities of his State. The right of internal-revenue taxation upon a manufactured article like whisky of course exists. Nobody has disputed it. That is an entirely different question from this. Of course, there can not be a taxation upon land directly except through the forms prescribed by the Constitution. It can not be done, of course, by an income tax.

The Federal Government is now seeking through the means of an income tax to reach property which can not otherwise be reached under the existing methods or systems of taxation. As a question of propriety or justice to the States, of their rights under the Constitution, having equal sovereignty with the National Government over the question of taxation, it strikes me that there is no answer to this proposition. I know the Senator from Missouri, having charge of the bill, dislikes to accept amendments. He seems to regard it as his duty—I do not question his situation in that respect—to oppose all the amendments offered. He, of course, thinks that they are made to obstruct the bill.

I assure him this amendment is moved to perfect the bill. Will it not tend to make the bill fairer and better to defend before the people? When we go back to our constituents and tell them, "Yes; we were obliged to exempt from taxation Government bonds; we could not help ourselves; it was necessary to do it, because years ago it was so provided; besides, as a matter of propriety, it might be said that ought to be done," I think that the very first question that the zealous States-right Democrat will ask us is, "Why did you not treat your State bonds, then, in the same way?"

Our State is now about to sell certain bonds, and we are met with the allegation that the Congress at Washington has provided a tax of 2 per cent additional upon its income. That affects the value of these bonds, We can not negotiate them except at a higher rate of interest.

That higher rate of interest becomes a direct tax upon the people of the respective States on their real and personal property. So we only cut off our noses to spite our faces, because this very attempt to save here something for the General Government and thereby to a certain extent save something for the people, only reacts upon the State governments and imposes more taxation upon the people of the respective States, where there is direct taxation.

I dislike to reiterate these arguments over and over again, because I am as anxious as is any Senator here to expedite the disposition of this measure. But, sir, I present them in this brief, crude way, and if the Senate understands the question, I I have said all I care to say.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not propose, if I can avoid it and retain my self-respect, to discuss anything but what is legitimately before the Senate. No sort of personal fling at me or my State will deter me from my object, which is to get rid of tariff legislation and give relief to the country.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator will not think I made any personal allusion to himself.

Mr. VEST. In regard to the instrumentalities of the State of Missouri, I think they will bear examination as compared with the instrumentalities of the slums of New York. If the pending bill were disposed of, I should be ready to pay my part of the expense in hiring a hall and discussing this question with the Senator from New York if it will afford him any pleasure whatever. I alluded to the tax on whisky because I thought the argument of the other side, legitimately carried out, as to impairing the resources of a State government, went to all property taxed in the domain or upon the soil of any State; and I think yet that it was a proper application of that argument.

I do not believe that there is any constitutional objection to the provisions of the bill to make every citizen give in that portion of his income which comes from an investment in State bonds when, together with his other income, it exceeds $4,000.

The Senator from New York appeals to me to make the bill more popular. I am not questioning the sincerity of that appeal; let it go; but if I wanted to murder the bill with the people of the United States I should put his amendment upon it. There is not a feature of the legislation of the United States to-day more odious to the people of this country than that which exempts United States bonds from taxation. If I had been in Congress I should never have supported that legislation, even under any appeal to maintain the national credit.

The idea that men can go into market overt and buy the bonds of this country, payable in gold, at 60 and 70 cents on the dollar, and then be exempt from Federal taxation, is a monstrous one, and the people of the whole country have long since repudiated it. If I wanted to damn the pending bill I should extend that principle. When every Senator who votes for this amendment goes back to his people they will not say to him, as the imagination of the Senator from New York conjures up, "Why have you taxed your State bonds and thereby diminished their value," but instead the question put by the average American citizen to the Senator who votes for the amendment will be: "Why did you, pretending to put a 2 per cent tax upon the incomes of the people of the United States over $4,000, exempt the capitalists who buy the State bonds of New York or Missouri?" That will be the question. It will be, "Why did you undertake to extend to your State bonds the odious feature, now upon the statute book, which exempts the capitalist of the United States from all taxation upon United States bonds?" And it will be a proper question.

Who make investments in these bonds? Is it the man dependent upon his everyday labor for subsistence? Is it the man living upon a salary even of five or six thousand dollars? It is the capitalist. It is the man who desires to make an investment which will pay him such a per cent certainly and surely upon his investment. Yet, we are asked here deliberately, in levying an income tax, which we are endeavoring honestly to make equal and just in all its operations upon the people of the United States, to exempt the capitalist in the name of State rights.

Mr. President, I give way to no one in my zealous support of the doctrine of State rights under the Constitution, as I understand it. I have been devoted to that doctrine during my whole life, and I stand here to-day to defend it. But if State rights shall lead me to exempt the capitalists of this country from their just proportion of the common burdens of the people, then State rights must give way to all the instincts and teachings of common justice.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal happening to seriously impair our confidence in the fidelity of the Democratic party to the doctrine of State rights. It is not the first time it has happened in the history of the Government either. While they were out they got up the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions of 1798. Then, when Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison came in, they got as far as the embargo act, by which the Federal authority laid its strong hand upon the freedom of commerce of the United States. Mr. Jefferson said he was unable under the Constitution to buy Louisiana, but he swallowed his scruples and with the Democratic party, then in charge of the Government, took the greatest step of his life.

Now, when the Democratic party are in possession of the three branches of this Government, they come in with a Federal income tax, and not content with invading the sphere of the States and taking from the States what is the legitimate subject-matter of taxation and revenue for the States and appropriating it to the General Government, giving up to that extent the Federal Government's peculiar sphere of customs and excise taxation, they must now come in here and put a tax upon the State bonds themselves, all the time pretending to be a party for State rights.

The only good thing I can see in it is that they see the folly of the doctrine of State rights in its extreme extent, and that when they are brought face to face with the exigency of carrying on the Federal Government they will stretch the power of the Federal Government quite as far or farther than anybody else.

The Senator from Missouri speaks of investing in bonds at 60 and 70 cents on the dollar. That happened during the war. The credit of the General Government was seriously impaired at that time by circumstances which I should not undertake to speak of if the Senator from Missouri had not referred to them in this way.

To-day, however, nobody invests in Federal bonds at a discount but at a premium, and when you seek to place taxes upon the investments of capitalists you are really putting them upon the taxpayer, for just to the extent of this income tax upon those bonds will their price in the market be affected, and will there be requirement of larger interest to be imposed. That larger interest will result in increased taxation, and while you are seeking vainly and foolishly to get at the capitalist, you are striking down on the back of the taxpayer and taking that much revenue from the sphere of the States; and that is being done by this great party of State rights.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Missouri seemed to think that the only way he could answer my argument was by some personal fling at myself. It makes no difference, sir, whether this amendment was offered by a gentlemen who represents the slums of New York or represents Missouri. I shall not imitate him by descending into any personal reflection upon him or his State.

Mr. VEST. You commenced it.

Mr. HILL. I did not commence it. The Senator had chosen to illustrate the point of his argument by referring to a double taxation upon whisky. The point of the whole argument upon the side I was arguing was that you could not tax the instrumentalities of a State government, and I naturally retorted that whisky was not one of the instrumentalities of my State. I good-humoredly said I supposed it was not one of those of Missouri, and my friend from Missouri seems to regard that I have insulted him and his State.

Mr. VEST. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL. It was farthest from my intention so to do. I simply thought that when he gives thrusts he could accept them in a good-humored way. That was all that I intended to say; and then he goes out of his way to fling the taunt at me that I represent the slums of New York. The other day the charge against me was that I represent the millionaires of New York, and now it is the slums of New York.

Mr. President, I represent all classes of my people, and those who reside in the lower districts of New York have just as many rights as those who reside along the Mississippi in the State of Missouri. All are interested in this legislation, those who have property and those who have not; and no fling of the Senator, no unjust or unnecessary taunt upon his part will lead me to imitate his example, but I shall continue right to the point which I have undertaken to discuss. He says at some other time we can hire a hall together and discuss this question, but he does not seem to like to discuss it very much here now. He will be called upon over and over again to defend this bill. He announced the other day, as I understood him, that he was ready to defend it here and now and not wait to hire a hall on some other occasion.

Mr. President, he will not only have to defend this provision, but he has stated here that his object was to make this bill equal, that if you are going to tax incomes you must tax all incomes. He said that a few moments ago; and yet by his vote and the votes of the gentlemen associated with him he deliberately made an exemption of $4,000 in this very bill whereby citizens worth from sixty to one hundred thousand dollars are exempt from the provisions of the bill, and yet he is going before the people to tell them he has endeavored to make an equal and exact bill to all the people, and all the incomes of the country are taxed or none at all. It will be harder work for him to defend that exemption than to defend the necessary and reasonable one which I have offered.

The Senator slurs State rights, as I understand him from his argument. He says he is as good a State-right man as anyone else. The test as to whether a man is a friend of State rights depends not upon his assertions, but upon his votes. Here is the question presented. It never can be presented plainer or in a more direct way than here and now. We are legislating in a Federal legislature upon the subject of Federal taxation. We have already recognized the fact that under the Constitution or the law, one or the other, all governmental bonds are exempt. This gives a value, as I said, to national securities; and I turn around and simply ask you to give the same privilege, the same exemption, the same right to our State securities, and then Senators who vote against it talk to me about State rights.

Mr. President, State rights are sacrificed by defeating this amendment. State rights are surrendered by the very vote that has been given. Sir, I think Senators would do better in the preservation of State rights by voting for this amendment.

There is nothing in this question to get excited about. The Senator, I believe, says that he thinks that I may possibly be sincere in offering this amendment. Thanks for that admission. He did not hardly mean that. He may take that back. Mr. President, it matters not what my motive may be. My motives are to be judged by the propositions that I make here. On that very proposition, notwithstanding the crack of the whip of the Senator from Missouri, Senators who sat right near him, just as earnest friends of the bill as he is, voted with me. Why? Because the proposition commended itself to their honest judgment. That is the reason why they voted for it, not because they have any sympathy for me in this fight that I am making against this provision of the bill. I care not whether they agree with me or not. The question is not what my motives are or what are anybody's motives. The question is, is this amendment a sound one; is it a just one; can it be defended; does it make the bill better or worse? That is the question, and personalities should be avoided as far as possible in the discussion of a neat, clean, legal question and a question of propriety of legislation.

Mr. President, if Senators would vote upon this question according to their judgment, it strikes me that this would be granted. I concede that exemptions should be few and far between; but States have some rights, especially when you have provided certain exemptions for national securities. Is it any more than right that we ask the same exemption for State securities? Does not that place them both upon an equality? Can we not tell our constituents that fact and impress it upon them? There will be no difficulty about it. If this amendment shall be adopted it can be easily defended in Missouri, or in any other State of the Union. It can be defended anywhere, because it is a proper exemption.

The Senator says he regrets that national bonds were ever exempted from taxation. It originally started during the war. It was one of the things that seemed to be regarded as necessary to be done. There may or may not have been a necessity for it in 1870, when the refunding acts were passed, but when my attention was called to the fact that it not only exempted the bonds themselves, but the interest, I waived the amendment on that point.

The Senator was so zealous in behalf of the National Government against State rights that he was entirely willing to argue that if the bonds themselves were exempted and there was no express provision for the exemption of interest, still, nevertheless, the interest ought to be exempted, I suppose upon the principle that the tail ought to go with the hide, if upon no other doctrine. I stood here to say that if there was simply an exemption of bonds per se and nothing else we might tax the income. I anticipated this point that was coming, and I wanted to see what could be said upon the other side.

Mr. President, it strikes me there is no answer to the proposition, and the simple fact that we ought to keep this bill as free from exemptions as possible is no answer to it, because the amendment I have offered stands upon a better and broader basis than any other amendment that can be suggested.

I am opposed to the income feature of the bill. I desire to see that feature of the bill eliminated. I am pursuing, as I think, a proper and honorable course to amend the bill by striking out provisions which I think will make the bill better. These amendments are to be judged upon their merits and not upon the question as to who offers them. This is all I have to say upon the question.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Missouri and all Senators on the other side of the Chamber, without regard to the general desirableness of keeping the bill without amendment, will allow the pending amendment to be adopted. I desire to make a suggestion on which I should like to have the consideration of the Senator from Missouri. I think the Senator from Missouri will see that this is going to be a very serious matter for the new States—States that are having, as they come into the Union, great expenditures—and for the old States, who are now struggling to refund their State debts on better terms. Some of them may have been unable to keep their interest paid, and others have been at great labor to keep their interest paid.

This income tax policy, since the policy was abolished after the war, is a novel one. It is a policy which we never have established as a permanent policy in this country. Whether it is going to be extended and enlarged after the trial which the bill proposes, or whether it is going to be popular and satisfactory, no man can tell. Every State which puts a loan upon the market, if the bill passes in its present shape, has to expose that loan to the objection that no man can tell how much of it in the future policies of the Government will be taken away from the creditor by taxation. It will hurt the credit of a new and young State, or of an old State that is trying to reëstablish its credit, as some of our States are, tenfold, twentyfold the good it will be to the Treasury of the United States to have us assert this principle.

Whether we have a constitutional right to do it or not, will not every one of the States gain (and the people of the States and the people of the nation are the same) by the assertion in the matter of ordinary policy in time of peace by the United States Government of a purpose not to tax State loans? In my opinion, wherever you have uncertainty you have speculation. Wherever you have speculation you have loss of credit. No State can make a loan in the market except of foreign citizens entirely; but, shutting out foreign citizens, if the creditor lends his money to the State of Massachusetts or the State of Missouri or the State of Tennessee on a thirty-years bond, he can not tell whether the United States Government will be coming in to tax the bond 2 per cent, or, if it is found a convenient and agreeable thing to do, 10 per cent or 20 per cent hereafter, and the State has got to suffer by the doubt.

That is the reason why this amendment is urged. It is not for the sake of protecting capitalists, not for the sake of protecting investors. These investments are largely, made by savings institutions and banks and such things, where people in moderate circumstances are the persons interested. The amendment is urged for the sake of the credit of the State itself.

Suppose we were to send a foreign loan abroad, or were in a condition where we needed the aid of foreign capital, and we should accompany that loan with an advertisement that the United States reserved to itself the power to put an income tax on the interest in the hands of every holder of the loan? That would cost the United States ten times what it would get. The State loans we hope and believe will be taken up largely by the people of the United States themselves. It has been regarded as a sound, safe investment on very moderate terms. How can you justify the declaration of a policy under which every State loan hereafter proposed is accompanied by the declaration, whatever may be the rate of interest you fix, that the United States Government has asserted its right and its purpose to tax the interest on the loan at its discretion?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I will let the constitutional argument all go. I have some doubt about that myself, but I think it is a bad thing to do, and that nothing in our present condition makes this little scrap of a 2 per cent important to the Treasury of the United States in comparison with the great mischief which it is proposed to do. Now I will hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is not well settled that so far as the foreign holders of any State securities are concerned, there can be no power in this country to tax them for the income derived from the bonds.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. GEORGE. In other words, they would be taxable within their own countries for the income which they would receive from the bonds, and they would not be taxable by this country on account of any income which they might derive from the bonds. Is not that well settled law?

Mr. HOAR. I see the point the Senator makes. It is not well settled that there is no power in this country. We have the constitutional power to levy this tax. We can make it effective by compelling the treasurers of the States to withhold it. But I have carefully avoided that point.

I put that merely as an illustration. I said if you went abroad with a national loan and advertised to the lender that we were proposing to put an income tax upon the interest it would destroy the loan or make it a mere speculative loan; that we hope and expect that our State loans will be taken up by the American people at home and not go abroad; that this argument would not apply to foreigners, but that it would have precisely the same effect on State credit if the State of Alabama proposes a loan on the 1st day of next January she will have to pay four times over in her rate of interest the amount which will be received by the United States Treasury under this provision, because the United States has asserted the policy of taxing the interest on State debts, and nobody can tell, the policy being asserted, how far the Government will incline to go in the future.

So, if Alabama advertises a State thirty-year loan, or Massachusetts, or any other State, a loan which she could get at 3 per cent, or at 4 per cent, or at 5 per cent, she would have to pay an additional 1 per cent or an additional half per cent because of the assertion of this power. It is not the amount of the tax; it is the amount of the possibility of the tax for which she will have to pay; and if we do not enlarge the provision the result will be that the creditor, the speculator, the purseproud and wicked men who dwell somewhere in the neighborhood of Labrador, or in that direction, and who are perpetually plundering the good men of Missouri and Alabama and the new Western States out of their hard earnings will make the profit, and the Government will not benefit by it, the borrowing States will not benefit by it, the people will not benefit by it. By asserting this policy you are putting an element of speculation and uncertainty and doubt into every State's hope of borrowing money.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator with whom I am paired is absent this morning and I have not the opportunity by my vote of expressing my opinion on this question; I feel compelled by a conscientious conviction of duty to oppose the exercise by the Government of the United States of any power of taxation over the property of any State, or the governmental facilities of any State. I do that upon grounds which I understand involve the question of the constitutional authority of the Government of the United States and the States respectively, and of their proper balance in our system of government.

When the Senator from Missouri was discussing the question of the exemption of incomes derived from the bonds of the United States he took the ground, which is entirely just and correct, that we had entered into an engagement with the bondholders at the time of the issue of the bonds that we would not tax them, and therefore it would be a breach of public faith now to tax those bonds either directly or indirectly.

However, I think the constitutional power of the Government of the United States to tax its own bonds was not brought into question, or if it was I suppose that there are very few who would be disposed to doubt that it has the power. But the question in our form of government is entirely a different one when we come to consider whether the Government of the United States has the power to tax the bonds of a State.

The State governments are given a sovereignty within the constitutional limits prescribed to them by the Government of the United States, which for a great many purposes are paramount to that of the sovereignty of the United States Government. I said the States were given a sovereignty. I should have said that they possess a sovereignty which has never been taken away from them; which is reserved to them for the purpose of executing the powers and functions of local government. If we break down the powers of the State governments to administer their proper functions in local government we simply destroy the fabric of this Union, and we do it at a single blow.

There is nothing wanting after you have passed the bill in the form in which it is presented now to the Senate to make a perfect merger of all State power, influence, and authority into the powers of the Government of the United States; for if the Government of the United States can prevent the States from borrowing money to carry on their legitimate functions, then it is useless to say that the States are not completely within the legislative authority of the Government for any and every purpose that the Government sees proper to exercise that authority to promote.

I therefore feel constrained by my duty to my own convictions and to the Constitution of the United States and the sovereignty of the States, particularly the State that I have the honor to represent with my colleague here, to protest against this invasion of the rights of Alabama. I do it with as much solemnity, with as much feeling, with as deep-seated an interest as if a bill were now pending here to tax the Statehouse in Montgomery, or to tax the public bridges, ferries, roads, or any other property owned by the State of Alabama and from which it derives revenue.

It is a power that is beyond the reach of Congress. Congress is excluded from that power over the States if it is excluded from any power whatever. You could not touch the States in a more vital point. You might just as well take the annual tax lists of the State of Alabama and confiscate them for the purposes of the Federal Government as to take her power to issue bonds upon her credit and to raise money for carrying on her government.

I will illustrate this point. At the close of the civil war Alabama owed about four and a half million dollars, payable in London and Liverpool, upon which she had paid the interest in gold promptly, as it was due and every time it fell due during the whole of the civil war. She had put her gold, which she collected from her people while the war was flagrant, upon the ships, and ran the blockade in order to get an opportunity to pay her debts and save her credit, and she did so. After about four years of Republican administration in Alabama that debt was raised nominally to $32,000,000, not more than 10 per cent of which ever found its way into any public institution of that State.

Alabama was forced to the necessity of making a settlement with her creditors, and under the leadership of George S. Houston, who was then governor and afterwards became a member of this body, she arranged with her creditors for the assumption of a very large portion of the debt thus imposed upon her, at rates of interest which would increase as time elapsed. She commenced with the rate of 2 per cent, which was all that her people could bear in the way of taxation then to meet it. Then she went to 2½, 3, and 4. I think the rate is now 4 per cent, and the bonds of Alabama are now at par and have recently—I do not know how it is to-day—commanded a premium.

That State, by the use of her credit, had the power to relieve herself from a condition which would otherwise have made it necessary for her to have gone into political bankruptcy; that is to say, into an act of repudiation which would have fastened a stain upon our State that we never would have gotten rid of. Using that power of issuing bonds free from taxation, Federal and State, she induced her creditors to accept the situation, to relieve her from the incubus of a part of her fraudulent debt, and to put herself upon a footing where she could have prosperity, or at least life.

She had life given to her in that way, and it has been followed by a very remarkable, I might almost say a marvelous prosperity. It was solely by the use of that power that Alabama was able to extricate herself from that desperate situation.

Now, if Congress had ever supposed that it possessed and had chosen to exercise the power of taxation upon the credits issued by the State of Alabama, there would have been an end of her prosperity. There would have been an end of her political life. She would have been compelled to go into the grave of bankruptcy, because she could not have had any possible chance of taking a step towards advancement in prosperity.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, this matter is called to my mind with a great deal of force. The recollection startles and alarms me, and I can not subscribe to the doctrine that the Government of the United States can tax the bonds of Alabama, directly or indirectly, when they are issued as facilities and instrumentalities of the State government of Alabama.

If you can tax them at all you can tax them out of existence, for the Supreme Court has said (and we all know it is true) that there is no limit upon the rate of taxation when Congress has the constitutional power to levy a tax; there is no limitation upon the rate, and nothing would be easier than for an aggressive party in the Congress of the United States to demolish entirely the credit of the States and usurp to itself the entire money credit and power of the Government.

Congress has money power enough, and I do not choose to augment it by my vote, even as a matter of policy; but I solemnly believe that we have no constitutional right to impose this tax upon the bonds of the State of Alabama.

I understand it to be conceded that if you can impose it at all upon the income from the bonds you can equally well impose it upon the bonds. No discrimination can be made as to the exercise of your powers upon the lines as to whether you tax the income or whether you tax the bonds. You can tax the bonds of the State of Alabama 10 per cent; you can tax her credit out of existence; and you deprive her of that power of government which after all is more essential to the preservation of the American Union and the preservation of the just balance of powers between Congress and the States than any other power which you can mention. It is more essential to the Federal Government that it should abstain from the exercise of this power than it is even to the States that they should possess it. The moment that you put the States under surveillance, under subjection to the Federal Government to the extent that the Federal Government may tax out of existence the power of the State to issue bonds to borrow money to carry on its government, that moment, you have subjugated the States, and not only that, but you have exterminated them.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, it seems to me this discussion rests upon an assumption that the bill contains a provision taxing the securities of a State and of subordinate State municipalities. The bill contains no such provision, and by no rule of constitutional interpretation can it be held to contain any such provision.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have not asserted it did. I assumed that it did because it had been argued that way, and I should be very glad to find that it does not.

Mr. LINDSAY. The bill provides in a general way for the taxation of incomes, but it nowhere denominates as a portion of the income to be taxed the interest arising from State bonds, bonds of municipalities, or of cities. There is nothing in the bill that indicates an intention upon the part of the Congress of the United States to tax the State agencies, or the State bonds, or the bonds of any subordinate municipality. There is a rule of universal acceptance in the interpretation of a statute that the general language of the statute is to be read in connection with the constitutional limitations imposed upon the body enacting the statute. The bill contains this exception:

That nothing herein contained shall apply to States, counties, or municipalities; nor to corporations, companies, or associations organized and conducted solely for charitable, religious, or educational purposes, etc.

The difficulty about excepting in terms the bonds of the State, the bonds of a county, or the bonds of a city grows out of the further rule that whenever you attempt to enumerate the exceptions you are to be taken to intend to include all you do not in terms except. Now, then, if in attempting to enumerate those things which the Constitution of its own force excepts, we fail in the enumeration to include any character of securities that may not be taxed, it will be taken that we intended to violate the Constitution by taxing that particular security.

I take it that the courts will construe this law if passed as it now stands as evidence of an intention on the part of the Congress of the United States to tax such incomes, and such only, as may be constitutionally reached by the powers of taxation residing in the Federal Government; and it is better to let the courts settle this question than by attempting to enumerate fail to include the whole scope of the constitutional limitation and put ourselves in the attitude of intending to do that which we have no constitutional power to do.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the beginning of section 55? The language is as follows:

That in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities, except such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is a proper provision. As explained by the Senator from Alabama, that is exactly proper. We tax all bonds and the incomes from all bonds that we may constitutionally tax, and we except the income upon the bonds of the United States, not because we have not the constitutional power to tax them, but because the bonds contain a pledge upon their face that they will not be taxed by the Government of the United States. So that exception rather strengthens than weakens the position I have taken, that this proposed act is to be read in consonance with the Constitution and subject to its limitations; and the courts are the proper tribunals in which those questions are to be settled.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator hold that Congress has not the power to impose this proposed tax upon the incomes arising from a State, county, or municipal bond?

Mr. LINDSAY. The inclination of my mind is to agree with the Senator from Alabama. If the clause provided that the incomes upon State bonds or county bonds or municipal bonds should be taxed I would hesitate to vote for the bill without striking out that express provision.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Now, another question. Inasmuch as the only exception contained in the beginning of this section is "such bonds of the United States as are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation," how in the name of sense does the Senator come to the conclusion that there is any exception in favor of State, municipal, or county bonds?

Mr. LINDSAY. Because we might tax the bonds of the United States without violating any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is begging the whole question. That is simply stating that this is a good law, provided it is not unconstitutional. If it is unconstitutional then it does not apply.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not think the Senator has exactly caught the point that I attempted to state. My point is that whenever there is a constitutional limitation upon the power of taxation there is no necessity for an exception eo nomine, as in the case of a State bond, a county bond, or a municipal bond, but where we may lawfully tax the income of a United States bond, in harmony with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, then it is necessary to except that bond in terms; otherwise we will be taken to have attempted to tax it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me a question? As he stated very frankly in answer to the Senator from Oregon his opinion as concurring with the Senator from Alabama, let me ask the Senator whether he thinks that if we have the constitutional power to tax the income from State bonds, it is a good plan to do it?

Mr. LINDSAY. I am coming to that identical point now. The argument of the Senator from Massachusetts that if the income on State bonds, county bonds, or municipal bonds may be lawfully taxed it would tend to depreciate the value of the bonds, is an argument against any income tax at all, but it is not an argument why the bonds should be excepted from the general scope of taxation upon incomes. If a tax upon the income arising out of a State bond or a county bond will depreciate its market value, so will a tax upon the income from the bond of a private corporation or the bond of an individual depreciate its value. That is a legitimate and, I admit, a plausible argument against the imposition of an income tax; but there is no line of policy clear to me why we shall not tax incomes arising from all securities that may be constitutionally taxed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me one question further?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If this bill becomes a law just as it stands and the Supreme Court of the United States should ultimately hold that Congress had the power to impose a tax such as is proposed here on incomes arising out of State, county, or municipal bonds, does the Senator admit that this language is broad enough to impose a tax upon those bonds?

Mr. LINDSAY. I admitted that at the outset, and now, speaking to the Senator from Oregon, who favors an income tax, let me ask him, is there any reason why the speculator who receives an income from a State or a county bond should be exempted from a taxation that the speculator has to pay who holds the bonds of a private corporation?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think there are very strong reasons arising out of public policy, but in addition to those I think there is no constitutional power to do it.

Mr. LINDSAY. There we agree, and there being no constitutional power to do it, I hold that there is no attempt in this bill to do it, and that is a sufficient answer.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I have arrived at a point in the discussion of this proposed income tax where I find it is impossible to make any compromise with my convictions in regard to the provision under discussion. I may submit my views as to expediency and propriety to the greater wisdom of my fellows, but I can not so submit my views as to the fundamental questions which lie at the very foundation, of the exercise of the taxing power of the Federal Government. In all matters that regard taxation I find it impossible to ignore now, any more than at any other time, the existence of the States.

I believe it is the duty of each one of us intrusted with the high responsibility of legislation to keep in mind at all times our dual scheme of government. We can not lose sight for one moment of the great underlying fact that to the States, of which this Government is in one sense the general agent, belong perhaps the most important and largest function of taxation; that in creating the burdens that taxation always imposes, burdens never to be borne except they are accompanied by a public exigency, the States are in the largest degree interested.

I think it is not to be denied that so far as amounts go by far the largest amount of taxation springs directly from the power and the necessities of the States—State taxation, county taxation, municipal taxation, in their aggregate enormous and exceeding by many millions the aggregate of national taxation. That in the exercise of the legislative power with which we are intrusted and which we are now attempting to exercise we should keep in mind this double source from which the burden of taxation springs seems to me to go without saying.

There is another view to be taken of this question. Undeniably the Federal Government has the right, which it has often exercised, and, I take it, will exercise whenever the exigency arises, of exempting from taxation all the bonds that are issued by its authority. It has been found necessary, in order to market those bonds to the greatest advantage, that that exemption should be created by law. It is true we may either exempt them from taxation or we may impose the taxation, but our discretion is influenced entirely by the advantage accruing to, and the needs of, the Federal Government, and it has been found in the past that it was necessary to create that exemption.

Now, then, the States have found that the necessity of exemption of State credit was also one that was exigent and important to them, and they have exercised it in most cases in so far as to exempt the bonds issued by authority of the State and the interest thereon from taxation by the State. But the State can not exempt the holders of such bonds from taxation by the Federal Government unless the Constitution contemplates that exemption.

Now, without regard to the constitutional question, whether it may be decided one way or the other by the Supreme Court, I hold that it is our duty as legislators of the Federal Government to pay that respect to the autonomy of the States that we find is obliged to be paid to the autonomy of the Federal Government by the States. I do not believe that we should ever in this matter of imposing burdens take such a view of our duty as would permit us to degrade the States to the position of inferiority to which this discrimination would reduce them. I mean of being obliged to submit to Federal taxation upon their power to borrow money, while the Federal Government can take from the States all power to tax the income derived from Federal bonds.

Therefore, I do not think it can ever be for the advantage of the Federal Government to adopt such a course in this matter of taxation as puts the States in a position inferior to the Federal Government, or in one which tends to degrade them in this great dual system of ours.

Mr. PUGH. I fully agree with the Senator from Delaware and with my colleague in reference to this amendment; and I rose simply to suggest to the Senator from Delaware, in the line of his argument and in support of his opinion, that the power of a State to borrow money to carry on its own local government, to meet its own necessities, is a reserved power. It never has been delegated. If the power of taxation has been vested by the States in the Federal Government of what value is the reserved power of the State to borrow money when the States themselves, by delegating the taxing power to the Federal Government, have impaired its value? The Federal Government, by exempting from taxation its own bonds and the income arising from the interest on its bonds, is committed to the proposition. This bill itself recognizes that for this Government to levy a tax upon the interest of these bonds impairs their value as securities; that it impairs their value in the market when the Government undertakes to borrow money on its own credit.

Now, if the State has reserved the right of borrowing money and of issuing bonds to put upon the market to sell to raise money, it is to do it at a rate of interest; and it is the interest of the people of the State to get money at the lowest rate of interest possible. To say that the State in reserving the right to borrow money has parted with the power of protecting itself against the power of the Federal Government to tax the income arising from the interest upon the bonds, renders the power to borrow money utterly nugatory and puts it in the power of the Federal Government to destroy this reserved right of the States.

I agree with my colleague. I look upon the recognition of the exercise of this power as a blow at the credit of the States and the rights of the States from which they could not recover in a century. It would be far better for us not to derive a dollar by levying an income tax rather than have it done by exercising the power of destroying the reserved right of the States to borrow money to carry on their own local government. It centralizes the power of controlling the credit of the States in the Federal Government.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to interrupt the Senator from Alabama for a moment to suggest that in what I have said I have assumed, for the purpose of argument, that the Federal Government has the constitutional right to tax the incomes derived from State bonds or bonds issued under State authority, and that I feel myself even under such a proposition obliged to vote, for the reasons I have given, against the exercise of such a right. But I agree with the Senator from Kentucky, I agree with the Senator from Alabama, that there is no constitutional right to tax the instrumentality of borrowing money so necessary to State autonomy. However, I do not agree with my friend, the Senator from Kentucky, that because I so believe it is unnecessary in this bill to state what we think ought to be exempted from the universality of the language used. The language of the bill taxes incomes from all sources, from all bonds, and from all investments, without exempting or particularizing any.

It is quite true, as the Senator from Kentucky says, that if it be unconstitutional the Supreme Court of the United States will so decide. But whether the Supreme Court should so decide or not, I want to write into this provision my own protest against the constitutionality of such a power. I conceive it to be the duty of legislators here to take their own views of the Constitution of the United States when they are framing legislation and to so construct the bill as that it shall conform to their views on the constitutional question.

Mr. LINDSAY. Will it interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Senate has voted down the amendment which exempted State, municipal, and county taxation. Now, if the Senate incorporates an exemption of the taxation of State bonds alone, will it not follow as a reasonable interpretation that it did not intend to exempt county and municipal bonds?

Mr. GRAY. It will not, so for as I am concerned; nor do I think it will have any effect upon the Supreme Court of the United States when it comes to pass, if it should come to pass upon the constitutionality of this provision of the bill. But I still believe there is nothing inconsistent with the proper framing of a bill of this kind in exempting these incomes which are derived from a source that are beyond the reach of Federal taxation. I think that ought to be put in, in order that the people of the States need not be embarrassed by the necessity of appealing to the Supreme Court of the United States from the action of the collectors, who would undoubtedly, by the language of the bill, be compelled to put incomes derived from such bonds among the taxable incomes.

Mr. PUGH. I thought I would have nothing to say upon this bill at any stage of its progress, because I consider the time more valuable in voting than to be consumed in speaking. I rose simply to express my condemnation of this attempt on the part of the Federal Government to levy a tax, an income tax or otherwise, upon the credit of the State and to undertake to distinguish between money in the hands of the holder of a State bond paid to him out of the State treasury on a State bond, and money paid out of the State treasury to the officials of the State.

I can not see any foundation for any such distinction. It is conceded that money in the hands of a State official can not be reached that was paid as his salary out of the State treasury. How is it that you can, by the exercise of the taxing power on the part of the Federal Government, reach the interest payable to the holder of a State bond out of the State treasury?

It is a plain proposition. You can not impair the official agencies of the State indispensable to its own administration by taking away the power or refusing to recognize it; you can not tax the money paid out of the State treasury to the State officials because it would impair that agency. Why is it that if you can reach the interest paid on State bonds to the holders of State bonds out of the State treasury you do not impair the power of borrowing money on the State bonds? It is perfectly preposterous to undertake to assert such a proposition.

Mr. GRAY. May I again interrupt the Senator from Alabama for a moment?

Mr. PUGH. I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAY. I do not want the Senator to yield the floor. I want him to go on with the very excellent argument he is making.

Mr. PUGH. I am through. I have put myself on record, and there I will stand.

Mr. GRAY. It is conceded on all hands that the States are inhibited impliedly from taxing the instrumentalities of the Federal Government in the way of borrowing money, because by so doing they would impair its sovereignty within its appropriate sphere. The State against the will of the Federal Goverument can not tax the income from a Federal bond. That reason must apply to the State and the State bonds with exactly the same force that it does to the Federal Government.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question at this point. The Senator contends, as I understand him, that the power of the General Government to tax State bonds is questionable, because the power to issue State bonds is a necessary incident of its political existence. In view of the fact that each municipality or county is but a subdivision of the State, and therefore the agency of the State in carrying on the State government, would not the reasoning of the Senator from Delaware apply to municipal and county bonds equally with State bonds?

Mr. GRAY. I think it would, if I may answer frankly. The amendment we are concerned with here is a declaration (I will not say exemption, because if the Constitution exempts it we can not increase that exemption) that we do not intend to include within the catalogue of securities whose income is to be taxed bonds issued directly by the State.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, as I understand the Senator from Delaware, the logic of his argument is that all bonds issued by the State, by counties and municipalities——

Mr. GRAY. By its authority.

Mr. ALLEN. Or by its authority, by any subdivision, would also be exempt from taxation by the Federal Government, and that would eliminate every bond issued in the United States by authority. Now, let me make this suggestion——

Mr. GRAY. Let me just state my position. I said the inclination of my mind is to answer the Senator affirmatively to include all bonds issued by authority of the State. I can not say that I am exactly as clear upon that point as I am as to bonds directly issued for State purpose and in order to carry out and execute the functions of State government.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Delaware that the States tax the bonds of counties, municipalities, townships, etc. It is not held by the State courts that that is any impairment of the power of the State to issue bonds through one of its instrumentalities or any impairment of the statutory right of one of the municipal corporations to issue bonds.

I desire to suggest to the Senator from Delaware this thought, that a Federal tax upon a State bond in the hand of the holder of that bond does not in any manner impair the power or the sovereignty of the State to issue bonds, and it does not in the slightest impair it any more than the tax of the State upon the bond that is issued by the country or municipality. When the bond of the State is issued and placed in the hand of the purchaser, it is private property from that time on, and the tax rests upon the holder of the bond, and in no manner impairs the power or the sovereignty of the State to issue the bond.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether or not, if a State has the power to issue a bond, it is not for the purpose of that bond being sold and being taken up by private parties or corporations, as the case may be, and whether or not, if you tax the holder of that bond, you are not impairing the State security just to the amount of the tax?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think so at all. I think the same logic that is used by the Senator from Louisiana would apply to every promissory note, every mortgage, and every form of contract issued by a private individual. I think that it does not impair the power or the sovereignty of the State that issues the bond any more than it impairs the ability of the individual to issue his promissory note or his mortgage.

I was going to say—and that is all I want to say—it strikes me that the income tax as it now exists in this bill is impaired so that there is practically nothing to it. Everything has been exempted that could possibly be exempted upon any conceivable theory, and it is a mere eggshell to-day, without any meat in it. Here is an attempt to exempt from the income tax millions of dollars of State obligations and bonds which are held by the people of this country, and possibly by nonresidents. The income tax as originally framed could not be recognized by its author as it now exists in this bill.

Mr. CAFFERY. I understood from the statement made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to exempt from the income tax municipal and county bonds and bonds of the States was voted down. I was not in the Chamber at that period, and being paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] I could not vote upon it if here.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that I have heard no satisfactory answer no answer which to my mind brings any kind of conviction, to the interrogatory propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], whether, if the Federal power of taxation could not extend to the salaries of officials of a State, it could extend to the bonds of a State. There has no answer been given, and, in my opinion, none can be given to that interrogatory. There is much more reason why the United States can not tax or should not tax State agencies, particularly those agencies which raise revenue for the State, than that the United States can not tax salaries of State officials. There has no sufficient answer been given to that question and none, in my opinion, can be given to it.

What, Mr. President, is the purpose of the State issuing a bond? It is for the purpose of raising revenue and other matters of public moment; and a vital part of the sovereignty of the State would be attacked by any tax upon its power to raise revenue.

There is no sort of similarity between the power of the Federal Government to tax a State bond and the case presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] as to the power of the Federal Government to tax the promissory note of the individual. It is all important to maintain in perfect integrity the power of the State government to carry on its fiscal operations. There lies the very essence of its sovereignty. If you destroy in any particular the power of the State to raise revenue, you strike a death blow at its sovereignty, for that sovereignty can only be maintained and the State government can only be run by the power of taxation.

In my State there was a legacy of a very considerable debt left from the reconstruction period. That debt has been funded into consolidated bonds, and by a wise and judicious management of State finances those bonds are now nearly at par. From about 47½ per cent, they have gone up to nearly 100 in the last fifteen years.

Our State has to provide against the annual overflow of the Mississippi River. The State has been divided into levee districts; they are subordinate municipal corporations of the State, and there have been transferred to them, in very large measure, all lands belonging to the State under the swamp land acts of 1849 and 1850. These levee districts have raised money by issuing bonds predicated upon a mortgage of these State lands thus donated to them. If this bill, with this particular feature passes, a very serious blow will be struck at the power of that State to prevent the annual overflow of the Mississippi River, to the great destruction of our people.

I think the constitutional point is well taken. If you can tax the instrumentalities of the State, particularly in this vital matter of raising revenue, you can destroy the State. There is no answer to that; there can be none. The constitutional barrier presents itself as an insuperable obstacle to the validity of this proposed income tax on State bonds.

Mr. President, I am told by the Senator from Kentucky that wherever there is a constitutional limitation, the words of the statute must be considered with reference to that limitation, but I will call his attention to the fact that this bill has very carefully excluded United States bonds from its operations, and another principle of construction will come in; that the exclusion of United States bonds is pregnant with the affirmative that all other bonds are included.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator if in his opinion United States bonds may not be constitutionally taxed?

Mr. CAFFERY. By the United States Government; not by the State governments.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is, the bonds would be taxed if we had not been excluded from this bill?

Mr. CAFFERY. But the exclusion is in general terms. There is a general wording of the statute that embraces all bonds.

Mr. LINDSAY. All United States bonds.

Mr. CAFFERY. Here is a special exclusion, a special exemption, and the general rule of construction will apply, that everything not exempted is included. The tax collectors of the States will not pay particular attention to these constitutional objections, but as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] well remarked, here is the place to settle this constitutional question, and not in the Supreme Court. Why embarass the Supreme Court with a question which the Senate of the United States can as well decide for itself here and now?

I shall be constrained, with my view of the unconstitutionality of this income tax on State bonds, to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say a word only in reply to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]. The Senator says that conceding that it would be unconstitutional to tax the bonds of the State, still we may make a general phrase, and leave it to the courts hereafter to settle.

Mr. President, I think that experienced Senator will not himself adhere to that argument. If it were true in any other kind of legislation, how is it possible that any careful lawmaker can act on that principle in a tax bill? A tax bill has to be carried into effect by hundreds of local officers all over the country, assessors formerly, and now collectors, and probably we shall require the United States assessor again before we get through with it.

The bill is to be carried out, first, by the assessment, then by the demand, and then, if the tax is not paid, by a distraint. The collector is to enter the household of the citizen, of the widow, or the unmarried woman, if she is a housekeeper, or a poor man or a rich man, or the man who lives 250 miles away from the United States court in the vast spaces of some of our Western States, and, according to the Senator from Kentucky, it is gravely proposed that, in regard to this question about which the Senate of the United States is pretty nearly evenly divided, whether this tax on State bonds or municipal, or town, or county indebtedness is constitutional, this law is to be enforced in the several districts, in the first instance, according to the opinion of the tax collector. So that in Western Missouri, or in Eastern Oregon, or in Southern Arkansas, anybody who happens to have a bond of this class is to be taxed for it according to the constitutional opinion of the local collector, and to have his household furniture seized in order to collect the tax, with a remedy to go by appeal if he chooses, by a series of suits to the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the opinion of the local officer on the constitutional question, in regard to which constitutional lawyers, like the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Alabama on one side and the Senator from Missouri on the other, are divided. It does not strike me that that is sound policy in legislation. I think we should be derelict to our constitutional duty if we were to let loose on the country a law of that kind.

In the next place, I do not think this is a question for the Supreme Court of the United States, still less for the tax collector. I do not mean, of course, to say or to expose myself to the suggestion that I do not think we should bow to the Supreme Court if it should hold this tax to be unconstitutional; but if the nine gentlemen who sit, with so much honor to themselves and to the country, in that illustrious tribunal happen to think an affirmative exercise constitutional, which I believe unconstitutional, I think the State of Kentucky is the last place in this country from which the suggestion would come that I am bound to yield my opinion to them. We are bound to write in this tax law all such constitutional limitations as may seem in our judgment, as constitutional lawyers, to be sound and to be requisite.

The other suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]—for he contributed two to this argument—that when it is suggested that by this action you are to impair the credit in the market of every State in this country, you are going to do what was so well illustrated by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] in regard to his own State. The Senator from Kentucky said that is no more than you would do if you would put an income tax on any private contract. The answer to that seems to me to be one which can be made in a sentence. The whole private property of the citizen, with the exception of a few narrow constitutional limitations, is primarily at the service of the Government.

The preservation of the country is the supreme law; it is the bottom mortgage; it is the first and most sacred obligation, and therefore, of course, every private contract in this country must be subject to the supreme necessities of the State. The preservation of the State within its constitutional limits and for its constitutional functions is the supreme obligation, and therefore it is an essentially different thing to make a State contract uncertain in the matter of speculation, and so impair its value, the value of the public credit, upon which everything else in a time of danger is dependent, and to exercise the authority of the Government over private property, whether it depends on a private contract or whether it is property personal or real in the ordinary sense.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I think it a wasteful process to tax State bonds either by an definite tax, and it is an equally wasteful thing to have it well understood by declaration, or by inevitable inference, that we have a right to tax them and are liable to tax them at any time. There is no financial benefit in it, but there is an injury. If a State desires to borrow money and publishes the fact that it will issue ten-year bonds at 3 per cent interest, the elements of the problem are very certain. The elements, excepting the condition of the public credit and business, are fixed.

The State knows precisely what it can do, and the bankers will bid with this knowledge; but if the Government puts a tax of a quarter of a cent upon those bonds, and it is understood and established that it will always be one-quarter of a cent, the States will lose something, to be sure; but they could borrow with some fixity and some certainty; but if a 3 per cent bond is issued, with the liability of having a mill or a quarter of a cent taken out of it, the bankers will take out more than a proportionate sum from their bid because of this uncertain element which enters into the contract.

So that you or the State will certainly lose by it; the upshot of it between the State and the General Government is a loss; a greater tax will come later on, and, instead of getting the bankers to bid 100 for a hundred-dollar bond, with this uncertainty of taxing the bonds hanging over them, they will not be likely to give over 96, for they will say "we do not know what Congress will do;" and there is where they are right. The tax may be a mill or 2 mills, or, if the Government is in great need, a quarter of a cent or half a cent. In fact, it is to a certain percentage a destruction of the State's right to borrow money. Leaving the constitutional question entirely out, and taking the pure financial question, you are wasting money by this proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In some remarks I made this morning I referred to the Kentucky case, and I think I stated the decision of the Supreme Court in that case. The principle that was adopted subsequently by Congress was applied first in what is known as the Baltimore case—the United States vs. The Railroad Company, (17 Wallace, 322). That was a case where the city of Baltimore had subscribed for $5,000,000 of bonds of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and the tax provided for by the internal-revenue act of 1864 was imposed upon the company. The company declined to pay, on the ground that it was a tax upon an integral part of the sovereignty of the State, namely the city of Baltimore.

The Supreme Court in that case held the contention to be good. Subsequently, in the case of Stockdale vs. Insurance Company, in 20 Wallace, 330, the same principle was recognized and adopted. Then the Congress of the United States, in the Fifty-second Congress, refunded to certain counties in Kentucky, to the city of Louisville in that State, and to the State of Tennessee taxes which they had paid, the refund by Congress being based upon the two cases to which I referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have some difficulty about this case, and I want to submit to the constitutional lawyers in this body a question, and especially do I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to a difficulty which I have, and I hope he may be able to remove it.

It seems to me, Mr. President—I may be mistaken about it—that a fundamental fallacy underlies all the arguments which I have heard here this morning urged against the constitutionality of the income tax so far as any part of that income might come from the interest upon State bonds. The case has been argued as if the proposition were to tax the State bonds eo nomine as so much property; as if this were an excise tax levied under the Constitution, under which the bonds issued by States are made subject to taxation for the benefit of the Federal Government. If that were the question before the Senate, it would be a very different one from the one really before it. If I am not mistaken—I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to that point—there is a vast difference, as it appears to me, between taxing incomes derivable from a nontaxable thing, and a tax upon the thing itself.

Under the Federal Constitution real estate or land can not be taxed except by the rule of apportionment, there being two rules for the levy of internal taxes under the Constitution, one the rule of apportionment, and the other the rule of uniformity. It was argued by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] with some plausibility—but I think the Senate decided against him by a very large majority—that that provision of this income-tax law which taxes as incomes the rent coming from real estate was unconstitutional, because it was in effect taxing real estate, and real estate or land could only be taxed by the rule of apportionment, and this tax is by the rule of uniformity.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to that, and ask him if the Senate decided right then, if that decision can be maintained upon any other ground than that there is substantially and really, as matter of constitutional law, a difference between taxing a thing which the Constitution prohibits to be taxed and taxing the income of an individual, and including within that income the proceeds of the nontaxable property. That now is the position which Senators must take in order to make a good ground against the constitutionality of this income tax.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware and the attention of other Senators to some other troubles we shall have if we forget the plain and, as I think, the manifest constitutional distinction between a thing and that which might by some use of the thing produce an income. The Constitution of the United States prohibits the imposition of a tax upon exports. Is it now to be provided in this bill that any income derived by an exporter from dealing in exports is also to be exempt? The Constitution of the United States prohibits States—I mention that simply as an analogous argument—from taxing imports as well as exports. Is it to be argued that a State may not levy these taxes and impose an income tax upon an importer or include within the taxes which it imposes upon one of its citizens an income derived from imposts?

I present this to show that there must be a very plain and fundamental distinction between taxing a nontaxable thing under the Constitution and taxing the income of an individual, and including within it not the nontaxable thing, but some income or profit which might come from the use of this nontaxable thing.

Here is another trouble to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me, right there?

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through. I shall only occupy a few moments.

Mr. GRAY. Allow me to suggest to the Senator, so that he may have it before him, what my distinction would be.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. GRAY. I submit to him, with great deference, as I always do when I differ with the Senator on a matter of constitutional or other law, that the reason why the State can not tax an import is because there is an express prohibition in the Constitution of the United States upon the States doing that thing.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree to that.

Mr. GRAY. But for that express inhibition, imports, like all other property, would be within the domain of State taxation. But the reason why, as I conceive, that a State should not tax either the bond or the income from a bond of the United States, does not rest upon any express inhibition, for there is none; but because both the bond and the interest paid upon it are an exercise of the essentially inherent sovereignty of the Government that does issue the bond.

So of the State. Its sovereignty within its appropriate sphere is complete. The reason why the power of the State to borrow money should not be impaired by the taxing power of the United States is not on account of any express inhibition in the Constitution of the United States, for there is none; but because in our scheme of government it has been deemed essential that neither the General Government on the one hand or the State government on the other should interfere with or should be conceived as having the power to interfere with those essential instrumentalities of government of either.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is a very easy answer to the argument of the Senator from Delaware. There can be no more force in an implied prohibition in the Constitution than there is in an express prohibition in the Constitution. The question in either case is not how the thing is unconstitutional, but whether the thing itself be constitutional or not. So the Senator makes nothing, I humbly conceive, in drawing a distinction between an express prohibition in the Constitution of the United States against taxation and an implied prohibition in the Constitution, because in both the utmost force and effect which can be attributed to them means simply prohibition and no more.

Lest the Senator might think he was not sufficiently answered by reason of his allegation that the nontaxability of an income derived from State bonds comes from the fact that, if that were allowable, it would put it in the power of another agency, another sovereignty, to destroy or impair the operations of the State government. Am I correct in so translating the Senator's views?

If that be so, then would it not be the most singular thing that we should have forty-four States united under a common Constitution, and that each one of those forty-four States should have the power to tax these instrumentalities of its co-States and thereby destroy them?

If the Senator contends that it would, I ask him this question: Will he contend that the interest on a bond issued by the State of Louisiana, and held by a citizen of the State of Mississippi, could not be taxed in the State of Mississippi by her Legislature, in the possession of one of her own citizens, for the purpose of raising revenue?

Mr. GRAY. It can not be done. Let me say a word further, that the Senator may understand the position I take. The State of Louisiana, it is true, can not prevent the State of Mississippi from taxing the income of a citizen of Mississippi derived from a bond of the State of Louisiana. That is because there is no extra-territorial jurisdiction of the State; but the State of Mississippi can protect its own sovereignty within its own limits as to the conduct and obligation of its own citizens within its own borders, and when it permits those bonds to be taxed the power of the State goes with it, and therefore that does not interfere with the free agency of the State.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has unwittingly, forced by the circumstances of his argument, thrown away his whole case by the illustration. On what are we proceeding? We are proceeding, as the Senator himself admits, on an implied prohibition contained in the Constitution of the United States to tax incomes. That is his argument. His last position is that the Constitution of the United States can not protect a citizen of Mississippi against an unjust taxation imposed by the State of Louisiana, unless the State of Mississippi should interpose directly to do it? That surrenders the whole case. If it is unconstitutional to make that taxation, that is, unconstitutional as being a violation of the Constitution of the United States, it requires no interposition of the State in which the taxed man resides. He can go to any Federal court and have it enjoined.

Mr. President, I had these difficulties. I have listened with great attention to the very learned arguments made by Senators, and when I asked them to explain the ablest one among them—no; I shall not say that——

Mr. GRAY. That would be saying a great deal.

Mr. GEORGE. But I shall say a clear-headed constitutional lawyer undertakes to remove my first trouble by a distinction which never before, I suppose, existed in the mind of a constitutional lawyer, and could only have existed in his by being forced into it by the stress of his position, that there is a distinction between an express prohibition of the Constitution of the United States and an implied prohibition.

There is none. If a thing be unconstitutional and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, it is just as bad whether it comes from an express prohibition or from an implied prohibition. The only difference is that the man who argues in favor of the unconstitutionality of a certain provision has an easier task to perform to prove his proposition when he can put his finger upon an express prohibition. That is all. The Constitution is just as vigorous, just as efficient, just as strong to throw down and tear down and beat down everything which is in contravention of it, whether that thing be in contravention of an express prohibition or of an implied prohibition. It is all the same.

Here is another thing I should like the Senator from Delaware to explain. When this $500, or any other sum which comes to a taxpayer by reason of a payment to him of a debt due by the government of a State or the Government of the United States, when does that money cease to be interest?

Mr. GRAY. I refer the Senator to the case of Brown against the State of Maryland.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator calls my attention to a case which I had in mind, of Brown against the State of Maryland. There the court held—without going into the specific details of the opinion—that when the thing ceased to be an import, it became taxable. So when this debt due by the Government ceased to be a debt, it became taxable. Is there any answer to that?

Mr. GRAY. I want to ask the Senator when the salary of a

State judge ceases to be a part of the treasury of the State, an instrumentality of the State, and becomes a part of the common property of the judge?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall answer that when I reach that point in the discussion. I am talking now about income. The Senator must remember that an income is something which comes to the man who owns it; it is his property; it is his income, let it come from what source it may. Can it be said that after the interest has been paid to the creditor that there is any debt then left?

By the way, Mr. President, if you look at the nontaxability of the Federal bonds, the argument goes upon the idea that you can not tax a debt due by the United States. It is the obligation that you can not tax. When the interest has accrued and been paid over, the debt is extinguished. What interest——

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now.

What interest has any human being, other than the person to whom the interest has been paid, in that particular money? Money has no ear-marks, Mr. President. A dollar is a dollar. You can not distinguish one from another. Will the Senator from Delaware or any other Senator say that the payment of the interest, when it goes into the man's general fund, still carries with it a sanctity of constitutional law which prohibits it from being taxed? Will they please note the time when it loses that sanctity? When does it end? If he mingles it with his other funds, as everybody else does, or if he deposits it in a bank to his general account with his other funds, has it then lost its identity, or will he have, in order to preserve the specific identity of the very dollars which have upon them the sacred baptism of having been paid by the Government of the United States as interest on his bond, to keep them all separate and apart?

I want the Senator to explain that. How does it happen that this money thus paid becomes liable to taxation? Will the Senator say when he parts with it to somebody else? That is a very curious kind of sanctity, an exemption to a dollar that happens to have the honor of having been paid by the Treasurer of the United States to a debtor of the United States, and that shall be all banished the very first moment that the man who got the money should see proper to use it.

The Senator from Delaware forgets, and all the Senators who adopt the same view forget, that money is worthless to a man until he parts with it. That is one of the singular things about money. So long as a man will not part with it, it is of no value to him. Then, I suppose, according to the argument of the Senators, that as long as a man keeps it as his own you can not tax it, but just the moment he undertakes to make it of some value to himself then it becomes taxable.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now.

That is the argument, that is the position to which Senators are driven who maintain the proposition which I humbly conceive—and I speak of it with some little diffidence, as I have not perhaps given this matter the study I should like to have given it, as I did not know it was coming up—but that is the position, I will not say the absurdity, but the inconsistency to which they are driven, unless they have a better explanation for it than they have given for it here to-day.

Mr. President, the Senator says the power to tax incomes is going to ruin the credit of the States; and the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Louisiana seemed to think that if the world did not come to an end just the very day the tax was levied, certainly constitutional liberty would expire at that time, and we should have no more of the old system of constitutional government in this country.

Let us get out of all of that fine talk and come down to the very thing in the bill. Let us see what it is. A tax of 2 per cent upon an income, that is $2 in the hundred on the income—not $2 in the hundred on the principal which produces the income. That principal probably produces a hundred dollars at the rate of 3 per cent interest.

Have Senators considered how much a tax of 2 per cent upon the income of a bond-bearing 3 per cent interest would decrease the value of that bond? It is infinitesimal; I can not make the calculation. I believe some Senator said—I forget who it was—that if this thing were done bonds would go down and interest would go up to 10 or 12 per cent. If that is so, it is not because that is the legitimate logical result of this legislation, but it is because the men who deal in bonds speculate upon the misfortunes of their fellow-citizens. I say if this be so, it is because that class of men, without justification in the business aspect of the case, undertake to tax by increased interest the people of the United States, to punish them for an attempt on their part to levy a legitimate tax upon them.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of yielding to that kind of a menace. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] said a very true thing when he addressed the Senate upon this subject; that is, in all the exemption from taxation in the United States, the most unjustifiable was the exemption of bonds held by that class of men from taxation.

If they want to punish the people of this country by levying a tax which does not amount to prohibition as much as one-tenth of 1 per cent interest, by charging 4 or 5 per cent additional interest, all I have to say to them is, let them come and we shall try them on that. If they propose to raid the American people for the exercise of a common, fair, just right by extortion and pillage, we shall find some means of counteracting them.

So, Mr. President, to conclude the whole thing, to sum it all up, here is a Government tax to be levied for the support of the Government. I have a right to say that. We believe it is so, and Senators who argue for this exemption have no right to dispute that proposition. We decide that it is right and just and make this levy.

Sir, who are to be exempted? That class of our people who, of all others, ought to pay taxes. Those are all. I do not want to say anything to excite prejudice against bondholders, against millionaires, against rich people. That is a very cheap line of demagogy. I think a man has a right to fair and equal protection, whether he be worth a million dollars or whether he be worth $10; but I do not think he has any right to any more protection. I think a man who has made his million dollars by fair and honest and legitimate work is as much entitled to protection as a man who has made $10 by legitimate work: but he has not any more. If the humble are to be taxed for Federal purposes, as they are in the tax on consumption in all that they eat, in all that they wear, in all that they consume, it does seem to me, Mr. President, that the wealthy people of this country ought not to stand before the American people and claim an exemption from a tax so light as this.

That kind of claiming of exemption, that kind of claiming of special privileges, is the very thing which in these times men of wealth ought to avoid. If they will not avoid it upon a principle of honor, of decency, and of right, they ought to avoid it upon the more ignoble and selfish principle of self-preservation. That kind of claim has produced and is producing a prejudice against wealth and wealthy men which may, I fear, end in some attack upon the right of private property itself.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. I suppose he will answer me now.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer any question I can.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator to say—I do not wish to misrepresent him—that in case Government bonds were exempted and nothing said about it, we should probably tax the interest?

Mr. GEORGE. That is my opinion, and I understood it to be the opinion of the Senator himself on last Saturday.

Mr. HILL. I suggested that point, but I call attention to the fact that I was antagonized in that very strongly by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, who held that that was rank repudiation.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me make a statement right there. The Senator said that when the bond itself was exempted the interest also was exempted.

Mr. HILL. Did I say that?

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the question put to me?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. I answer that in this way: The unpaid part which still remains a debt due by the Government to the holder of the bond stands on the same footing as the bond itself. As soon as the interest is paid the Government is no longer debtor and the money becomes the property of the individual. Then I think the rule is different.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi, when he gets through, whether he has made or does make in his own mind any distinction between the case of Buffington and Day, the case of the salary and the case of the interest received on Government bonds as an income. I do not know but that the Senator has spoken of this point when I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not spoken of it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not like to talk on that subject because it is not before the Senate. Whenever there is a proposition before the Senate to tax the salaries of State officers, then I shall answer the Senator's question. I do not care to discuss it now. I am glad the Senator from Tennessee is not here, for I should feel as if I were incurring his everlasting hostility if I were to discuss a pure abstract question now. I shall not do it.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me—he is a great constitutional lawyer, as we all know; he has been a great chief justice of one of the States—I will state that I think that in the case of Buffington and Day——

Mr. GEORGE. Whether great or small, I have the right and the power of expressing opinions here if I wish.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. The case of Buffington and Day is by some minds regarded as an authority on the question we are discussing. The court have held that you can not tax the salary of a State officer, because it is a tax on a State function.

Now they say, by the same reasoning exactly, that you can not tax the interest on State bonds because it is a tax on a State function. My suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi was not sarcastic or ironical, but with entire and most absolute respect. I do not think it is asking the Senator to discuss a question not before the Senate. It is asking him if he can tell us why that argument is not an authority deciding the question before the Senate. That is what I ask.

Mr. GEORGE. I can answer that.

Mr. HOAR. That is all. I did not say the Senator has been a chief justice or ask the question in any spirit of derision or in jest, but in absolute respect and good faith.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer that question. It is a presumption upon which all salary laws are passed, though I regret to say that in reference to the salaries of Federal officials it is not always a just and fair presumption that the amount fixed for the salary is that sum which is necessary to secure to the State or the United States the services of a competent man to perform the duties of the office. I think I am right that far.

Now, if we allow an extra authority to come in and tax that compensation which the State has adjudged by its laws (and the State is the only competent authority upon that subject) is the sum which is sufficient to get a competent man to perform the functions of government intrusted to that officer, then we allow an outside authority to destroy the power of the State to have a competent officer. That is the plea for him which does not apply to business men who hold these bonds.

Mr. HOAR. Who buy them in the market.

Mr. GEORGE. Who purchase them in the market and hold them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. PATTON (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. PATTON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan withdraws his vote.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I understand he is necessarily absent for a portion of the day. Therefore I withdraw my vote, not knowing how he would vote on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Caffery,	Gray,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Callom,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Squire,
Davis,	Higgins,	Platt,	Teller,
Dixon,	Hill,	Power,	Washburn.
Dolph,	Hoar,	Proctor,

NAYS—30.

Allen,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bate,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Martin,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Mills,	Voorhees,

Cockrell,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Wilson,
Dubois,	Kyle,	Palmer,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the wording of that portion of section 55 which relates to what is called the inheritance and gift tax. The bill as it came to us from the other House provided for a tax upon all personal property received by gift, devise, and inheritance. The word "devise" was stricken out, because it relates only to real property. I suppose that is the point to the amendment.

Before making any motion in this regard I call the attention of the Senate to this omission. It has been said over and over again in the debate that the object is to have a perfect bill, to have as few exemptions as possible, so that the bill can be more easily defended. The bill purports to require every gift of personal property and all inheritances of personal property to be taxed 2 per cent, the same as all other items of taxation.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the word "inheritance" is any more applicable to personal property than the word "devise"?

Mr. HILL. Yes, it is. "Inheritance" includes both real and personal property, and "devise" includes real estate alone under the technical legal definition.

The pending bill, then, in its present shape excludes all gifts of real estate, although made in contemplation of death, and all real estate which is inherited. There is no dispute about that fact. I call attention to the peculiar situation of the bill. The collateral-inheritance statutes in the various States, now known more properly as inheritance and gift acts, because they have been enlarged so as to affect not only collateral relatives, but direct relatives to a very large extent, affect, for the main part in the respective States, only personal property.

In preparing the proposed law the parties who drew the bill have seen fit to tax that same personal property. Real estate is not taxed under these gift and inheritance acts. The very property which the States themselves have not assumed to tax the General Government steps in and does not tax, but the General Government steps in and assumes to tax just precisely what the States in the main assume to tax. There are some States, of course, where real estate is taxed, but in the main throughout the country those statutes relate simply to personal property. I call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that here is an omission, plain and distinct, placed in the bill for some good purpose or some bad purpose or for some purpose or other, whereby this species of property is entirely exempt.

I listened Saturday last to the distinguished Senator from Missouri, who argued very eloquently and ably that if a millionaire has $5,000,000 of personal property—he made the illustration in bonds then; the bond part is not essential now—or $5,000,000 in money, which he wants to give to a child, that that personal property should be taxed. It is said that if he dies without a will and leaves the property to his children it ought to be taxed. The Senator said there might be $5,000,000 of property, and argued eloquently and ably that the Government had protected this property and that when the party, in view of death or by will, makes the gift, or the child receives the inheritance, it ought to be taxed.

I simply suggest for the consideration of the Senate what about a gift of real estate worth $5,000,000? What about receiving $5,000,000 worth of real estate by inheritance? It is exempted by the terms of the bill. Now, I desire to know from the distinguished Senator from Missouri what are the grounds of that exemption. Are they legal, constitutional, or is it deemed best as a matter of discretion to exclude this class of property?

Mr. VEST. This is an income tax, and that is the answer to the Senator from New York. This section, a part of which he now proposes to amend in section 54, provides that the income tax shall be laid upon any kind of property, rents, interests, dividends, salaries, etc.

Mr. HILL. Where is that provision?

Mr. VEST. On page 170, lines 15, 16, and 17. If we exempted the rents of real estate, then the argument of the Senator from New York would be entirely pertinent and proper; but we do nothing of the kind.

We tax all incomes from any source whatever, and we specify the income coming from real estate. This portion of the bill which the Senator proposes to amend refers to personal property that comes by gift or inheritance. If the Senator could find any way to put real estate in the shape of an income derived by inheritance or gift, I should wonder at his ingenuity and ability, for I can not conceive how it could be done.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to line 25, page 171, which says, "the value of all personal property." Therefore personal property must be valued under the inheritance tax. I do not see any more difficulty in valuing real estate than personalty.

Mr. VEST. We put a tax immediately upon the income derived from real estate after it goes into the hands of the person to whom it descends. You can not, in my judgment, call it an income, when real estate is given to a party and you immediately put a tax upon the income derived from it.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest an instance to the Senator. A person has $100,000 in realty and $100,000 in personal property, both acquired by inheritance. The tax-gatherer must value the personal property and collect 2 per cent upon it at once; not upon the income of it afterward, but upon the actual property. What greater difficulty is there in valuing realty and collecting 2 per cent upon it than upon personal property? I do not see it myself.

Mr. VEST. The law of 1864, and the bill as it came over to us from the other House, disposed of real estate by putting a tax upon the income derived from it. Now, when personal property on the other hand comes to a party, it is treated as money, and the language of the bill as it came from the other House, which is copied, I think, from the act of 1864, is:

> The amount of money, notes, bonds, choses in action, and the value of any personal property received by gift, devise, or inheritance.

Mr. ALLISON. That value must be appraised. Otherwise the officers would not know what it is.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course.

Mr. ALLISON. So I do not see the difficulty in appraising real estate. I only call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. VEST. The proposed law here was dealing with personal property alone and money, which is personal property. The amendment which we made to the bill was simply to strike out the words "the amount of money, notes, bonds, choses in action," which are personal property, and say "money and the value of all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance."

In other words, the terms of the law originally in 1864 and in the bill as it came from the other House recognized the difference between perishable property or personal property and real estate, and put a tax upon the income of real estate and upon the personal property itself. As soon as a party receives from any one a piece of land, the income from the land becomes taxable under the proposed law, and therefore you can not say that the real estate is exempt from taxation.

Mr. HILL. The moment a party receives any personal property, does not the income thereafter become subject to the tax?

Mr. VEST. Yes. The phrase came to us in the bill originally and is found in the act of 1864. I suppose the assumption was that personal property could be used immediately and become a part of the income; that it was not like real estate, which is represented by its rent. The first part of the section to which I have alluded deals with real estate. The latter part of it deals with personal property. To increase the amount of liability to taxation by including in anybody's income not only the value of the real estate, but then proceed also to tax the rents of the real estate, it seems to me is a monstrous proposition, for it would be in the nature of double taxation and would be oppressive; but if the Senate upon argument thinks that is fair and proper, I have no pride of opinion about it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think there ought to be included in the yearly income which is to be taxed, either the real estate which may be received by devise or personal property which is received by inheritance or gift.

Mr. HILL. I am going to make a motion also in regard to that provision.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think it is any part of the yearly income. I think it is entirely foreign to the scheme of the bill.

I wish to state, while I am up, that there is no feature of the English income tax which is so odious in England as what they call the death duties. That is the name which they have given this sort of taxation in England. The death duties are very odious, and they ought to be odious in this country. They are no part of a person's real income.

Mr. CHANDLER. There seems to be no doubt at all that the bill adopts an inheritance tax right into the body of it.

Mr. HILL. And calls it an income tax.

Mr. CHANDLER. It purports to be an income tax, but it is an inheritance tax upon personal property. There is no doubt about that. It is an inheritance tax upon personal property only.

I believe that the State of New York has within a very few years adopted an inheritance tax, and that it realizes from taxes on inheritances within the State a very large sum of money, $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 annually.

Now, the income-tax provision which in theory is intended to tax the income for one year and another year, and so on year by year, proceeds to take 2 per cent out of every inheritance of personal property, no matter how large it is. There can be no escape, as it seems to me, from the assertion that here is an inheritance tax upon personal property and not an inheritance tax upon real estate. It seems to me that the distinction which has been drawn by Senators here is absolutely good, and that you have adopted the most astonishing feature of putting into an income tax an inheritance tax.

You have discriminated against the person who inherits personal property and in favor of the person who inherits real estate. I do not see that the distinction which the Senator from Missouri makes can possibly be good, that it is justifiable to make this distinction because after you have imposed this income and inheritance tax you continue to tax the income from real estate.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question before he takes his seat. How could you put this tax upon real estate unless you conform to the Constitution, which only permits the imposition of a direct tax on the basis of population?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri is only arguing against a theory which I shall not defend. I think it is a fundamental error to undertake to put an inheritance tax into an income-tax bill, and I hope the Senator from New York——

Mr. VEST, The Senator from New Hampshire does not answer my question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Wait a moment. I hope the Senator from New York, instead of moving to add to the bill a provision that there shall be a tax of 2 per cent upon all real estate, will move to strike out the 2 per cent tax upon personal property. Now, I will hear the Senator from Missouri again.

Mr. VEST. The bill, if the Senator will permit me, only provides a tax of 2 per cent upon the income derived from real estate. The Senator does not answer my question. The Constitution of the United States provides that no direct tax upon real estate shall be levied unless it be according to population. How could we have put this tax upon real estate itself under that provision of the Constitution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am happy to agree with the Senator from Missouri. I do not think he could have levied such a tax, but I think that therefore he had better strike from the bill the inheritance tax upon personal property. The Senator always convinces me when he is right.

Mr. VEST. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I always give careful and candid attention to the views which the Senator submits to the Senate. I think he is right in maintaining that you can not in the pending bill constitutionally tax an inheritance of real estate; but if you are dealing with incomes it is no reason for taxing an inheritance of personal property 2 per cent, once for all, by saying that as to real estate the annual income from it will be taxed in future years, because, as the Senator from New York has said, so will the income of the personal property be taxed in future years.

If you tax it 2 per cent as the inheritance tax and the person retains it in his possession when another year comes around, then of course you take the income derived from it and tax the income 2 per cent again. The proposition in the bill to add an inheritance tax is an anomaly which I am quite sure the Senator from Missouri, now that he has convinced himself that he can not constitutionally put an income tax on an inheritance of real estate, will strike out of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words before I move an amendment to the bill. It is difficult, allow me to say, for me to defend any sort of these gift and inheritance taxes. They are taxes which are easily collected, but it always appeared to me as if they were imposed without regard to any fixed principle of taxation for the reason that if A is the owner of a large amount of real and personal property upon which he pays to his Government and State all taxes which can be properly imposed upon it while he owns it, simply because he wants to transfer the property by deed or will or bill of sale to his nephew, his protégé, or whoever he pleases, the Government or State steps in, and because of the mere act of transfer, takes some portion of that property, because the moment the property vests in the transferee the State and the Government can step in and still tax the property, both real and personal.

In other words, it is a tax upon the property in transitu. While A owned the property he paid the just demands of government and when he transferred it the transferee pays the just demands of government, State and national. Therefore I do not take much stock in the theory that the collateral inheritance or the direct inheritance is founded upon any just principle. It is very difficult to defend it.

The first point which I am now making is that you have assumed to place in this tariff-reform bill first an income tax, and now you have endeavored to place in the income tax an inheritance. What a man receives by gift, that which he does not earn, is not an income within a proper sense of the term. That which my father leaves me by inheritance or by will is not an income within the proper, strict definition of the term. It is an inheritance. It is a gift which in my judgment ought not to be taxed by the General Government. At least there can be no sound reasons advanced why such a tax ought to be placed in the bill.

When the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from New Hampshire both agree upon the proposition that the income tax was withheld from real estate because of the want of constitutional power to impose it the matter needs a little further investigation. I am suspicious of the law when they both agree upon it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from New York allow me. A farm, a piece of real estate, passes from father to son to-day, and the Government by the bill would take, if such a clause were in the bill, 2 per cent of its value. Is not that a tax upon real estate? I agree with the Senator from New York that it is in no sense an income tax; it is an inheritance tax. But is there any possibility that when the Senator from Missouri and I agree upon that proposition, and the proposition itself is stated to the Senator from New York, he can get rid of the fact that it is a tax upon real estate if you take 2 per cent of it by the bill.

Mr. HILL. The chances are that both the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Missouri are wrong, and the difficulty is simply that the income tax law of 1864 or some of the various provisions of the laws of 1861, 1862, 1863, or 1864 did contain just such a tax.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator from New York sure of that?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. An inheritance tax is not an income tax.

Mr. HILL. Call it what you please; it matters not what you call it, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the imposition of that tax was not a tax upon real estate, but that it was a tax upon what they called the devolution of real estate.

The court upheld the tax, making the distinction that Congress could not tax land directly except in the manner pointed out by the Senator from Missouri, but that it had a right to step in and make this devolution tax, which was a tax not upon the land itself, but a tax upon the transfer, and that made it constitutional. Therefore, much as I regret to disagree, there is no prohibition upon Congress constitutionally placing in the bill an inheritance tax or a tax upon devolutions, because we must bow with respect to the decision of the Supreme Court upon that subject.

It is of no consequence whether the committee misapprehended the law or whether they proceeded upon the ground that it is not constitutional to do it. It has been omitted, and the fact remains that they do not propose to tax real estate or the devolution of real estate. They do not propose, under the provisions of the bill, to tax an inheritance or a gift of real estate. I call attention to the fact that here is a large class of property which by the terms of the bill is omitted from taxation.

Now, shall we amend the bill by including this large amount of real estate? With some propriety that might be done, because, as I said a moment or two moments ago, you do not then conflict to any extent with the State governments, because nearly all the inheritance and gift taxes of the State governments are taxed upon personal property just as this is, and are not taxed upon real estate. But the pending bill seems to desire double legislation and taxes the very same gifts and the very same inheritances which the States tax, instead of taking real estate inheritances and the real estate gifts which the States as a usual rule do not tax.

I make no motion to include real estate, especially not now. I do not know, of course, how much revenue is expected or desired under the pending bill. I heard the colloquy which took place Saturday last between the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which ought to be repeated to and impressed upon the country. It is as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether he has an estimate from the Treasury Department, or whether he has made any estimate himself as to the amount which the income tax will probably yield?

Mr. VEST. There never has been any estimate from the Treasury Department, except one made in an informal way by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the result of the tax upon corporations.

I will say very frankly to the Senator from Ohio, that the general estimate has been at $30,000,000, but I have never been able to find any reliable data on which to base an estimate, and I do not think anybody knows or can state what it will be.

I admire the frankness of the Senator from Missouri, but what a basis this is on which to frame a bill! Nobody knows what income is going to be produced.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It must have been extremely difficult for the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator to have made an estimate at any particular time as to the revenue to be derived from this tax, because the terms of the bill have been changed very frequently. The amendments which were offered very recently by the committee changed the revenue to be derived from the income tax very greatly. For instance, take the tax upon corporations. The tax upon corporations in the original Vest amendment, so called, would have been at least ten times as great as it is in the amendment as it now stands.

So, until the Senate shall determine to some extent at least what the provision of the income-tax part of the bill is to be, I think no intelligent estimate can be made as to the revenue. It may be $5,000,000, and it may be $50,000,000. I think, as it came from the House of Representatives, the revenue would have been nearer $50,000,000 than $30,000,000, and I am not sure but that as it stands now $30,000,000 would be a fair estimate of the revenue. But the terms of these various sections are so uncertain and indefinite that it is entirely impossible for any man, whether he be an expert or not, to make an estimate of its effect upon the revenues.

Mr. HILL. I know the difficulties which any expert must encounter, yet I think that by taking the census returns of wealth, and the House bill as it was presented here, or the Senate bill in substantially the shape in which it was originally reported, it would have been possible to have produced some estimate whereby we might have had some reasonably accurate information as to what we were doing. But now we are going it blind. It is conceded that we are. We are putting in not only an income tax without knowing what it will produce, but in addition to an income tax we are now putting in an inheritance and gift tax.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from New York answer me a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator now to be attacking the committee because they are not able——

Mr. HILL. I am not attacking the committee.

Mr. VEST. Attacking the bill, then. There is no choice between the words.

Mr. HILL. I am making suggestions in regard to it.

Mr. VEST. The Senator is antagonizing the measure upon the ground that there is no estimate of the amount of revenue to be derived. Now, if I am not mistaken, here is a succession and inheritance bill, sent me by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which I think was drawn by the Senator from New York. [Exhibiting.]

Mr. HILL (examining). I do not know where this bill came from.

Mr. VEST. I have understood—the Senator is entitled to have the question put frankly—that he is the author of the bill; that he could not introduce it in the Senate on account of the constitutional provision as to raising taxes, and it was sent by him to the Ways and Means Committee. I propose to ask him whether that is his bill?

Mr. HILL. It is a printed bill. It is not in my handwriting. I can not identify it.

Mr. VEST. The Senator can look at it and see whether the provisions in it were in the bill he drew.

Mr. HILL. I will answer the question in just a moment. When the tariff bill was first proposed and an income tax was suggested as a part of it, certain members of Congress, whose names I need not give, talked with me in regard to the income tax; and they suggested why would it not be proper to have such a tax as exists in the State of New York. I neither concurred in the propriety of that suggestion, nor did I oppose it. They asked me whether I was familiar with this subject, and I said that I was; that I had been interested in some very large litigations in the State of New York growing out of this question, which arose subsequent to my ceasing to be the chief executive of the State of New York.

I was entirely familiar with it. I was asked to prepare a bill for the taxation of collateral inheritances, which I did. I never introduced the bill; I never intended to introduce the bill. I could not, in fact, introduce it in the Senate, but at the personal request of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee I gave him a bill, which was drawn after consultation with a distinguished lawyer of the city of New York, with whom I was associated in a somewhat famous litigation. In just so far, and so far alone, I was in part responsible for some bill which was passed over to the Ways and Means Committee.

Allow me further to say that it was intended as a substitute for the income-tax provision and not as a part of it; but the Committee on Ways and Means seemed to grab both the income tax and then this tax, too, and made provision for both of them. I have never desired the General Government to pass either of these bills: but I was willing so far as I could, to assist the Ways and Means Committee, or certain other members of Congress who first spoke to me about it. Whether the Ways and Means Committee have incorporated it in here I am not prepared to say. I have thus answered the Senator's question very frankly.

I do not propose now to make a motion to tax real estate, or rather the devolution of real estate, which is the term used by the Supreme Court of the United States; but I do desire to call attention to the fact that the committee have omitted by the bill to tax real estate at all, directly or indirectly. They have framed a bill whereby the same property is taxed that the States themselves tax, and thereby there will be double taxation.

The first motion which I desire to make is to strike out the words at the bottom of page 171, in section 55, line 25:

Money and the value of all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance.

This motion does not involve now any question, constitutional or otherwise, relating to real estate. It involves simply the question of the propriety of keeping in the bill, which provides, first, for a tariff, and, second, for an income tax, the provision for a gift or inheritance tax. That this portion of the bill will realize a large amount of money there can be no doubt. It is a 2 per cent tax. Nearly all of the States which have this sort of taxation already tax the same class of property 5 per cent. This will make 7 per cent taxation, a burden which the estates can not very well bear.

As I said a moment ago, let your income tax be kept distinct and separate. I see no necessity for adding an inheritance and gift tax to the provisions for an income tax, because, as has been well said, it is not an income in the proper acceptation of the term. A gift is a matter of good fortune simply. A man makes a gift a half dozen times during his lifetime, and a person acquires property by the death of a relative but very few times in a lifetime. It is not an income in the proper sense of the term. Should the Federal Government step in and simply tax the charities of this world, simply tax the generosities of this world, simply tax the accidents of fortune, simply tax what a party leaves by his death in the way of personal property? I think not. Bear in mind, then, we will have double taxation—taxation of the State and Federal Governments.

I am making no question of the constitutional power of the General Government to impose this tax now. I simply say, that as a matter of propriety, as a matter of good legislation, it ought not to be done. I reiterate for the twentieth time that I stand here to protect the rights of the States in their proper field of taxation. You are taking away from the State governments large amounts of their revenues. These estates can not well pay these large sums. Let us leave something for the State governments. Tax the incomes of their citizens, tax their business if you please, but leave this inheritance and gift tax for the action of the State governments.

It seems to me that is proper and right, especially in view of the consideration that, in my judgment, there is no inherent justice in these taxes anyhow. I, owning property, pay my just taxes upon $10,000 worth of personal property all my life, and I desire simply to hand it over to my friend or any relative; I do not see the reason why for the mere act of the transfer the property should be taxed or the person should be taxed, and my transferee then pays his or her proportion of the tax after the property reaches him or her.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New York on the table.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to make a single statement?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to make a single statement?

Mr. VEST. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish the Senator from Missouri to yield to me but I wish the, Senator from Tennessee to yield to both of us.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Tennessee yields, and I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HARRIS. These appeals overwhelm me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I knew they would. I desire to ask the Senator from New York whether he understands the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the succession tax of 1864 was constitutional?

Mr. HILL. I have been so informed.

Mr. CHANDLER. If that is true, while I shall make the best distinction I can on this joint proposition of the Senator from Missouri and myself, I shall be obliged to admit that the Senator from New York in his contention has the Supreme Court of the United States on his side. I do not know whether a little matter of that kind will trouble the Senator from Missouri or not. It does not trouble me a great deal as a matter of original opinion, and yet I suppose we should be obliged to submit, if the bill becomes a law, to a like decision which might be made by the Supreme Court of the United States if the Supreme Court should adhere to the decision formerly rendered.

In the act of 1864 there is included, not as an income tax proper, not in the body of the income-tax portions of the act, but as a separate part of the act, a tax upon the succession to personal property and a tax upon the succession to real estate and the same rates of taxation are fixed upon a lineal descent, as from father to son, 1 per cent on the value; where the descent is through a brother, 2 per cent, and 4 per cent, 5 per cent, and 6 per cent on different kinds of inheritances. There is also a similar rate of imposition upon the succession to real estate, as the Senator from New York has stated; the succession is termed a devolution:

The term succession shall denote the devolution of title to any real estate.

As I understand the Senator from New York, the Supreme Court in sustaining a war tax held that taxing the devolution of real estate was not taxing real estate within the meaning of any supposed prohibition of a tax upon real estate, a direct tax, unless it was made in proportion to the population of the United States. Upon that ground it does appear that the succession to real estate or the devolution of real estate was taxed in the act of 1864, and the constitutionality of that tax was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

So we stand here to-day in this condition, that contrary to the opinion of the Senator from Missouri and myself, so far as the Supreme Court of the United States is concerned, there may be a constitutional inheritance tax upon real estate as well as a constitutional inheritance tax upon personal property, and that being the case I continue to argue to the Senator from Missouri that either this inheritance tax ought to be stricken out of the bill and no attempt be made to inflict an inheritance tax, a succession tax, at the same time with the imposition of an income tax, or else that, to be consistent and to do equity, the inheritance tax ought to be imposed not alone upon the inheritance of personal property but it ought also to be imposed upon the succession to real estate.

I can not myself see any difference equitably between the two classes of inheritances. If you tax the amount of each, after you have taxed the two, the income in future years from both these classes of property will be taxable under an income tax, and there is no justice or equity in taking 2 per cent every year that an inheritance falls in from an inheritance of personal property alone and carefully refrain from taking it upon an inheritance of real estate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have but a single word to say in reply to the Senator from New York. As a matter of course I would not occupy the floor for a single second simply to convict the Senator of any inconsistency, if there should be any, as to his action in regard to this succession and inheritance tax; but I am glad to be able to reënforce the position of the committee in regard to this question by producing here the bill which the Senator from New York says he prepared at the instance of his colleagues in the other House.

I understand the Senator, in the first place, to declare great reluctance as to any succession or inheritance tax at all, and he has given his reasons for that reluctance. Then, in the second place, he insists that, if there is a tax upon inheritance, so to speak, or more properly the descent and distribution of personal property, it should also be upon the value of real estate which descends to an heir or is given to any person. Then he moves to strike out that language in the pending bill which puts the tax upon the value of personal property which comes by descent or distribution to any person.

It is entirely fair to assume—it would be an outrage to assume otherwise—that when the Senator from New York prepared this bill which he sent to his colleagues in the other House, and which I obtained from the Ways and Means Committee, he put into it suggestively at any rate what he considered fair and proper legislation, he says now, as a substitute for this income tax provision. Whether it be a substitute or an original measure does not matter. I state that as a matter of course he would not have suggested even what he denounces now as false and vicious legislation.

Now, this bill (which I propose to put in the RECORD, because I say it reënforces the position of the committee in regard to this legislation) puts an inheritance and succession tax upon all personal property or real estate of more than $5,000 in value; but the clause to which I ask attentions is as follows:

First. Where the person or persons entitled to any personal property, income, or beneficial interest therein shall be the lineal issue or lineal ancestor to the person who died seized or possessed of such property as aforesaid, at the rate of $1 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear market value of such personal property or interest therein: Provided, That real estate passing to the persons referred to in this subdivision shall be exempt from taxation under this act.

In other words, the bill drawn by the Senator from New York exempts the real estate, although he now attacks the bill pending in the Senate because it does not include real estate as taxable when going by devise to any person whatever.

Mr. President, this bill, which I propose to put in the RECORD, certainly shows what the Senator thought was good legislation upon this subject at that time. He says it was intended as a substitute for the provisions of the pending bill, and it contains substantially, if not identically, the same provision of which such great and strenuous complaint is now being made.

The bill referred to is as follows:

An act to impose a collateral inheritance, legacy, or succession tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That after the passage of this act all property, real and personal, whatsoever, which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of any State or Territory from any person who shall die seized or possessed of the same, or any interest therein or income therefrom which shall be transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainer, to any person or persons, or to any body politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, or by reason whereof any person or body politic or corporate shall become beneficially entitled in possession or expectancy to any property or to the income thereof (where the whole of such property shall exceed the sum of $5,000 in fair market value) shall be, and hereby is, subject to a tax or duty, to be paid to the United States as follows, that is to say:

First. Where the person or persons entitled to any personal property, income, or beneficial interest therein shall be the lineal issue or lineal ancestor to the person who died seized or possessed of such property as aforesaid, at the rate of $1 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear market value of such personal property or interest therein: Provided, That real estate passing to the persons referred to in this subdivision shall be exempt from taxation under this act.

Second. Where the person or persons entitled to any property, real or personal, or to any beneficial interest therein, shall be the brother or sister of the person who died seized or possessed, as aforesaid, or a descendant of such brother or sister, at the rate of $2 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear market value of such property or interest.

Third. Where the person or persons entitled to any real or personal property or to any beneficial interest therein shall be a brother or sister of the father or mother, or a descendant of a brother or sister of the father or mother, or the person who died seized or possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $4 for each of every hundred dollars of the clear market value of such property or interest.

Fourth. Where the person or persons entitled to any real or personal property or to any beneficial interest therein shall be a brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, or a decendant of a brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, of the person who died seized or possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $5 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear market value of such property or interest.

Fifth. Where the person or persons entitled to any property real or personal or to any beneficial interest therein shall be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity than is hereinbefore stated, or shall be a stranger in blood to the person who died seized or possessed, as aforesaid, or shall be a body politic or corporate, at the rate of $10 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear market value of such property or interest:

Provided, That all property real or personal or any interest therein passing by will, or by the laws of any State or Territory, or by deed, grant, bargain, and sale, or other conveyance, to husband or wife of the person who died seized or possessed, as aforesaid, shall be exempt from tax or duty, unless such interest shall exceed the clear market value of $50,000, in which case the excess only over and above that sum shall be liable to taxation at the rate of $1 for each and every $100 of the clear market value of such excess:

Provided further, That any personal property or legacy or interest therein passing, as aforesaid, to a minor child of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, shall be exempt from taxation under this section, unless such property, legacy, or interest therein shall exceed the sum of $10,000, in which case the excess only above that sum shall be liable to such taxation at the rate of $1 for each and every $100 of the clear market value of such excess. The word "child" or "children" shall also include a child or children adopted as such, by the person who died seized or possessed, under and pursuant to the laws of any State or Territory; and the words "person" or "persons" in this act shall also include any body politic or corporate, organized under the laws of the United States or under the laws of any State, Territory, or foreign state or power.

SEC. 2. If a testator bequeathes or devises property to one or more executors or trustees in lieu of their lawful commissions or allowances, or makes them his legatees to an amount exceeding the commissions or allowances prescribed by law for an executor or trustee, the excess in value of the property so bequeathed or devised, above the amount of commissions or allowances prescribed by law in similar cases, shall be taxable under this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the tax or duty aforesaid shall be due and payable whenever the party interested in such property, real or personal, shall become entitled to the possession or enjoyment thereof, or to the beneficial interest in the profits accruing therefrom, and the same shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die seized or possessed thereof, as aforesaid, for ten years, or until the same shall, within that period, be fully paid to and discharged by the United States. It shall be the duty of every administrator, executor, or trustee having in charge or trust any property, real or personal, or interest therein, as aforesaid, to give notice thereof, in writing, to the collector or deputy collector of internal revenue of the district where the deceased testator, intestate, grantor, or bargainer last resided, within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust, property, or interest.

SEC. 4. Every executor, administrator, or trustee shall be personally liable for said tax until the same is paid, and before payment or distribution to the heirs, legatees, devisees, or any parties entitled to said property or any beneficial interest therein, such executor, administrator, or trustee shall pay to the collector or deputy collector of the district of which the deceased was a resident the amount of tax or duty assessed upon such property, and shall also make and render to the said collector or deputy collector of internal revenue of said district a schedule, list, or statement of the amount and character of such property, together with the amount of duty which has accrued, or shall accrue, thereon, verified by his oath or affirmation, to be administered and certified thereon by some magistrate or officer having lawful power to administer such oaths, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 5. The schedule, list, or statement referred to in section 4 shall contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interests therein, together with the clear market value of such interest; and upon such payment and delivery of such schedule, list, or statement said collector or deputy collector shall make out and deliver to such persons paying such duty or tax a receipt or receipts for the same, which shall be prepared as hereinafter provided. Such receipt or receipts, duly signed and delivered by such collector or deputy collector, shall be sufficient evidence to entitle such executor, administrator, or trustee to be credited and allowed such payment by every tribunal which, by the laws of any State or Territory, is or may be empowered to decide upon and settle the accounts of executors, administrators, and trustees.

SEC. 6. In case such executor, administrator, or trustee shall refuse or neglect to pay the aforesaid duty or tax to the collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore provided, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver to said collector or deputy collector the schedule, list, or statement of such property, real or personal, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall deliver to said collector or deputy collector a false schedule or statement of such property, or give the names and relationship of the person entitled to beneficial interest therein untruly, or shall not truly and correctly set forth and state therein the clear market value of such property or interest, and in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit.

SEC. 7. Any executor, administrator, or trustee on paying said tax to the collector or deputy collector within sixty days from the time of the death of the testator, intestate, grantor, or bargainer shall receive and be entitled to a discount of 5 per cent, which shall be allowed and deducted from said tax.

SEC. 8. Whenever the collector shall be dissatisfied with any statement, list, or schedule delivered to him as provided in the last section, or in case none shall be so delivered, or the tax shall not be duly paid, he shall commence appropriate proceedings, in the name of the United States, before any circuit or district court of the United States against any executor, administrator, trustee, or against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such property, real or personal, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or any portion of the same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court for the amount of said tax and costs, and from the proceeds of such sale the amount of such tax or duty, together with all costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by such court, shall be first paid, and the balance, if any, deposited according to the order of such court, to be paid under its direction to such person or persons as shall establish title thereto. Such decree or judgment shall likewise enforce the personal liability for said tax against any executor, administrator, or trustee. Upon the application of the collector or deputy collector, said circuit or district court shall, as often as and whenever occasion may require, appoint a competent person as appraiser to fix and ascertain the fair market value, at the time of the death of said testator, intestate, grantor, or bargainer, of the property of persons whose estates shall be subject to taxation under this act. If the property upon the passing of which a tax is imposed shall be an estate, income, or interest for a term of years, or for life, or determinable upon any future or contingent event, or shall be a remainder or reversion, or other expectancy, real or personal, the entire property or fund by which such estate, income, or interest is supported, or of which it is a part, shall be appraised immediately after the death of the testator, grantor, or bargainer, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, at the fair, clear, market value thereof at that time: Provided, however, That when such estate, income, or interest shall be of such a nature that its fair and clear market value can not be ascertained at such a time, it shall be appraised in like manner at the time when such value first becomes ascertainable.

SEC. 9. Such appraiser shall forthwith give notice by mail to all persons known to have an interest in the property to be appraised, including the collector or deputy collector, of the time and place when he will appraise such property. He shall at such time and place appraise the same at its fair market value, as herein prescribed; and for that purpose the said appraiser is authorized to issue subpœnas to and compel the attendance of witnesses before him, and to take the evidence of such witnesses under oath concerning such property and the fair market value thereof, and he shall make report thereof and of such value in writing to such court, together with the depositions of the witnesses examined, and such other facts in relation thereto as the court may require.

SEC. 10. Every such appraiser shall be paid, on the certificate of the clerk of the United Stares circuit court in the district in which said proceedings shall be pending, a fair and reasonable compensation not exceeding dollars per day, together with the actual and necessary traveling expenses and fees of witnesses, which sum shall be paid by the collector out of any funds he may have in his hands on account of any tax imposed under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. The report of such appraiser shall be filed with the clerk of the circuit or district court in which said proceeding is pending, and from said report and other proof before the court, after hearing the parties, said court shall determine the cash value of all property and estates and the amount of tax to which the same are liable. Said court shall also have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions arising under the provisions of this act. Upon such determination a decree or judgment for the amount of such tax shall be entered and may be enforced in the manner provided in section 7 of this act. Any person dissatisfied with or aggrieved by any determination, decree, or judgment under this act, including the collector, may appeal therefrom in the same manner and with the same effect as appeals are now taken from judgments or decrees under and pursuant to the laws of the United States in civil causes, providing that said appeal shall be taken within thirty days after the entry in said court of said judgment or decree.

SEC. 12. In any proceeding under this act, any collector is authorized to designate and retain such counsel as he shall deem necessary and proper to represent the United States therein, and to pay the expenses thereby incurred out of any funds which may be in his hands on account of this tax.

SEC. 13. The deed or deeds, or any proper conveyance of such property, personal or real, or any portion thereof, so sold under such judgment or decree, as hereinbefore provided, executed by the officer lawfully charged with carrying the same into effect, shall vest in the purchaser thereof, all the title of the delinquent to the property real or personal sold under and by virtue of such judgment or decree, and shall release every other portion of such property from the lien or charge thereon created by this act.

SEC. 14. Every person, or persons, body politic or corporate, who shall have in his or its possession, charge, or custody, any record, file or paper containing, or supposed to contain, any information concerning any property passing from any person who may die seized or possessed, as aforesaid, shall exhibit the same at the request of the collector or deputy collector of internal revenue in the district, and to any law officer of the United States, in the performance of his duty under this act, his deputy or agent, who may desire to examine the same. And if any such person having in his or its possession, charge, or custody any such records, files, or papers shall refuse or neglect to exhibit the same on request, as aforesaid, he or it so refusing shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500: Provided, that in all legal controversies where such deed or title shall be the subject of judicial investigation, the recital in said deed shall be prima facie evidence of its truth, and that the requirements of the law had been complied with by the officers of the Government.

SEC. 15. Any tax paid under the provisions of this act shall be deducted by the executor, administrator, or trustee from the particular property, legacy, distributive share, or interest on account of which the same is charged.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri should come into my office and want me to draw his will and tell me that he wanted to give his property in a certain peculiar way, and wanted me to draw it that way, preserving all the legal forms, I would draw it that way, and I would not be held responsible except for the legality of the will itself. The propriety of the will is a matter that he would have to shoulder. So, when a client comes into my office and asks me to draw a lease, the terms of the lease are his own. I simply prepare the paper so that it shall be in terms constitutional and legal.

I decline to be held responsible for any bill which I drew at the instance of any members of Congress simply as a matter of favor. It did not even embody my own views and was substantially a copy, so far as it could be framed, of the laws of the State of New York, with a few alterations which were suggested. That is all there was of it. The bill did not meet my assent, except I am free to say if we were to choose between the income tax on the one side and that bill upon the other, I would prefer that. That is all there is of it, Mr. President. I have introduced and drawn bills for other people before, and I do not propose to be held responsible for their terms, except so far as the legality of the bills is concerned; I presume it would be constitutional and drawn in proper shape, but the merits is entirely a different question.

Mr. President, the inheritance laws of New York tax personal property. My present recollection is they also provide for a tax upon real estate where the real estate goes to collateral relatives. I think you will find that is the distinction. There was no effort here I think to provide for the collateral relatives especially by a higher tax. Still there may have been. It is some time ago, and the precise details of the bill have, of course, gone out of my mind. Never at any time have I favored identifying an inheritance or gift tax proposition with an income tax. Take out your income tax to-day and substitute that measure, and I should certainly favor the substitution of one for the other. I do not think that the country needs either of them, and I think that either of these propositions does injustice to the States of the Union.

The State of New York realizes some $3,000,000 annually from the inheritance tax. When this question was first suggested, the Legislature of New York passed a joint resolution substantially unanimously protesting against any tax being imposed by the Federal Government upon gifts or inheritances, on the ground that it was invading the province of the States. I have in my desk somewhere, or possibly I submitted them here, the joint resolutions of the Legislature of my State, by Republicans and Democrats alike, protesting against this tax.

Mr. President, this tax is to be defended not because somebody at any time drew a bill in regard to it. Place that tax bill as a separate proposition, and it will be defended upon its merits or condemned for its demerits. The question is, Do you not only need an income tax proper, but do you need the revenues which are to be derived from this inheritance and gift tax? I think not. I think it is wiser in framing our legislation to leave these revenues to the State governments. They will have but little left after this bill passes except real and personal property upon which they can impose taxation. For these reasons I think my motion to amend ought to prevail.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. There will be no further debate. Will not the Senator allow a direct vote?

Mr. HARRIS. If I could be sure of that, I would quite as soon take the question on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his motion?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that a vote may be had upon the amendment now.

Mr. HARRIS. If unanimous consent is given, I will withdraw it, but not otherwise.

Mr. HILL. It seems to be given.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who has been called from the Chamber, and I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when Mr. MCPHERSON'S name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] is absent from the Senate owing to illness. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is absent.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Allison,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Patton,	Squire,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Teller,
Davis,	Hill,	Platt,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Hoar,	Power,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Proctor,

NAYS—34.

Allen,	Coke,	Irby,	Ransom,
Bate,	Daniel,	Jarvis,	Roach,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Turpie,
Blackburn,	George,	Lindsay,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Martin,	Walsh,
Call,	Gray,	Pasco,	White.
Camden,	Harris,	Peffer,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Pugh.

NOT VOTING—25.

Brice,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Stewart,

Cameron,	Kyle,	Murphy,	Wilson,
Carey,	Lodge,	Palmer,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	McPherson,	Pettigrew,
Gallinger,	Mills,	Quay,
Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,

So the amendment was rejected.

SENATORS FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I rise to a question of high privilege. I present the credentials of Hon. DONELSON CAFFERY, elected a Senator from the State of Louisiana by the General Assembly of that State now in session, for the unexpired term of the late Hon. Randall L. Gibson, ending March 3, 1895. I ask that the credentials may be read and that the Senator-elect be sworn in.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I present the credentials of Hon. NEWTON C. BLANCHARD, elected by the Legislature of Louisiana a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Hon. E. D. White, in the term ending March 3, 1897. I ask that the credentials be read.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senators-elect will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the paper which was last read was presented by Mr. CAFFERY of Louisiana, whose term of office under the appointment of the governor had expired as soon as the Senate was lawfully notified of the action of the State Legislature. So I suppose the gentleman who presented the paper is not now a member of the Senate. However, I am disposed to waive the objection in consequence of my high personal respect for the Senator-elect.

Mr. CAFFERY and Mr. BLANCHARD were escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. PASCO and Mr. CAMDEN, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them they took their seats in the Senate.

VENTILATION OF SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of Senators to the most intolerable condition this Chamber has been in during the day from the intense heat in the room.

There has been a good breeze out of doors all the afternoon. It has penetrated the corridors; they are cool and comfortable; but no matter what beneficent influences reign outside, none of them ever get into this Chamber. Somebody is at fault; I do not know who, but somebody, and the Senate ought to find out who it is.

I have had some experience and some service in this Chamber, and I have never before known the distressing conditions which have prevailed at the present session. There is gross carelessness and a wanton disregard of the health of everyone in this Chamber at the hands of somebody who is responsible. Without saying anything further, having called attention to what I know must have occupied the mind of almost every other Senator, I leave the matter there, trusting that it will be looked into. We are entitled to some system by which we may obtain some good fresh air in this Chamber and we do not get it.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. McLAURIN. Last Saturday there were two amendments to the bill under consideration and adopted by the Senate, and as this is the last day on which a motion to reconsider can be entered, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider in each case. I do not desire that the motion shall be passed upon now by the Senate, because I do not wish to delay the reading of the bill, but I should like at this time to enter a motion to reconsider and have it acted on at the end of the reading of the bill. The first is a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate whereby the amendment was agreed to in line 13, page 172, by inserting after the words "United States" the words "not including the judges of the courts of the United States, but."

The next is a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate whereby it inserted in line 13, section 55, the follwing words, to wit:

Not including the salary of the President of the United States and the judges of the courts of the United States, but.

I desire to enter these motions.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me a moment?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. As far as the motion to reconsider the amendment excepting the President's salary is concerned, I desire to know whether the Senator voted in the affirmative?

Mr. McLAURIN. I will state candidly that I did not vote in the affirmative in either case, but as the yeas and nays were not taken, I have understood it to be the rule of all deliberative bodies (certainly in all deliberative bodies of which I have been a member) that that requirement does not apply. I am glad to say that I did not vote in the affirmative in either case.

Mr. HILL. It might be impossible to ascertain if the Senator stood upon his question of privilege and declined to answer as to whether he had or had not supported the affirmative or prevailing side, but the Senator frankly acknowledges that he voted against both amendments. I therefore raise the point of order that the motion to reconsider can not be entertained at this time. The Senator himself has no power to make the motion.

Mr. McLAURIN. After my frank avowal that I voted against the amendments? I suppose in any case a Senator would frankly avow his vote when he made a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HILL. Very well. I was going to suggest to the Senator, it is not a matter of very much consequence, because when the bill gets into the Senate those amendments can be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understand that, but I prefer to raise the question by a motion to reconsider for reasons that I do not feel it necessary to give.

As I was saying, any Senator will avow his vote on any motion to reconsider, but it has been the rule of all deliberative bodies of which I have any knowledge that the question can not be raised and is never raised where there was no record of the vote by yeas and nays. I do not think the point of order is well taken. I prefer to raise the question in this way. If the point of order is well taken I shall raise it in another way.

Mr. HILL. The Senator prefers to resort to the technical way, and of course he must be governed and adjudged by technicalities. I submit the question to the Senate that where a Senator acknowledges that he voted against a prevailing amendment he has no right to move to reconsider.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not state that I preferred to raise the question in a technical way. I stated that I preferred to raise it in this way, by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. By the unanimous consent agreement under which we are proceeding the paragraphs and sections of the bill are to be taken up in their order, and certainly it is not in order for a Senator to move to reconsider a question which was acted upon at any time in the past. If that were the case there would be no end to this discussion; we would have questions of reconsideration pending all the time. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that this method of procedure would destroy absolutely the unanimous consent agreement upon which we are proceeding.

Mr. McLAURIN. If there is a unanimous consent agreement of that kind I shall not enter the motion, because I would be not only unwilling, but I would absolutely decline to violate any unanimous agreement that had been made by the Senate. If there is an agreement of that kind I was not aware of it.

Mr. HARRIS. There was a unanimous consent agreement that the bill should be read by paragraphs and the committee amendments disposed of first; that after that such amendments as Senators chose to offer should be received; and that we should proceed in that order. I did not hear the motion or suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi; but the Senator can avail himself of his opportunity hereafter, which will be just as ample as now. I hope he will not insist on going back to a part of the bill which has been passed upon as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if the unanimous consent agreement included an agreement not to enter any motions to reconsider. Is that his understanding of the agreement?

Mr. HARRIS. My understanding of it is that we shall proceed in regular order, reading paragraph after paragraph, and disposing of the committee amendments first and then such amendments as may be offered by Senators.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not ask for the consideration of the motions to reconsider at this time. I merely wished to enter the motions.

Mr. HARRIS. The effect of going back to some past vote and asking to reconsider it now I think is hardly in keeping with the spirit and intent and purpose of the agreement that was made at the beginning.

Mr. McLAURIN. If that is the spirit of the unanimous consent agreement, I withdraw the motions to reconsider.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend section 55, on page 172, the second line, by inserting, after the word "whatever," the words:

Except rents from real estate.

Mr. President, I desire to say a few words upon this most important amendment. In the first place, I desire to ask the distinguished Senator from Missouri whether it is intended that rents from real estate shall be taxed under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. VEST. Unquestionably. There is a specific provision in the bill to that effect.

Mr. HILL. Where?

Mr. VEST. On page 170:

Whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries.

Mr. HILL. This brings up the question as to whether the method of taxation proposed by the terms of the bill is constitutional or not. A few moments ago it was said that real estate proper could not be taxed under an income tax; that if real estate is desired to be taxed it can only be done under a tax levied upon the respective States in proportion to their population, as required by the Constitution of the United States.

The point was suggested the other day that if real estate per se could not be taxed, the rental therefrom could not be taxed. I submit to the consideration of the Senate that a tax upon rentals of real estate is a tax of the use of real estate, that it is in substance a tax upon land, and is therefore within the prohibition of the Constitution.

This presents an entirely different question from that embraced in other portions of this section, whereby any income tax must be paid upon articles raised on the real estate. That must proceed upon the principle that the articles which are raised upon the real estate by being severed from the land become personal property and not a part and parcel of the real estate, and that it is to some extent immaterial where the articles were raised, so long as they belong to the party sought to be taxed. I am not clear that you have a right even to tax what is raised from real estate, the productions of real estate. I have, however, not seen fit to raise that question, but prefer to raise the clean, neat, legal question, whether you can tax the rental of real estate.

Mr. President, I need not reiterate the well-understood doctrine that the General Government can not do indirectly what it can not do directly. A few moments ago the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from New Hampshire were disposed to acquiesce in the suggestion that real estate could not be included in a succession tax, because it was real estate, and although there was no tax per se upon real estate, yet there was a tax upon its transfer, which was virtually a tax upon real estate. I should have been prepared to say that their reasoning was sound and that they were right except for the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided expressly the very point involved, and of course we must bow with all due respect to that decision.

But as an original proposition, I would be prepared to say that I think their position was the correct one, that it was virtually a tax upon real estate, and simply saying that it was a tax upon the transfer was an evasion of the real question involved.

But acquiescing in the decision of the Supreme Court, we are now presented with another question. Real estate can not be taxed directly by the General Government except upon a basis of population. Therefore a citizen owning some real estate, not using it himself, rents that property out. He derives not a certain proportion of its production. That would raise the other question. But he receives certain money rent; he receives certain sums for the use of that real estate.

Taxation of the use of real estate is taxation upon real estate. It is impossible to draw a distinction between the two. It seems to me this brings up the general question suggested so well and ably by the Senator from Massachusetts a few days ago. The rents of real estate issuing out of the land for money purposes being a part of the land, considered in some respects as personal property, in other respects in law regarded as realty, it strikes me are just as much protected as the real estate itself. The owner, instead of occupying it himself, leases out his property. The income that is derived from it arises out of the real estate. If the principal is exempt, the interest should be exempt.

You heard the argument made here the other day. I do not say that I entirely concurred in it. I simply suggested it, knowing what points would arise later in the discussion. If the bonds of the Government were simply themselves exempt, it was argued here with great force that whether the statute said that the interest should be exempt or not, the interest should be exempt upon the ground that it was so connected with the principal and so identified with it that the interest was to be exempted as a part of it.

I invoke that same argument, made here by several distinguished Senators, upon this point, and insist that the interest, or use, or rentals of real estate (and my amendment confines it to the single point of rentals) are exempt provided the real estate itself is exempt. This question is easily solved. Starting out with the position clear and distinct that the real estate can not be taxed directly, then that portion of the rents received from the real estate must be exempt also.

Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate with any lengthy discussion of this question. It is a legal question. If we pursue the course suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, that we should leave all these constitutional questions to the court, then of course there should not be substantially any exemption. But it seems to me that the rentals of real estate should be treated upon the same plane and the same basis as real estate itself. While the States have the exclusive power to tax real estate, except under a particular form of taxation which is not this, the rentals should also go with that real estate and be entitled to the same privileges and the same exemptions.

I trust I have made myself clear on the point which I desired to make, and that is, of course, all I desire to do in the premises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote upon the amendment without further debate, let the vote be taken. I rose to move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. I do not see that anyone desires to debate the question.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote I shall not move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. I simply call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], but I have reserved the right to vote to make a quorum. If there is not a quorum voting, I vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. Both Senators are absent.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE. I vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] is not present; and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to state that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] is necessarily detained from the Chamber to-day. He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has not voted.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Dixon,	Hoar,	Platt,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Power,
Chandler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Patton,	Washburn.
Davis,	Hill,	Perkins,

NAYS—36.

Allen,	Coke,	Jarvis,	Pettigrew,

Daniel,	Kyle,	Quay,	Wilson,
Dolph,	Lodge,	Ransom,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Gallinger,	Mills.	Shoup,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the next section.

Mr. ALLISON. What has become of all the amendments following in section 55? Have they all been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that all have been agreed to, except the proviso at the end of the section, which was temporarily passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Chair state that all the other committee amendments have been agreed to in section 55?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so advised.

Mr. ALLISON. The last amendment to the section was passed over, according to my recollection.

Mr. VEST. I think that was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. Can not we dispose of that now?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the suggestion was made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], that we should pass it over until we disposed of the corporation features of the bill.

Mr. VEST. Of course, if the subsequent provisions of the bill are defeated this will fall with them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the amendment be adopted pro forma.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri offered an amendment, I understood.

Mr. VEST. I modified the amendment, and that was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Secretary to read the proviso as it now stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as dividends upon the stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 2 per cent has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 56. That it shall be the duty of all persons of lawful age having an income of more than $3,500 for the taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, to make and render a list or return, on or before the day prescribed by law, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the deputy collector of the district in which they reside, or to such officer or agent as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may designate, of the amount of their income, gains, and profits, as aforesaid; and all guardians and trustees, executors, administrators, agents, receivers, and all persons acting in any other fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a list or return, as aforesaid, to the deputy collector of the district in which such person acting in a fiduciary capacity resides, or to such officer or agent as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may designate, of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom they act, but persons having less than $3,500 income are not required to make such report; and the deputy collector, or officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall require every list or return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party rendering it, and may increase the amount of any list or return if he has reason to believe that the same is understated; and in case any such person having a taxable income shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list and return, or shall render a false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the deputy collector, or officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to make such list, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person, or his books or accounts, or any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the tax due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return; and in all cases of a false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of tax ascertained to be due, the tax and the additions thereto as a penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a list or return or of rendering a false or fraudulent return: Provided, That any party, in his or her own behalf, or as such fiduciary, shall be permitted to declare, under oath or affirmation, the form and manner of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that he or she, or his or her ward or beneficiary, was not possessed of an income of $4,000, liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act; or may declare that he or she has been assessed and paid an income tax elsewhere in the same year, under authority of the United States, upon his or her income, gains, or profits, as prescribed by law; and if the deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent, shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, shall thereupon be exempt from income tax in the said district for that year; or if the list or return of any party shall have been increased by the deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent, such party may exhibit his books and accounts, and be permitted to prove and declare, under oath or affirmation, the amount of income liable to be assessed; but such oaths and evidence shall not be considered as conclusive of the facts, and no deductions claimed in such cases shall be made or allowed until approved by the deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent. Any person feeling aggrieved by the decision of the deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent, in such cases may appeal to the collector of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final. If the person is dissatisfied with the decision of the collector he may submit his case, with all the papers, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision, and if he desires to furnish the testimony of witnesses to prove any relevant facts he will also serve notice to that effect upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as herein prescribed.

Such notice must state the time and place at which, and the officer before whom, the testimony will be taken; the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witness, with the questions to be propounded to the witness, or a brief statement of the substance of the testimony he is expected to give.

The notice shall be delivered or mailed to the Commissioner a sufficient number of days previous to the day fixed for taking the testimony, to allow him, after its receipt, at least five days, exclusive of the period required for mail communication with the place at which the testimony is to be taken, in which to give, should he so desire, instructions as to the cross-examination of the proposed witness.

Whenever practicable, the affidavit or deposition shall be taken before a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, in which case reasonable notice shall be given to the collector or deputy collector of the time fixed for taking the deposition or affidavit:

Provided further, That no penalty shall be assessed upon any person for such neglect or refusal or for making or rendering a false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be regulated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, so as to give the person charged an opportunity to be heard.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the section, on page 174, in line 20, after the word "day," to strike out "prescribed" and insert "provided;" in line 21, after the words "may be," to strike out "prescribed" and insert "directed;" in line 23, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector or a;" in line 3, on page 175, after the word "persons," to insert "or corporations;" in the same line, before the word "fiduciary," to strike out "other;" in line 5, before the words "deputy collector," to insert "collector or a;" in line 6, after the word "person," to insert "or corporation;" in line 7, after the word "resides," to insert "or does business;" in line 12, before the words "deputy collector," to insert "collector;" in line 19, after the words "render a," to insert "willfully;" in line 21, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector;" in line 24, after the word "person," to strike out "or his books or accounts;" on page 176, line 4, after the words "cases of a," to insert "willfully;" in line 11, before the words "in his," to strike out "party" and insert "person, or corporation;" in the same line, after the word "his," to strike out "or;" in the same line, after the word "her," to insert "or its;" in line 15, after the word "he," to strike out "or;" in line 16, before the word "ward," to insert "or its;" in line 19, after the word "he," to strike out "or;" in the same line, after the word "she," to insert "or it, or his, her, or its ward or benificiary"——

Mr. VEST. There is a misprint there in the spelling. The word "benificiary" should be "beneficiary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That verbal correction will be made. The reading of the amendments will proceed.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, before the word "pay," to insert "has;" after the word "upon," at the end of line 21, to insert "all;" in the same line, before the word "her," to strike out "or," and after the word "her" to insert "or its;" in the same line, after the word "profits," to insert "and upon all the income, gains, or profits for which he, she, or it is liable as such fiduciary;" in line 25, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector;" on page 177, line 1, after the word "declaration," to insert "such person or corporation;" after the word "any," at the end of line 3, to strike out "party" and insert "person or corporation, company, or association;" in line 5, after the words "increased by the," to insert "collector;" after the word "such," at the end of line 6, to strike out "party" and insert "person or corporation, company or association;" in line 8, after the word "may," to strike out "exhibit his books and accounts, and;" in the same line, after the word "prove," to strike out "and declare, under oath or affirmation:" in line 11, before the word "shall, to strike out "oaths and evidence" and insert "proof;" in line 13, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector;" in line 14, after the word "person," to insert "or company, corporation, or association;" in line 17, before the word "officer," to strike out "other designated" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "agent," to insert "other than the collector;" in line 20, after the word "if," to strike out "the person is;" in line 21, after the word "collector," to strike out "he may" and insert "such person or corporation, company or association;" in line 23, before the word "submit," to insert "may," and after "submit," to strike out "his" and insert "the;" on page 178, line 1, before the word "furnish," to strike out "if he desires to" and insert "may;" in line 2, after the word "facts," to strike out "he will also serve" and insert "having served;" in line 5, after the word "notice," to strike out "must" and insert "shall;" in line 12, after the word "Commissioner," to insert "of Internal Revenue;" in line 24, after the word "person," to insert "or corporation, company, or association;" on page 179, line 1, after the words "rendering a," to insert "willfully;" in line 3, after the words "to be," to strike out "regulated" and insert "prescribed;" and in line 4, after the words "internal Revenue," to strike out "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, so as to give the person charged an opportunity to be heard;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 56. That it shall be the duty of all persons of lawful age having an income of more than $3,500 for the taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, to make and render a list or return, on or before the day provided by law, in such form and manner as may be directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which they reside, or to such officer or agent as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may designate, of the amount of their income, gains, and profits, as aforesaid; and all guardians and trustees, executors, administrators, agents, receivers, and all persons or corporations acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a list or return, as aforesaid, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which such person or corporation acting in a fiduciary capacity resides or does business, or to such officer or agent as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may designate, of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom they act, but persons having less than $3,500 income are not required to make such report; and the collector, deputy collector, or officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall require every list or return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party rendering it, and may increase the amount of any list or return if he has reason to believe that the same is understated; and in case any such person having a taxable income shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list and return, or shall render a willfully false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the collector, deputy collector, or officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to make such list, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person, or any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the tax due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return; and in all cases of a willfully false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of tax ascertained to be due, the tax and the additions thereto as a penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a list or return, or of rendering a false or fraudulent return: Provided, That any person or corporation, in his, her, or its own behalf, or as such fiduciary, shall be permitted to declare, under oath or affirmation, the form and manner of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that he, she, or his or her or its ward or beneficiary, was not possessed of an income of $4,000, liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act; or may declare that he, she, or it, or his, her, or its ward or beneficiary has been assessed and has paid an income tax elsewhere in the same year under authority of the United States, upon all his, her, or its income, gains, or profits, and upon all the income, gains, or profits for which he, she, or it is liable as such fiduciary, as prescribed by law; and if the collector, deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, such person or corporation shall thereupon be exempt from income tax in the said district for that year; or if the list or return of any person or corporation, company, or association shall have been increased by the collector, deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent, such person or corporation, company, or association may be permitted to prove the amount of income liable to be assessed; but such proof shall not be considered as conclusive of the facts, and no deductions claimed in such cases shall be made or allowed until approved by the collector, deputy collector, or other designated officer or agent. Any person or company, corporation, or association feeling aggrieved by the decision of the deputy collector, or any officer or agent other than the collector, in such cases may appeal to the collector of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final. If dissatisfied with the decision of the collector, such person or corporation, company, or association may submit the case, with all the papers, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision, and may furnish the testimony of witnesses to prove any relevant facts, having served notice to that effect upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as herein prescribed.

Such notice shall state the time and place at which, and the officer before whom, the testimony will be taken; the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witness, with the questions to be propounded to the witness, or a brief statement of the substance of the testimony he is expected to give.

The notice shall be delivered or mailed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a sufficient number of days previous to the day fixed for taking the testimony, to allow him, after its receipt, at least five days, exclusive of the period required for mail communication with the place at which the testimony is to be taken, in which to give, should he so desire, instructions as to the cross-examination of the proposed witness.

Whenever practicable, the affidavit or deposition shall be taken before a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, in which case reasonable notice shall be given to the collector or deputy collector of the time fixed for taking the deposition or affidavit:

Provided, further, That no penalty shall be assessed upon any person or corporation, company, or association, for such neglect or refusal or for making or rendering a willfully false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. Before we pass from this section, I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that in line 5, on page 179, the words he proposes to strike out, "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury," are the important ones that I suppose the Senator desires to strike out, and I ask him to allow the remaining words to stand.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to in the absence of objection. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether the Democratic agreement to take this bill as it is, no matter what anybody may think of it, extends to the spelling in line 19, on page 176, where the word "beneficiary" is spelled "b-e-n-i-fi-c-i-a-r-y."

Mr. VEST. That has been corrected. We knew the Senator from Massachusetts would object, and so we corrected it in advance.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the Democratic caucus had probably adopted this spelling of the word.

Mr. VEST. Oh, no; we knew the Senator would find it out, and so we corrected it.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment to the section after line 10, on page 178.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10, on page 178, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person taxed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOAR. Why should not the Government be at liberty to take testimony at some other place, if it be more convenient?

Mr. ALLEN. I simply offered the amendment because this part of the section providing for the taking of testimony provides for the taking of evidence of witnesses on behalf of the person who is delinquent. I think the Government ought at the same time and place and before the same person have the right to take testimony to rebut the evidence taken by the tax debtor.

Mr. HOAR. I have not considered this question and it is not, I suppose, a very important matter, but it is hardly just to the Government to put it into the power of the taxed person to select the magistrate, to fix the time, and to fix the place where not only his own testimony shall be taken, but the Government testimony shall be taken. There is nothing that requires it to be done in the district. Suppose some taxpayer in the city of New Orleans should notify the Government official to go down there and take testimony about his property in Massachusetts; thereupon not only the testimony has to be taken there, but all the rebutting testimony. I leave it to the Senator from Missouri to look after this matter; but it strikes me that it is hardly a just arrangement.

Mr. ALLEN. I realize the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts; but I think this statute ought to be broad enough to permit the Government to take testimony in rebuttal of the testimony of the tax delinquent at any time. I am perfectly willing to have this amendment so broadened that the Government may take the testimony before the same person at the same time and place, or before any other qualified officer at any proper time and place, upon five days' notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that if he proposes to agree to this amendment he have it carefully prepared, so that if there is to be an examination, with counsel upon each side and at more than one place, it shall be so provided that at any hearing or examination due notice may be given to the other side; otherwise it would be a disadvantage, perhaps, at one time to the Government and at another time to the party taxed, if the testimony should be taken without due notice. The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Nebraska can prepare the phraseology, and see that it is adapted to the subsequent sections.

Mr. VEST. The bill sufficiently provides for the protection of the citizen. As I understand the Senator from Nebraska, he is under the impression that the Government ought to be permitted to take testimony at the same time and place. The provision in the bill now requires that a sufficient notice shall be given to the officials of the Government so that they can be there and subject the witnesses to cross-examination. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes that the Government may have an opportunity to take testimony at some other time and place. If that be granted, clearly, therefore, it ought to be included that the other side shall have notice of that examination. My suggestion is only to the effect that the provision be carefully examined by the Senator from Missouri before he agrees to it becoming part of the proposed law.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to fortify the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] by calling attention to the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] says that depositions may be taken by the Government at the same time and place, but it does not appear to require that notice shall be given of the names of witnesses. The provision as to the taxpayer requires him to state the time and place, "the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witness." That is, of course, so that the Government may know what it is to meet. If the Government is to take testimony at the same time, it ought to give a like notice.

Mr. HALE. And under like restrictions.

Mr. CHANDLER. And there should be the same restrictions upon the Government.

While I think the provision moved by the Senator from Nebraska is well enough, it should certainly not give the Government the right to appear at the time of the taking of the deposition of any witness, or any number of witnesses, and take their testimony, without having previously given to the taxpayer the same notice which the taxpayer was compelled to give the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. I drew this amendment very hastily while sitting at my desk when the Secretary was reading the bill. I did not take the time to draw it with as much care as I should have done if this matter had come to my attention before. I introduced it more for the purpose of putting the committee on notice of the fact that this proposed law might be evaded, and that it would work a practical injustice to the Government.

It strikes me that it is absurd to say that a person who is assessed under this law and who is dissatisfied with the assessment, might appeal to the collector of internal revenue and take testimony in support of his appeal, and at the same time the Government be powerless to rebut the testimony taken or to introduce any new facts which might be essential to establish the truth. I take it for granted that, while my amendment is imperfect, having been drawn so hastily, the committee are put upon their notice, and that they will draft the proper amendment and submit it to us.

Mr. VEST. We considered these provisions of the bill very carefully, and I want to say now that I think if the Senator from Nebraska will examine the whole section carefully he will be satisfied that it is in very good shape as it now stands.

These provisions apply to a case where the collector increases the amount of the return made by any taxpayer, and if the taxpayer is dissatisfied with the action of the collector, he can then give notice, fix a day, and bring his witnesses to convince the collector that he has not diminished the amount of his return, but has made it correctly.

It is a question for the collector to be satisfied in regard to what has been done by himself. It is brought before him. It is not a proceeding in court of a plaintiff and defendant in the strict sense or in the proper signification of the term. It simply applies to a case where the collector for some reason comes to the conclusion that the return is not a proper one and he increases it.

This practice obtains in a great many States. In my own State, for instance, where a taxpayer has not made a proper return of his property the officer, if satisfied that such is the case, that there has been some suppression of the truth or even some mistake, increases the amount of the assessment; and then we have a day there for correcting assessments, upon which the party may appear, bring his witnesses, and be sworn himself, and convince the officer, if he can, that the assessment is correct both as to quantity and as to value. That is all of it. I think there are sufficient safeguards here for the Government. The material point is to guard the citizen. He will have under the provisions of this proposed law every right that can possibly be conceived of under the circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not propose to be captious about this matter at all. I am well satisfied that the amendment I offered, or one similar to it, but probably broader, ought to be adopted if this bill becomes a law. As I understand the bill, any person who refuses to make a proper return to the assessor, or who willfully neglects to make that return, the assessor is authorized to assess him, and to make a list of his property from the best information he may be able to obtain. Then the delinquent is permitted to appeal from that assessment to the collector of internal revenue, and take evidence in support of his appeal.

I take it for granted that the man who will not make an honest return, or who will not make any return at all, proposes to defraud the Government. If he has an opportunity to make a return and will not make it, or if he has an opportunity to make a return and makes a fraudulent return, and compels the assessor of internal revenue to rely upon his own judgment and independent sources of information, I take it for granted that that kind of a man will pursue his fraudulent purposes further, and undertake to defeat the Government in getting a corrected return of his property and his assessable income.

If he is permitted to take testimony before some officer, and then appeal from that officer to the Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington, I take it for granted that the Government may be defeated and will be defeated in a majority of instances in the collection of the proper revenue from that man by that merely ex parte method of doing business, and that fairness to this Government and good faith in the execution of this proposed law requires that the Government should have ample power to show that that man has made a fraudulent or an unjust return, and ample power to rebut all testimony that he may have produced; and, Mr. President, more than that, ample power on the part of the Government to introduce independent testimony showing the fact, independent of this evidence, that the assessment ought to be raised.

This proposed law, in my judgment, is absolutely harmless against a man who intends to defraud the Government with these provisions standing in it alone. It strikes me that there can be no glossing over of this matter. Every man who has had experience as a lawyer or who has had experience in the assessment of revenue understands full well how these laws can be evaded.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10, on page 178, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person taxed.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "upon like notice" after the words "take testimony."

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think there can be any objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "take testimony," in line 3 of the amendment, it is proposed to insert "upon like notice;" so as to read:

Provided, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony, upon like notice, to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person taxed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, of course the same understanding exists with reference to all these sections, that at the end I may move to strike them all out.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. That has been understood from the beginning.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 57. The taxes on incomes herein imposed shall be due and payable on or before the 1st day of July in each year; and to any sum or sums annually due and unpaid after the 1st day of July as aforesaid, and for ten days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be levied, in addition thereto, the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of taxes unpaid, and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same became due, as a penalty, except from the estates of deceased, insane, or insolvent persons.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the section, in line 14, after the word "same," to strike out "became" and insert "becomes;" so as to read:

And interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same becomes due as a penalty, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Is there anywhere in this bill a provision for exemption in the case of accident or mistake from this heavy penalty of 12 per cent, and, in addition, 5 per cent?

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes; there is a provision here which gives the Secretary of the Treasury ample power to correct any mistake or to remit any penalty.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed there would be such a provision somewhere.

Mr. VEST. The last provision at the close of the income tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 58. That every nonresident person owning property in the United States or receiving income from the United States shall pay a tax on the income received as if resident in the United States. Any such nonresident may also receive the benefit of the exemption by filing with the deputy collector of any district a true list of all his property in the United States, or sources of income, in the same manner as a resident is required to do. In computing income for purpose of exemptions he shall include all income from every source, but shall only pay on that part of the income which is derived from any source in the United States. In case such nonresident fails to file such statement, then the deputy of each district shall collect the tax on the income derived from his district, making no allowance for exemptions, and all property belonging to such nonresident shall be liable to distraint for tax: Provided, That nonresident corporations shall be subject to same laws as to tax as resident corporations, and the collection of the tax shall be made in same manner as provided for collections of taxes against nonresident persons.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment after the words "Sec. 58," to strike out "that every nonresident person owning property in the United States or receiving income from the United States shall pay a tax on the income received as if resident in the United States;" in line 20, after the word "any," to strike out "such;" in the same line, after the word "nay," to strike out "also;" in line 21, after the words "benefit of the," to strike out "exemption" and insert "exemptions hereinbefore provided for;" in line 23, after the word "property," to strike out "in the United States or" and insert "and;" in line 24, after the word "income," to insert "in the United States;" in the same line, after the words "United States," to strike out "in the same manner as" and insert "and complying with the provisions of section 56 of this act as if;" on page 180, line 1, after the word "residents," to strike out "is required to do;" in line 2, after the word "income," to strike out "for purpose of exemptions;" in line 6, after the word "statement," to strike out "then;" in the same line, before the words "of each district," to strike out "deputy" and insert "collector;" in line 7, after the word "from," to insert "property situated in;" in line 8, after the word "district," to insert "subject to income tax;" in line 11, before the word "same," to insert "the;" and in line 12, before the word "same," to insert "the;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 58. Any nonresident may receive the benefit of the exemptions hereinbefore provided for by filing with the deputy collector of any district a true list of all his property and sources of income in the United States, and complying with the provisions of section 56 of this act as if a resident. In computing income he shall include all income from every source, but shall only pay on that part of the income which is derived from any source in the United States. In case such nonresident fails to file such statement, the collector of each district shall collect the tax on the income derived from property situated in his district, subject to income tax, making no allowance for exemptions, and all property belonging to such nonresident shall be liable to distraint for tax: Provided, That nonresident corporations shall be subject to the same laws as to tax as resident corporations, and the collection of the tax shall be made in the same manner as provided for collections of taxes against nonresident persons.

Mr. HOAR. Should not the section be amended by inserting after the word "nonresident," in line 20, the words "but not a citizen of the United States," so as to make it conform to what has previously been done?

Mr. ALLISON. Should not the amendment come in on the next page?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; in line 3, on page 180, after the word "but," I move to insert "unless he be a citizen of the United States, he."

Mr. VEST. That is the meaning of it as it stands.

Mr. HOAR. These words should be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 180, line 3, after the word "but," it is proposed to insert "unless he be a citizen of the United States, he;" so as to read:

In computing income he shall include all income from every source, but, unless he be a citizen of the United States, he shall only pay on that part of his income which is derived from any source in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Finance propose to strike out sections 59, 60, and 61, as follows:

SEC. 59. That there shall be levied and collected a tax of 2 per cent on all dividends in scrip or money thereafter declared due, wherever and whenever the same be declared payable to stockholders, policy holders, or depositors or parties whatsoever, including nonresidents, whether citizens or aliens, as part of the earnings, income, or gains of any bank, trust company, savings institution, and of any fire, marine, life, inland insurance company, either stock or mutual, under whatever name or style known or called in the United States or Territories, whether specially incorporated or existing under general laws, and on all undistributed sums, or sums made or added during the year to their surplus or contingent funds; on all dividends, annuities, or interest paid by corporations or associations organized for profit by virtue of the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, by means of which the liability of the individual stockholders is in anywise limited, in cash, scrip, or otherwise; and the net income of all such corporations in excess of such dividends, annuities, and interest, or from any other sources whatever; and said banks, trust companies, savings institutions, and insurance companies, and other companies, and all other corporations, shall pay the said tax, and are hereby authorized and required to deduct and withhold from all payments made on account of any dividends or sums of money that may be due and payable as aforesaid, the said tax of 2 per cent. And a list or return shall be made and rendered to the deputy collector, or other officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within thirty days after any dividends or sums of money become due or payable as aforesaid; and said list or return shall contain a true and faithful account of the amount of taxes as aforesaid; and there shall be annexed thereto a declaration of the president, cashier, or treasurer, or the principal accounting officer of the bank, trust company, savings institution, or insurance company, or other corporation, under oath or affirmation, in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the same contains a true and faithful account of the taxes as aforesaid. And for any default in the making or rendering of such list or return, with such declaration annexed, the bank, trust company, savings institution, or insurance company, or other corporation making such default, shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $1,000; and in case of any default in making or rendering said list or return, or of any default in the payment of the tax as required, or any part thereof, the assessment and collection of the tax and penalty shall be in accordance with the general provisions of law in other cases of neglect and refusal: Provided, That the tax upon the dividends of life insurance companies shall not be deemed due until such dividends are payable; nor shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy holders, nor the interest allowed or paid to the depositors in savings banks or savings institutions, be considered a dividends: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to the income or dividends received or paid by such building and loan associations as are organized under the laws of any State or Territory, and which do not make loans except to shareholders within the State where such associations have been organized. For the purposes of this act "dividend" shall include every payment in the way of division among the owners of the stock or capital of a corporation, or persons entitled to a share of its profits or income, whether such dividends are paid out of profits or not, or are paid in cash or otherwise.

SEC. 60. That any bank, building association, or other banking institution which shall neglect or omit to make dividends or additions to its surplus or contingent fund as often as once in six months shall make a list or return in duplicate, under oath or affirmation of the president or cashier, or principal accounting officer, to the deputy collector of the district in which it is located, or to the officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on the 1st day of January and July in each year, or within thirty days thereafter, of the amount of profits which have accrued or been earned or received by said bank during the six months next preceding said 1st day of January and July; and shall present one of said lists or returns and pay to the collector of the district a duty of 2 per cent on such profits, and in case of default to make such list or return and payment within the thirty days, as aforesaid, shall be subject to the provisions of the foregoing section of this act: Provided, That when any dividend is made which includes any part of the surplus or contingent fund of any bank, trust company, savings institution, insurance or railroad company, which has been assessed and the duty paid thereon, the amount of duty so paid on that portion of the surplus or contingent fund may be deducted from the duty on such dividend.

SEC. 61. That any railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation or slackwater company, and any telephone, telegraph, electric light and gas company, water company, and any street railway company, or other corporation, indebted for any money for which bonds or other evidence of indebtedness have been issued, payable in one or more years after date, upon which interest is stipulated to be paid, or coupons representing the interest, or any such company or other corporation that may have declared any dividend in scrip or money due or payable to its stockholders, including nonresidents, whether citizens or aliens, as part of the earnings, profits, income, or gains of such company, and all profits of such company or corporation carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, shall be subject to and pay a tax of 2 per cent on the amount of all such interest, or coupons, dividends, or profits, whenever and wherever the same shall be payable, and to whatsoever party or person the same may be payable, including nonresidents, whether citizens or aliens, and said companies are hereby authorized to deduct and withhold from all payments on account of any interest, or coupons and dividends, due and payable as aforesaid, the tax of 2 per cent; and the payment of the amount of said tax so deducted from the interest or coupons or dividends, and certified by the president or treasurer or other principal accounting officer of said company or corporation, shall discharge said company or corporation from that amount of the dividend or interest or coupon on the bonds or other evidences of their indebtedness so held by any person or party whatever, except where said companies or corporations may have contracted otherwise. And a list or return shall be made and rendered to the deputy collector, or other officer or agent designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on or before the 10th day of the month following that in which said interest, coupons, or dividends become due and payable, and as often as every six months; and said list or return shall contain a true and faithful account of the amount of tax, and there shall be annexed thereto a declaration of the president or treasurer or other principal accounting officer of the company or corporation under oath or affirmation, in form or manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same contains a true and faithful account of said tax. And for any default in making or rendering such list or return, with the declaration annexed, or of the payment of the tax as aforesaid, the company or corporation making such default shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $500 and double the amount of the tax; and in case of any default in making or rendering said list or return, or of the payment of the tax or any part thereof, as aforesaid, the assessment and collection of the tax and penalty shall be made according to the provisions of law in other cases of neglect or refusal: Provided, That whenever any of the companies or corporations mentioned in this section shall be unable to pay all of the interest on their indebtedness, and shall in fact fail to pay all of such interest, that in such cases the tax levied by this section shall be paid to the United States only on the amount of interest which the company pays or is able to pay.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 59. That there shall be assessed, levied, and collected except as herein otherwise provided, a tax of 2 per cent annually on the net profits or income above actual operating and business expenses, losses, and interest on bonded and other indebtedness of all banks, banking institutions, trust companies, saving institutions, fire, marine, life, and other insurance companies, railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, slack water, telephone, telegraph, express, electric light, gas, water, street railway companies, and all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized.

That said tax shall be paid on or before the 1st day of July in each year; and if the president or other chief officer of any corporation, company, or association, or in the case of any foreign corporation, company, or association the resident manager or agent, shall neglect or refuse to file with the collector of the internal-revenue district in which said corporation, company, or association shall be located or be engaged in business, a statement verified by his oath or affirmation, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of net profits or income received by said corporation, company, or association during the whole calendar year last preceding the date of filing said statement as hereinafter required, the corporation, company, or association making default shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $1,000, and 2 per cent on the amount of taxes due, for each month until the same is paid, the payment of said penalty to be enforced as provided in other cases of neglect and refusal to make return of taxes under the internal-revenue laws.

The net profits or income of all corporations, companies, or associations shall include the amounts paid to shareholders, or carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment representing the net annual profits made or acquired by said corporations, companies, or associations.

That nothing herein contained shall apply to States, counties, or municipalities; nor to corporations, companies, or associations organized and conducted solely for charitable, religious, or educational purposes, including fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, and associations, and dependents of such members; nor to the stocks, shares, funds, or securities held by any fiduciary or trustee of charitable, religious, or educational purposes; nor to building and loan associations or companies which make loans only to their shareholders; nor to such savings banks, savings institutions, or societies as shall, first, have no stockholders or members except depositors and no capital except deposits; secondly, shall not receive deposits to an aggregate amount in any one year of more than $1,000 from the same depositor; thirdly, shall not allow an accumulation or total of deposits by any one depositor exceeding $10,000; fourthly, shall actually divide and distribute to its depositors, ratably to deposits, all the earnings over the necessary and proper expenses of such bank, institution, or society, except such as shall be applied to surplus; and fifthly, shall not possess in any form a surplus fund exceeding 10 per cent of its aggregate deposits.

Nor to any insurance company or association which conducts all its business solely upon the mutual plan, and only for the benefit of its policy holders or members, and having no capital stock and no stock or shareholders, and holding all its property in trust and in reserve for its policy holders or members; nor to that part of the business of any insurance company having a capital stock and stock and shareholders, which is conducted on the mutual plan, separate from its stock plan of insurance, and solely for the benefit of the policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan, and holding all the property belonging to and derived from said mutual part of its business in trust and reserve for the benefit of its policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan.

Mr. VEST. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the first part of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the words down to the words "expenses of," in line 16 of the print I have, beginning "That there shall be." I desire to have the words I propose to insert read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That there shall be assessed, levied, and collected, except as herein otherwise provided, a tax of 2 per cent annually on the net profits or income above actual operating and business expenses, losses, and interest on bonded and other indebtedness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment proposed by him is embodied in the amendment which has just been read by the Secretary.

Mr. HILL. Have these amendments been printed?

Mr. VEST. Substantially the amendment which has just been read has been printed. I have changed one or two words in it, and the Secretary read the amendment as if a part of the text of the bill, which has created confusion. If he had read the text of the bill as it was, and then taken up the amendments, we could have proceeded regularly with them, but he has read the amendments as an original part of the text.

Mr. ALLISON. Has this amendment been agreed to?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator that the paragraph in relation to bondholders or holders of certificates of indebtedness ought to be stricken out. Its object is provided for in other ways.

Mr. VEST. I had rather not strike out the whole paragraph, because it is entirely consistent now with other provisions of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. They can only be explanatory and might be confusing. It is entirely covered by the first of these paragraphs.

Mr. VEST. It does no harm in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. It might do a great deal of harm.

Mr. VEST. I now desire to offer an amendment which I did not hear the Secretary read, to insert at the end of line 11, of section 59, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary advises the Chair that the same amendment was read at the end of the section.

Mr. VEST. That is what created the confusion. That was not a part of the text of the bill. It is an amendment proposed by the committee, and ought to have been read as an amendment. However, as it has all been read it may as well be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri was in the nature of a substitute for sections 59, 60, and 61, and it was so read by the Secretary, embodying all the amendments which the Senator from Missouri has indicated.

Mr. PLATT. The Secretary read all the amendments which have been proposed?

Mr. VEST. As part of the text, and that has created confusion.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent that the section as first read by the Secretary be considered as adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done, I desire to amend some portions of it.

Mr. PLATT. Unless that can be carried out, I think the amendment regarding savings banks had better be read and adopted, and also the amendment regarding insurance companies.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That was read as a part of the amendment as submitted from the desk.

Mr. FRYE. And it has been adopted.

Mr. PLATT. It has not been adopted yet.

Mr. ALDRICH. But it is all open to amendment, as I understand.

Mr. VEST. If we had read the text of the bill as originally offered and taken up the amendments offered seriatim, there would not have been any trouble, and the amendments would be as if they were in the bill. I do not go by the new print, which is simply confusing, but I take the original bill and proposed to offer the amendments at their proper places.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the amendment as read by the Secretary at first be considered as the amendment of the committee and open to amendment.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PLATT. That is what I suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. That is exactly what has been done, and I do not think there is any censure to the clerk.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

Mr. HARRIS. The clerk announced that what he then proposed to read was in lieu of three sections which the committee recommended to be stricken out, and the substitute followed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was of opinion, and so announced, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri was in the nature of a substitute for sections 59, 60, and 61.

Mr. GRAY. Has the unanimous consent asked by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] been acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. GRAY. That fixes it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is considered as agreed to; and now the question is upon the amendment as a whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is open to amendment now.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend on page 187, line 20, after the word "companies," by striking out the remainder of the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, on page 187, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "companies," as follows:

> And all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I move this amendment for the purpose of ascertaining a little more fully the scope of the amendment as now proposed by the committee. Thus far it has been the purpose of the committee and of the Senate in dealing with amendments to liberalize these provisions. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on behalf of the committee strikes out three sections inserted by the House of Representatives, and in effect changes the scope of the original provision of these three sections. The three sections in the bill are taken principally from the old laws respecting incomes.

Those provisions were intended to make more certain the collection of the income tax, and were inserted in the law of 1862, the law of 1864, and the laws passed in subsequent years for that purpose. It was said then, as we have heard it said two or three times during this debate, that the income tax would be evaded by those who ought to pay it, and the object of inserting these provisions in the income-tax law during the war and after the war was to require the great corporations of the United States to pay the incomes for the beneficiaries, deducting the amount of the income from the interest on bonds and dividends paid and the money carried to surplus.

That was the original object, as I understand, of the sections relating to corporations, but in the sections of the original acts and the amendments every corporation was named; that is, the character of the corporation was named, and there were but two kinds of corporations in our income-tax law originally. Those were moneyed corporations, such as banks, trust companies, and quasi money corporations, such as insurance companies, building associations, etc. That was one class of corporations.

Another class consisted of transportation companies, which carried for hire. During all the period of the income tax from 1862 to 1871 no other class of corporations was included. All the small corporations of the country were left to the original operation of the income tax; their dividends were paid, if dividends were declared, and carried in the income statements and returns of the individual members of those corporations.

The House of Representatives in those three sections changed entirely—although they adopted substantially many features of the old laws—the character of the income tax by sweeping in not only the corporations named here and named in the old laws, but by sweeping in every corporation of every name and nature, no matter how created or how organized, or how small or how great. Thus it is, that we have in the pending bill a provision which not only applies to the great money corporations of the country and to the great transportation companies of the country, but which applies to every corporation, however small, in every State in the Union. That perhaps would not be so objectionable if it were not for the fact that by the terms of the bill there is a discrimination made against these people, which is an unjust discrimination.

We have decided here by several votes in this Chamber that every person who is liable to the income tax is authorized to exclude from his return his taxes upon that income; first, $4,000, and then he is allowed to exclude from it all the taxes which he pays, State, national, and municipal; thus swelling the exemption of each individual in many cases many thousands of dollars more. If, however, a man or a woman or a minor child holds ten shares in the smallest corporation in the United States, which yields only $50 upon those ten shares, that person is compelled to pay an income tax of 2 per cent upon those shares in that corporation.

Mr. President, I have waited to see whether the committee could not in some form, by some provision, provide for this great injustice which will apply to thousands and hundreds of thousands of people in every State of the Union.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that at the proper time, on the conclusion of his remarks, I have three amendments to cover the very point which he suggests, which I propose to offer.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not, of course, know what amendments are to be proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. The Senator's criticism of the bill as it stands is perfectly well taken.

Mr. ALLISON. What I want to do now is to see if we can not do exact justice to these small investors. I want this bill, when it shall go from the Senate, to do as nearly equal justice as we can do to the small investors in the United States.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether he conceives that the language he seeks to strike out, "and all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized," would include any large corporations, or are all the large corporations, which he seeks to reach by this provision, provided for in the explicit clause which precedes these words?

Mr. ALLISON. There may be some large manufacturing corporations which would be excluded by the amendment I propose.

Mr. HALE. Would the Senator desire to exclude these, or could he frame his amendment by a limitation as to the amount of capital stock or something of that kind, so that these small concerns, which I think everybody wishes to encourage, would not be subject to the provision?

Mr. GRAY. As I read the language in the section, if you struck that out there would be nothing to apply to the sugar trust corporation, so called, the great industrial corporation.

Mr. HALE. The small concerns would be saved by inserting a limitation as to the amount of capital.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to include in the amendment I have proposed any of the large corporations. I only move to strike these out for the purpose of reaching the point which I am making, and that is, that this section as it stands applies to the small corporations which are scattered throughout the United States. It may be limited, as the Senator from Maine proposes, by fixing the amount of bona fide capital paid in.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator whether it would not be better, lest this may exclude something which we all wish to have provided for, instead of striking out the words "all corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized," to add to them "whenever such corporation, company, or association shall not exceed in the amount of its capital stock paid in $100,000."

Would not that cover the thought which the Senator has in mind?

Mr. ALLISON. That covers practically one thought I have in mind, but there is still another thought to which I wish to refer before I take my seat.

Mr. President, there are in my State, I have no doubt, 500 corporations which are engaged in manufacture, in trade, and in business of various kinds, every one of which will be compelled, under this provision as it stands, to pay 2 per cent upon the profits which they make, practically the gross profits, upon the amount of money they have invested in the corporation. It would be an injustice to these people that this should be done. I desire that this shall be done either by excluding every corporation not named—and I am willing to name the great industrial corporations of the country, in order that there may be no mistake about that—or in any proper way; but I do not want to include the smaller corporations I have described.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I presume it is true of the Senator's State, as it is of mine, that in every county in the State there is to-day a portion of the farmers who utilize their milk in making it into butter and cheese. I presume in my State there are one hundred of these associations where the capital stock would be twenty-five thousand or fifty thousand dollars, and all paid in by the farmers. Then they carry their milk and manufacture it into cheese or into butter or something of that kind, and divide the profits. Is it possible that the committee desire to impose a tax of 2 per cent on the net profits of those little concerns? They are hardly entitled to be called corporations, but they are. It is true all over the North that to-day the farmers work in that way in disposing of their milk. It is equally true in my State, and I suppose that it is in others, that there are little corporations which can fish and lobsters, and things of that kind with perhaps a capital of only $25,000.

Mr. HALE. It applies to almost every form of human industry. It is the fashion now instead of making a partnership to form these little associations and put in twenty-five, forty, or fifty thousand dollars. They ought to be encouraged rather than discouraged.

Mr. HOAR. This does not include partnerships. It applies only to companies, corporations, or associations, not partnerships.

Mr. HILL. It makes a discrimination against corporate investments.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri state whether the interpretation given to this bill by the Senator from Massachusetts in his opinion is a correct one, because if the word "association" here includes partnerships, as the Senator from Massachusetts stated, as I understand——

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. HOAR. I said "companies."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand, and I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri state, whether he understands that this section and the subsequent sections regulating this subject are intended to deal with anything but associated corporations?

Mr. VEST. That is the meaning of it. I have not had any doubt about it. If I had intended to use the word "partnerships," I should have said "partnerships." For instance, take building and loan associations. That is the way they style themselves. They are not called "companies;" they are not called "corporations" eo nomine, but they are called "associations." Two or more individuals associate themselves, and we have a chapter in the Revised Statutes of Missouri which provides for these associations. They are quasi corporations.

Mr. HALE. That is not a private business partnership.

Mr. VEST. No; that is not a partnership.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine of a limitation upon the capital and another amendment which I shall be glad to offer later on, cover the point I desire to make as to this subject especially, but I do not see why it is that we should not be absolutely careful to exclude from the operations of this act all these small corporations. We have just liberalized this very provision by excluding from the calculation bonded indebtedness of every kind, and other indebtedness, and we have remanded to the individual person who receives an income from bonds the question of making his return of that income in this very provision as now amended by the Finance Committee.

We have thus eliminated every suggestion that the corporation itself shall deduct the income from its bonds and charge it over to the bondholders, as the original income tax law did. There is nothing now to be taken from the great body of these corporations except the dividends, and they are to be deducted and the receiver of the dividend can then put in with his exemption the amount paid by the corporation on his behalf. So I shall modify my amendment by providing that this shall not apply to any corporation, company, or association having bona fide paid-up capital of not exceeding $100,000.

Mr. HALE. Let those words come in at the end.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a purely arbitrary distinction; but you must make this distinction at some point, unless you strike out all these private industrial corporations.

Mr. HOAR. I have drawn an amendment which should come in as an addition to the language of the original text before it is struck out, to which I should like to have the Senator from Iowa listen, if he will. I do not want to take him off the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. There are in my State, and I suppose in nearly all the States now, an enormous number of persons who form themselves into what are called joint stock companies, but which are corporations in the law for two purposes, first, to escape the personal liability for debt beyond the limit fixed, whatever it may be, and, next, so that whenever a single partner goes out or dies or becomes insolvent on his private account, or anything else which would dissolve the corporation, there is not to be a legal liquidation of the whole concern. These two latter are quite as important as the former.

Some of these companies never divide. One instance came to my knowledge the other day which was founded with a capital of about $80,000, and had a very profitable business, and increased to an investment of $800,000, I suppose without any debts at all, the original capital stock of which company would come within the Senator's amendment. At the same time this corporation, if it is to be taxed at all, should have an exemption of a sum equal to the aggregate of the exemption of the men who compose it. Suppose they are not allowed the exemption on their other property. Here are two men who go into partnership; they put in their whole property and their whole labor, and they do not divide anything except what is necessary for a frugal support.

Mr. ALLISON. That reaches another point with which I did not intend to deal.

Mr. HOAR. Is not that an absolutely just principle universally comprehended, that such an institution shall pay on its receipts, it having the benefit only of the exemptions which the men who compose it are entitled to?

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; but suppose there are a hundred stockholders and each one of them is entitled to an exemption of $4,000? Certainly they should be, but that is only an argument against including corporations at all.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me I will read my proposition. It is as follows:

Provided, That there shall be allowed to said corporation, company, or association an exemption equal to the aggregate of the exemptions to which such stockholders would be entitled in estimating their individual taxes, not including, however, any exemption which may be allowed such stockholders as individuals.

Why does not that cover the whole thing?

Mr. ALLISON. That may be a very good provision, but what I desire is that the small corporations shall not be disturbed at all by this army of taxgatherers. I do not suppose that it is the intent and purpose of those who propose to pass this law that we shall immensely increase the working force of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and yet, unless modifications and exclusions are inserted here there will have to be an army of collectors and deputy collectors equal to that army which we found at the close of the war when everything that was produced and everything that was sold was taxed, and the taxgatherer was found in every household in the land.

We are liberalizing in this bill, I say frankly, the income-tax law as compared with any law that was on our statute books during the war. We have exempted $4,000. That means an exemption of a man who may be worth $150,000 in my State. If he is a large landholder and has no income from it he pays no tax. He may have one-half of an estate of $200,000 in land which yields him no income and another $100,000 of property that does yield an income, and still he is exempt from taxation under this proposed law. Therefore it is to be a liberal law to every individual who has property and earnings as respects the exemption.

When we have done that, then we propose to reach all the people in every State who, not caring to take care of their own property, invest small sums in small corporations. I know in the city in which I live some years ago a manufacturer of furniture failed. The twenty skilled mechanics who were employed by him united into a corporation in my city, and for ten years they have been conducting the business. They now conduct a business of $150,000 a year, yielding to them probably an annual income of $10,000. There is not a man in the corporation who is worth $5,000, and yet the taxgatherer will come under this bill and sweep in, as against those mechanics, 2 per cent upon their entire earnings.

I know of farmers in my State who have contributed—some $100, some $200, and others $500—to what we call creameries, producing the vast amount of butter produced in that State, the amount last year amounting to $33,000,000 in value. Those little creameries are conducted in all the villages in my State by small corporations, the largest capital in any of them probably not exceeding $20,000. The taxgatherer is to go over the farms and in the villages and find out how much those creameries have produced, whereas perhaps the total profits of any one of them would not exceed $4,000.

Yet because those men have invested their small earnings in these little corporations in their own village, they are to be visited by the taxgatherer and they are to have wrenched from them 2 per cent; whilst other great corporations, with thousands in money, are to have an exemptinn of $4,000 or $6,000 or $7,000, perhaps, if they are paying a large amount of taxes upon unoccupied and unproductive land.

Mr. VEST. My friend from Iowa is drawing an appalling picture here of enormous taxation on an association of mechanics in his own town. Let me call his attention to what he, in the vehemence of his eloquence, has overlooked. He says there are twenty of them, and they make $10,000 a year, according to the language of the bill, over and above all their operating and business expenses, excluding their losses and interest upon their bonded and other indebtedness. The tax would be $200, and that would be $10 to the man.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not the amount of the tax; it is the smallness of the provision that I object to.

Mr. VEST. Oh, I thought it was the amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amount.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the same product was produced by them as individuals they would be saved the tax. Why should they pay a tax of $10 because they work together?

Mr. HALE. Or suppose it was a technical partnership, and nothing more.

Mr. ALLISON. They would be exempt.

Mr. HALE. Such little companies and corporations take the place of small partnerships. The partnership would be excluded. Every member of the partnership would have to make a return on his private income and there alone would he be touched. I do not believe when the committee itself considers the desirability of encouraging all of these small concerns it will insist upon rejecting the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. One thing that is lamentable in this country is the general scope and swing and aggressive nature of great corporations. They monopolize every form of human enterprise.

The men who fifty years ago began in a small way and increased and became larger in their enterprises and passed into prosperous, thrifty, and wealthy citizens are few; they go into the great corporations in which individual enterprise is stifled. There is no provision in the bill that tends more to stifle and destroy the small fruits of human enterprise than the provision unamended by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. All I desire is to exempt from the operation of the bill the people who have small incomes and under it have no way of securing exemption. I had hoped that before we reached this point the committee would devise some way whereby the exemption could be made, but I see no suggestion of that character.

Mr. VEST. This is a most liberal bill to corporations.

Mr. ALLISON. I know it is liberal to corporations, and that is what I complain of.

Mr. LINDSAY. As I understand the position of the Senator from Iowa, he wishes the bill so reformed as that the stockholder who receives a small dividend from a large corporation shall be taxed——

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. LINDSAY. And the stockholder who receives a small dividend from a small corporation shall not be taxed. Is that the logic of the Senator's position?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall endeavor to state the case. I have already said that as we have liberal provisions in the bill as to individuals, exempting them to the extent of $4,000, and many thousands more if their property is not invested in a corporation. We have made that exemption. I say that is an injustice to a man who has invested his money in a corporation unless we mean to punish him for doing that thing. I shall be glad to draw to my side the Senator from Kentucky. I will sit down with him with as much patience as I can on a hot evening and try to do justice to a small stockholder in a big corporation, and if he will not help me to do that, and the committee can not do it, then I should be glad to have him help me reach a small stockholder in a small corporation so as to do as little injustice as possible under the bill. If he will not do that, then I must offer the amendment which was kindly written for me by the Senator from Maine, while I was speaking, exempting wholly from the operation of this proposed law corporations not having a capital exceeding $100,000. I want the Senator from Kentucky to tell me what will be the injustice of doing that thing. Already the Senator from Kentucky has voted for a proposition which excludes all the bonds of all the corporations in the United States from this bill. The people who receive incomes upon the bonds are relegated to their integrity in making a return.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Iowa think it is wrong to keep out those bonds?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not. I am not complaining of it; I am endeavoring now to bring the Senator from Kentucky to our side of the question. If that be true, why can not the small people, why can not these mechanics in my town, about whom the Senator from Missouri is disturbed, be trusted to make a proper return of their income if it is over $4,000? Why can not the stockholders in the little corporation I have spoken of be trusted to make as honest returns as other people make honest returns?

For myself, not being under the stringency that we were during the war, and in the years immediately following the war, I should be willing to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut the other day and make this a bill as against every person who has an income, making them pay the same amount, and thus by that sweeping method do justice to all citizens of the United States. But it seems the committee has decided otherwise, by sweeping in all the stocks of all stockholders in all the great corporations. If the Senator from Kentucky can devise a method by which that will be excluded I will join him in it. If he can not I hope he will join me in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his first amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the first amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Of course there never before has been any income tax on corporations. In 1864 corporations were taxed in another way.

Mr. ALLISON. There has been no tax on corporations, as such, I agree. There was no tax except upon their surplus.

Mr. CHANDLER. The war taxes upon incomes were taxes upon individuals. If every individual in the United States pays an income tax why should there be an income tax imposed upon corporations? Is not every dollar made by a corporation and declared as a dividend of profit taxed to the individual?

Mr. ALLISON. There would be one reason for it. It may be necessary in the great corporation to reach a surplus each year which is not carried to dividends, and that is provided for in the bill. It was provided for in all the income-tax laws during the war. It was done to reach a surplus that was carried to what is called the surplus fund, and I see no inequity, if we are to have an income tax, in taxing a surplus if we are to tax the individual.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator if the bill does not provide, first, to tax the individual and then to tax the corporation, and does it not also provide that in taxing the individual you shall deduct the amount which the corporation is taxed? So it would be just as well and bring in exactly as much money to tax the individuals and not tax the corporations.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true. You would get less from dividends; but you would not reach the surplus.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very good. Then have the surplus taxed.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I will state that there is another very important distinction. If all the people in the United States who receive income from either the bonds or the stock of corporations had $4,000 per annum, then the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire would be correct and there would be no exemptions in one case that did not exist in the other. But there is a very large class of stockholders or holders of bonds in corporations who receive less than $4,000, and those people are taxed by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The bondholders are exempted by the provision.

Mr. GRAY. The bondholders pay on their income.

Mr. ALLISON. They pay on their income if it is above $4,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. If a man receives an income of $50,000 from the bonds of a corporation he is exempted; if he receives an income of $50 from the stock of a corporation he is taxed by the provisions of the bill, without reference to the fact whether his income reaches $4,000 or not.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the committee, in order to make clear what I understand they say is their meaning, whether there is any objection to adding after the word "organized" the words "but not including partnerships?" I am afraid that the phrase "companies or associations" * * * "no matter how created and organized," does include partnerships.

Mr. VEST. This language is taken from the act of 1864. That act uses the words "corporations or associations."

Mr. HOAR. Not "companies?"

Mr. VEST. Yes, "companies, corporations, or associations."

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator has that clause in the act before him I should like to have him read it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The act of 1864 did not tax the incomes of corporations. It taxed corporations another way,

Mr. ALDRICH. It taxed a certain class of corporations.

Mr. CHANDLER. But not by an income tax.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not corporations generally.

Mr. VEST. I referred to what was called the excise tax, which was in force when the income-tax law of 1864 was enacted.

Mr. ALLISON. The tax of 1864 was a tax on individuals with an exemption of $600, and in order to secure that tax it made the corporations the agents of the Government to collect it, and that is all there was of it, except dividends upon sums carried to the surplus.

Mr. VEST. Here is the language to which I referred. It is in the act of the Thirty-eighth Congress, first session, chapter 173, "manufactures, articles, and products." This is not the income-tax law, but it is what is call the excise law, the manufactures law:

SEC. 82. Be it further enacted, That every individual, partnership, firm, association, or corporation——

Mr. HOAR. Exactly.

Mr. VEST. That was the language.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the manufactures tax.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the tax on cotton.

Mr. HOAR. That act uses the word "partnership," and in terms it includes individuals.

Mr. VEST. The words were "every individual, partnership, firm, association, or corporation."

Mr. HOAR. It does not say "company." It is not the purpose of this section to include partnerships. They are dealt with in another way, and the exemption belonging to the individual partner is to be secured in another way.

I should like to ask my friend from Missouri, who is a good lawyer and does not want to draw a bill and be responsible for an act that has doubt in its meaning, whether it is not better to make his meaning clear, and whether it is not, to say the least, a doubtful question whether the clause "corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized," does not include partnerships?

I say on my responsibility as a lawyer that I think it does. I should give that opinion as at present advised to a client or to an officer of the Government. I can not conceive a more apt description of a partnership than "companies or associations doing business for profit." If a partnership is not a company or association of men doing business for profit, what in the world is it, however established or organized? The clause is made clear to everybody by simply adding the words, "and not including partnerships," and that is what I suggest to the consideration of the Senate. I gave notice of that amendment. I shall not offer it at this moment because I want to offer another

Mr. FRYE. But if it should be offered and voted down, then it would be an instruction to the internal-revenue collector that the clause does include partnerships.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment go over.

Mr. HOAR. The Secretary will take down the amendment. I propose to add after the word "organized," in line 22, page 187, "but not including partnerships."

Now, I wish to move as an addition, to which I also ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa, the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be allowed to said corporation, company, or association, an exemption equal to the aggregate of the exemption to which such stockholders would be entitled in estimating their individual tax, not including, however, any exemption which may have been allowed to such stockholders as individuals.

If we are going to have an income tax and if it is going to include business corporations, I do not think it is just to draw the line merely at a certain amount of capital stock, because, as I said just now, that does not fairly estimate either the investment or the earnings. I know a corporation the capital stock of which, I think, is a million and a half, which has an investment of several millions now. I know another corporation which began business about 1864 with a capital of seventy or eighty thousand dollars (I do not know but that it was $60,000), and which, continuing the same capital, has an investment of over $800,000.

The men who own that corporation have received dividends barely equal to a frugal living, and I suppose they have had salaries or something of that kind, which they have been paid, and they have not divided their earnings or accumulations; they have let them stand as a surplus.

Mr. HALE. Now, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires to have that company taxed we can find a way in phraseology by which it can be taxed. The general proposition is good, but if the Senator has a corporation which he thinks under this provision is going to escape and he wants it taxed, we can find some language to cover it, of course.

Mr. HOAR. I dare say. If this provision is to pass it should pass on a principle which is just to some human being who will have some justice under it.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me, as he seems to be arguing against the amendment which I offered? I stated to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] that I should be glad to follow any Senator in dealing with this whole question of exemption, but even if that were done I do not see why the small corporations of small incomes should have the taxgatherer about them twice a year.

Mr. HOAR. If what the Senator means is not only to protect them from their exemption, but also to protect them from returns, of course I shall be glad to follow him in that respect.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts and to the Senator from Iowa whether we could not get out of this difficulty by simply exempting $4,000 of the net income of these corporations. Four thousand dollars is the usual exemption to individuals. Would not that be just all around?

Mr. HOAR. The answer to that suggestion is, here are three or four young mechanics who form a corporation for reasons which have been stated. All they have in the world is their earnings from that stock. Now, ought not each of them have as much exemption as the man who is doing business alone by their side? Here are four men who are doing business separately. Each gets his $4,000 exemption. Here are four men who do exactly the same thing together, and there is but one $4,000 exemption for the whole four.

Mr. PEFFER. Would not that relieve the situation, however, from the embarrassment?

Mr. HOAR. Not in the least. It would be unjust, as I understand it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment of which notice has been given be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 27, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 26, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EMPLOYÉS POSTAL RAILWAY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, pursuant to a resolution dated May 29, 1894, information relative to the removal of clerks in the Railway Mail Service between the 4th day of March and the 1st day of May, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House findings of the Court of Claims in the following cases vs. The United States, namely: D. T. Wood and John W. Rowlett; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LABOR DAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday.

Mr. MCGANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask present consideration for this bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first Monday of September in each year, being the day celebrated and known as Labor's Holiday, is hereby made a legal public holiday, to all intents and purposes, in the same manner as Christmas, the 1st day of January, the 22d day of February, the 30th day of May, and the 4th day of July are now made by law public holidays.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. MCGANN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Judiciary Committee I wish to suggest that the bill (H. R. 143) for the relief of the heirs of D. Fletcher, heretofore referred to the Judiciary Committee, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the change of reference indicated by the gentleman from Missouri will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries; who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles.

On June 23 1894: An act (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother

On June 26, 1894: Joint resolution (H. Res. 192) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts within the city of Baltimore to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1934) to provide for the improvement of the building and grounds of the United States court and post-office at Little Rock, Ark.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be at least some explanation of the measure.

Mr. SAYERS. I am unwilling, Mr. Speaker, that a bill of that character should be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. TERRY. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection, at least until I can make a brief statement and have the report read.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection to the gentleman making a statement in reference to the matter.

Mr. TERRY. This is a case of urgency, as shown by the letter of the Hon. Henry C. Caldwell, the circuit judge of the eighth circuit, which is appended to the report. The committee have carefully considered the matter, and report unanimously in favor of the bill. I ask that the report be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, if there is no objection.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1934) to provide for the improvement of the building and grounds of the United States court and post-office at Little Rock, Ark., having considered the same, report as follows:

The site of the building referred to in this bill was purchased May, 1873, and the building thereon was afterwards erected at a cost of about $221,000. It was intended for the use and purposes of the United States court-house, post-office, land office, revenue collector, and other Government offices at Little Rock, Ark.

From the evidence before the committee it appears that the building never was sufficient for the purposes indicated, and that on that account it was objected to in the very beginning by the United States district (now the United States circuit) judge in that circuit, as appears in his letter herewith submitted. Since its erection the city of Little Rock and the State of Arkansas have largely increased in population, and there has been a corresponding increase in the business of the post-office, the United States court, and other departments in the Government service at that point, so as to render necessary the improvements referred to in the bill. A partial statement of the necessities is set forth in the letter above referred to.

After careful consideration of the whole matter the committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

In lines 11 and 12 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty-four."

Also strike out lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, EIGHTH CIRCUIT,
Little Rock, March 28, 1893.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just seen a copy of your bill relating to the United States building in this city.

I have said and written so much about this building in the past that I have grown weary of the subject. My letters are on file in Washington protesting against laying the foundations of the building under the limitations and restrictions of the act making the first appropriation.

I said then, and time has verified the correctness of my judgment, that the building which it was proposed to erect would be found totally inadequate to accommodate the public officers and business expected to be provided for within its walls. I knew this was so so far as it related to the United States courts.

I pleaded for two court rooms, or a judge's chambers large enough for a chambers court room, but all in vain. There is but one court room and the judge's chambers is barely large enough to contain my bookcases, a table, and two or three chairs.

The result is that when there are two judges here and it is desirable to hold two courts at the same time, as it frequently is, we are unable to do so except when the county court-house is not in use and is loaned to us, or we can get in the State house.

The want of another court room is a source of expense to the Government and of delay and costs to parties and witnesses.

The circuit court of appeals ought to hold its winter sessions at this place, and doubtless would do so if we had a court room, but under existing conditions it is out of the question.

I know nothing about the wants of the other departments. I only know that the present building does not furnish adequate accommodations for the United States courts.

Yours, truly,

HENRY C. CALDWELL, Circuit Judge.

Hon. W. L. TERRY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to make a brief statement in connection with the report which has just been read. It will be seen that the report suggests an amendment to strike out in lines 11 and 12 of the bill "seventy-five," and insert "fifty-four;" so that it will read, "$54,000."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that building, from the very inception of it, was totally inadequate for the purposes for which it was contemplated, and the Hon. H. C. Caldwell wrote his protest at that time, which is on file with the Secretary of the Treasury.

The chambers provided for the judge in that building, as he states in this communication, are barley sufficient to contain a little table, a desk, and two or three chairs for him, and the result is that whenever it is necessary to hold the district and circuit court there, as is frequently the case, the United States Government has to depend upon the courtesy of Pulaski County for a place to hold its court in. I think that is a fine commentary on the existing condition, and a sufficient reason, if there were no others, for prompt action upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TERRY. It is a case of real urgency.

Mr. SAYERS. I must object to the consideration of bills of this character under the circumstances. Bills making such large appropriations ought not to pass by unanimous consent. There ought to be two or three days set apart for the consideration of such measures. I must object and ask for the regular order.

Mr. TERRY. I agree with the gentleman fully. But this is a case of extreme urgency as plainly shown in the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

IMPROVING SAUGATUCK HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House of Representatives with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the improvements of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan, under the projects of 1867 as modified in 1869, 1870, 1875, and 1882, and the improvements recommended in the Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1893. (Appendix M M.)

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

GAS PIPE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gaslight Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Minneapolis Gaslight Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay a submerged gas main across the Mississippi River, under the bed thereof, to conduct gas from its gas works on the west side of said river to the east division of Minneapolis, on the east side of said river, at some point between the foot of the Falls of St. Anthony and the Washington avenue bridge across said river, the location and manner of laying said gas main to be approved by the United States Government engineer at St. Paul.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommended the following amendment:

Amend by striking out in lines 11 and 12 the words "United States Government engineer at St. Paul," and substituting therefor the words "Secretary of War before the work is commenced."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGES ACROSS CERTAIN RIVERS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4611) to amend an act approved January 26, 1893, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved January 26, 1893, entitled, "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee," be, and is hereby, amended so that the time within which the actual construction of such bridges may be commenced is hereby extended for the period of one year from the date of the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNODGRASS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WITHERBY & GAFFNEY.

Mr. CHICKERING. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Witherby & Gaffney entered into a contract with the United States September 9, 1889, to construct quarters at Madison Barracks, Sackets Harbor, N. Y., for the sum of $18,166.38; and

Whereas the said contractors were from time to time requested by the army officers stationed at that post to modify the plans so as to conform to the views of said officers, thereby requiring an extension of time for the completion of their contract, which the United States granted, as well as a greatly increased expense in the cost of construction; and

Whereas the said contractors at the time understood and believed they would be allowed and paid for the additional cost of construction incurred by these modifications of plans, but, being inexperienced in such matters, did not, in advance of such modification of plans and expenditures, obtain the proper authority therefor required to bind the disbursing officers of the Government and enable them to pay to said contractors a just and full compensation for the work and material performed and furnished by them: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be authorized, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to pay to contractors Witherby & Gaffney, such sums as may be found, on examination of their accounts, to be necessary to meet the difference between the same already paid them, and the actual cost and expense incurred by them in constructing the barracks at Sacketts Harbor, N. Y., under the agreement made September 9, 1889; and that the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to reimburse them for expenditures actually incurred in excess of the sum already received by them in constructing said barracks, be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Claims recommended the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "that," in line 3, and insert the following: "The Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Witherby & Gaffney $5,414.28 out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should be glad to have somebody state what this bill is, and I will state the reason why I ask. The clerk who is now reading is one of the best reading clerks I know. He has a voice that fills the hall, but the trouble is, either my hearing is growing thick, or he reads so fast I can not catch on. I do not know what the bill is about.

Mr. CHICKERING. The bill is all right. There is no possible objection to it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is it for?

Mr. CHICKERING. This bill simply provides an appropriation to pay a balance for additional work on a contract for repairs on Madison Barracks, in my district.

Mr. COOMBS. Did the Secretary of War pass upon this claim?

Mr. CHICKERING. This bill is approved by the Assistant Secretary of War, and is approved by the Committee on Claims.

It has had the careful consideration of my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], who reports it. We have an hundred affidavits in the case, showing that these people have performed this work, and have received no pay for it. The contract provided that they should do additional work under the direction of the officer in charge, which they did, and the officer in charge approves of this bill, and the Assistant Secretary of War approves of it. I can have the report of the Secretary read.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am content to take the gentleman's statement.

Mr. COOMBS. Let us take the report of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Claims was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHICKERING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMERICAN REGISTRY, STEAMER MARGARITA.

Mr. PIGOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6986) to provide for the American registry of the steamer Margarita.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 1919) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians in California for the cession of their surplus lands, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 4961) granting certain rights over Lime Point military reservation, in the State of California; when the Speaker signed the same.

PROOF IN PENSION CASES.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3511) providing that in the establishment of claims under the pension laws of the United States the oath of a private or noncommissioned officer shall have same weight and effect as the oath of a commissioned officer.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter, in all applications for pension and in all proofs and evidence submitted in support of any claim under the pension laws of the United States, the oath of a person who has served as a private or noncommissioned officer shall have the same weight, force, and effect in establishing said claim as the oath of a person who has served as a commissioned officer.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

Strike out the word "hereafter" in line 3; insert the word "not" after the word "shall," in line 6; strike out the words "the same," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the words "any less;" strike out the words "force and effect in establishing said claim as the oath of a person who has," in lines 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the words "than if such witness had;" add to the bill the words "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to require a greater number of witnesses than heretofore for the establishment of any fact in relation to such claim."

Amend the title to read, "A bill concerning the weight of evidence in pension claims."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to hear some explanation.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. We want to know what it is about.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill, which is in its terms similar to one which was passed by the House in the Fifty-second Congress, provides simply that in pension cases the oath of a private or a noncommissioned officer shall have the same force and effect as the oath of a commissioned officer.

Mr. COOMBS. As to what matters of fact? As to a matter of service?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, the service has nothing to do with the matter. The provision of the bill is simply that the oath of a private or a noncommissioned officer shall have the same weight and effect under like circumstances as the oath of a commissioned officer.

Mr. COOMBS. There are so many amendments that the matter is somewhat confused.

Mr. PICKLER. The amendments simply make effectual the proposition which I have stated. The report, which is very short, can be read.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the Clerk had better read the bill as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all applications for pension and in all proofs and evidence submitted in support of any claim under the pension laws of the United States, the oath of a person who has served as a private or noncommissioned officer shall not have any less weight than if such witness had served as a commissioned officer: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to require a greater number of witnesses than heretofore for the establishment of any fact in relation to such claim.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and, as I have stated, it is similar in terms to a bill passed by the House in the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I should like to inquire whether the oath of a private soldier is not just as good anywhere and as much entitled to belief as that of an officer?

Mr. PICKLER. It has not been heretofore in pension matters.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Is there any reason why it should not be so?

Mr. PICKLER. I think not, and therefore the bill ought to pass.

There being no objection the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the title of the bill will be amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 4701) to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias; when the Speaker signed the same.

HYPOLITE FILHIOL ET AL.

Mr. BOATNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 2380) entitled "A bill for the relief of Hypolite Filhiol and others," now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of March 3, 1883, and an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the House of Representatives the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant, and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act.

Mr. COOMBS. I would like to hear some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. BOATNER. This is the same resolution for the adoption of which I asked unanimous consent a few days ago, when objection was made by the gentleman from Michigan. I stated then, and will now repeat for the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], that, as I understand, this claim was several years ago referred to the Court of Claims, under the name of Hypolite Filhiol.

The fact developed that two other parties, who were minors at that time, owned interests in this claim. This resolution is only for the purpose of referring all the interests to the Court of Claims, so that they may have jurisdiction to pass on the whole claim.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. COOPER of Texas) was read, as follows:

This claim was presented in the Fifty-second Congress and was favorably reported upon by the House Committee on War Claims, to whom it was referred.

After a careful investigation of the facts involved your committee adopt the report of the Fifty-second Congress, a copy thereof being hereto attached and made a part of this report, and recommend the passage of the bill, and report herewith a resolution referring the claim to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts of March 3, 1883, and of March 3, 1887.

[House Report No. 45, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 782) for the relief of Hypolite Filhiol et al., of Louisiana, report as follows:

On the 27th and 28th of August, 1863, the Army of the United States took from the claimant's plantation, in Ouachita Parish, La., stores and supplies of the alleged value of $4,825, all then owned in equal shares by Hypolite Filhiol, Edward L. Betin, and Charles D. Betin. The said Betins had been, the one wholly the other almost wholly, blind from birth, in consequence of which their education and knowledge were very limited. They lived in the family of said Filhiol, on said plantation, and were taken care of by him and their business affairs managed by him.

The said Filhiol filed a claim, with the knowledge and consent of said

Charles D. Betin, before the Southern Claims Commission for pay for all of said property, which claim was rejected for alleged disloyalty of said Filhiol. No other action has been taken on said claim, except to refer it to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act, but such reference, it has been decided, took to the court only the one-third that Mr. Filhiol owned, and that a reference of the whole claim under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, commonly known as the Tucker act, is necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the two-thirds owned by the Betins.

Your committee therefore report herewith a resolution referring the claim to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Tucker act, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, when this claim was presented by the gentleman from Louisiana, a short time ago, I objected to its consideration at the time. Since then I have examined the case, and there are peculiarities about it that I think ought to be referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BOATNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. SAYERS. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WEADOCK, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BARTLETT, for three days, on account of important business.

REPORT OF FISH COMMISSIONER.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commissioner for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, be printed; and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) was read, as follows:

The committee having considered House concurrent resolution to print 8,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for 1893, direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The estimated cost of same is $3,000.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS AT QUINCY, ILL.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5627) to provide for terms of the United States district and circuit courts at Quincy, Ill.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COUNTY BUILDING AT COCONINO, ARIZ.

Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7506) authorizing the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a county building at the county seat thereof; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TERM OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURT OF UNITED STATES AT MONTPELIER, VT.

Mr. POWERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN CAMDEN, N. J.

Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 401) to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a public building in Camden, N. J.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, POST-OFFICE, ETC., AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 335) to provide for the acquisition of additional land and the erection of an addition to the custom-house, post-office, etc., at Bridgeport, Conn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ELIZABETH, N. J.

Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5854) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Elizabeth, N. J.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RICHMOND, KY.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7081) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Richmond, Ky.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

Mr. MCKAIG, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6393) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Clarksville, Tenn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF MOORE VS. FUNSTON.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], from the Committee on Elections, I desire to submit for him a report on the contested-election case of Moore against Funston. I suppose there is a minority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a report from the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of Committee on Elections in the case of H. L. Moore vs. Edward H. Funston.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I present the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee and the views of the minority will be printed together and referred to the House Calendar.

REPRINT.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill for the salaries of marshals, district attorneys, and clerks, which has been exhausted, together with the report, being the bill (H. R. 6952) relating to the compensation and duties of United States attorneys, clerks, marshals, and other court officials, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the reprint will be ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BYNUM in the chair.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will read the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7479) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether the amendments will be considered in the order in which they were presented, or whether at the present time the committee can entertain amendments with reference to Indian depredation claims?

Mr. SAYERS. I prefer that the amendments in relation to other matters should be taken up first, as heretofore agreed upon.

Mr. Chairman, when the Committee on Appropriations were considering the payment of the United States judgments which are provided for on page 61 of the bill, several judgments were omitted because of the fact that they were not reported to the committee until after the bill was reported to the House. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk be adopted, so as to include those judgments.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 61 strike out all after the word "Executive," in line 12, down to and including the word "cents," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Documents numbered 59 and 242, and which have not been appealed, $47,120.52."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I object. I want to understand what it is for.

Mr. SAYERS. There are judgments of United States courts that have been certified to Congress. These particular judgments came to the Committee on Appropriations after the bill had been reported to the House, and I offer this amendment to include them.

Mr. PICKLER. What are those judgments for?

Mr. SAYERS. They are judgments of the United States courts, eight of them, amounting to about $13,364.83. If those judgments had been presented to the Committee on Appropriations before the bill was reported they would have been included in it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And you know they are all right?

Mr. SAYERS. Of course they are all right.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I understood the amendment, as it was read at the Clerk's desk, to state the amount at $47,000 and upward.

Mr. SAYERS. That amount embraces the judgments already in the bill and these also. All of the judgments amount to $47,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to reoffer the amendment that I offered on Saturday.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, under the order the committee should return to the amendments offered by the gentlemen from Virginia, North Carolina, and Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes it is not material which provision the committee returns to first, but he will call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the provision in regard to Indian depredation claims comes first in the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I would ask the gentleman interested in those claims to permit the committee to consider the other amendments first, because they can be disposed of, I think, on points of order.

Mr. PICKLER. All right.

Mr. HERMANN. I think it would be better to permit these amendments to be offered and pending, so that the House may understand what they are.

Mr. SAYERS. The House of Representatives amendments come first. They come on page 51.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs pardon of the gentleman from Texas. The amendments offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH], and others take precedence.

Mr. MEREDITH. I ask consent then, Mr. Chairman, to take up the amendment that I offered on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] is the first pending, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 9, page 51, the following, to wit: And to pay to W. Jasper Blackburn, formerly a Representative in the Fortieth Congress from the State of Louisiana, $5,597.23.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this a point of order has been made, and the Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas on the point of order.

Mr. TERRY. I understand that the gentleman in charge of the bill desires to submit some considerations first.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, my information respecting the amendment is that the party affected by it was elected a Representative to this House on the 4th day of March, 1867, but was not admitted to a seat until sometime in July, 1868, for the reason that until that time the State of Louisiana had not put herself in a condition to be entitled to representation in Congress.

It appears that from the time the State of Louisiana became entitled to representation in this House the party in interest in this amendment was paid, and the object of this amendment is to go behind that date and pay him from the 4th day of March, 1867. Now, I raise the point of order that there is no law authorizing the payment of this claim.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Has the claim slept all the time until now?

Mr. SAYERS. Until now.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And it has never been presented before?

Mr. SAYERS. Never, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me see if I understand this matter. The gentleman from Texas, I understand, says that this man, Mr. Blackburn, was elected on or before the 4th day of March, 1867?

Mr. SAYERS. Such is my understanding.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But Louisiana was not admitted to representation on the floor of the House until somewhere in 1868?

Mr. SAYERS. June 25, 1868, is the exact date of the act to admit the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to representation in Congress.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And at the date of the passage of that act this claimant was admitted as a member?

Mr. SAYERS. I believe so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And was paid from that date until the end of the Congress?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And this is an effort to pay him for almost or quite a year prior to the passage of the act referred to?

Mr. SAYERS. More than a year.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYERS] a question. The State I have the honor to represent in part was not admitted into the Union by proclamation until November 8, 1889. I had been elected previously. The Delegate who had represented the Territory was out. When I came into Congress I received pay only from the date of the proclamation of the President admitting our State into the Union. Now, if the present claimant is entitled to pay back to the 4th of March when that term of Congress began, would not I be entitled to pay back to the beginning of the Congress in which I took my seat?

Mr. TERRY. That is what you had better be considering. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It seems to me that following the same line of argument, I would be entitled to such payment, although I never thought I was entitled to any pay except from the date when my State was admitted into the Union. It may be that I am richer than I thought I was.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has stated, I think correctly, the date when Louisiana was permitted to send a Representative to Congress; but before coming to what strictly relates to the point of order I wish to show the standing which this claimant occupies. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken in one thing, as to the date of this claimant's election. He was elected April 17, 1868, and was admitted here July 18 of the same year.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not so understand. That fact supports still more strongly my point of order.

Mr. TERRY. Well, we will either survive or perish by the truth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the term of Congress to which this man was elected began March 4, 1867; and according to the uniform practice of this body for nearly twenty years, members have been paid not from the date of their election, not from the time when they took their seats, but from the beginning of the term of the Congress to which they were elected.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. They did not pay me in that way.

Mr. TERRY. Well, it may be they had some special grounds of objection to you. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. They did not pay in that way any members elected from the new States.

Mr. TERRY. You came from a State that had been a Territory, did you not?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. TERRY. This claimant came from what had been a province, in point of treatment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

Mr. TERRY. I must proceed with my argument.

Now, to show what has been the practice of Congress in this respect, let me state that the members from the State of Virginia, another community that was in the attitude of a province, were sworn in June 23, 1868, and were paid from March 4, 1867. The members from Tennessee were sworn in July 28, 1866, and were paid from March 4, 1865.

Mr. SAYERS. Was Tennessee ever considered out of the Union?

Mr. TERRY. Well, about half of it was considerably out.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Was any State ever considered out of the Union?

Mr. SAYERS. Practically so.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Not according to law.

Mr. SAYERS. Practically so.

Mr. TERRY. It was the proposition of President Lincoln that none of the States were ever out of the Union; and I think that was correct according to what was the final decision. That was the contention of the party governing the United States all the way through while the war was going on. But I will not go back to discuss that proposition.

At any rate, that having been the contention through the four years of the war, when these members from the reconstructed States afterward came in, they were paid back to the beginning of the term of the Congress to which they were elected. This was done in the case of the members from Virginia, from Tennessee, from Georgia, and from Alabama.

Now, as to this claim never having been presented before, let me say it has been repeatedly presented to Congress. It was presented in 1877. I do not know why no action was ever taken on it.

Mr. HUDSON. Was this gentleman here during all the time attending on Congress and seeking to be admitted? Was he here asking for his seat during the whole time?

Mr. TERRY. I can not inform my friend in regard to that.

Mr. HUDSON. If he was, it seems to me there would be some justice in his claim.

Mr. TERRY. My understanding of current history is that every man elected to Congress from any reconstructed State came here and tried to get his seat. I do not think there was any exception to that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow a question for information?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand, in the case the gentleman is now advocating, that the claimant was paid at the time that he was admitted.

Mr. TERRY. From the time that he was elected?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No, in the Louisiana claim; but in the Blackburn case, from the date that his State was declared to be entitled to representation in Congress by act of Congress. Now, the gentleman speaks of the Virginia and Tennessee cases being admitted subsequent to the 4th of March, but paid from that date. As a matter of fact, when were these States declared to be entitled by act of Congress to representation?

Mr. TERRY. I will state, as I understand it, that it was from the date of the act—you may call it the enabling act, or whatever it was—which entitled these States to representation.

But the point I wish to call particular attention to is this: that they did not pay the members merely from the date of election, or from the date of taking the seat, or from the time the State was admitted, but back to the beginning of the Congress to which they were elected.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What I wish to get at is whether in the Tennessee and Virginia cases there was an act declaring these States entitled to admission prior to the time that the Representatives of such States were paid. They were not admitted, in point of fact, until after March 4. But was the enabling act—and I call it an enabling act—passed prior to that?

Mr. TERRY. I think not. The act, however—you may call it enabling act or otherwise—was passed in 1868, and some of these parties were paid back to 1867, perhaps to 1865 in case of Tennessee members.

Mr. HUDSON. Is it not true that some of these parties were not admitted because of the fact that they would not take the test oath?

Mr. TERRY. That may be true in some cases, but it does not apply to the Blackburn case.

But, Mr. Chairman, I come to the law under which they acted. Senators Rice and McDonald of Arkansas were paid back of the time that the State was admitted. Sawyer of South Carolina was paid back of that date. Spencer of Alabama and Senators Foster and Patterson of Tennessee were all paid back of that time. I read now an extract from the report of Senator TELLER, in which he says:

> Your committee finds that the Senators and Representatives from Arkansas were seated in the Senate and House on the 23d of June, 1868, and that the Representatives were paid from the 4th day of March, 1867.

This report shows that the Senators and Representatives from Virginia were seated in the Senate and House on the 27th day of January, 1870, and the Representatives were paid from the 4th day of March, 1869, and the Senators were paid from the 27th of January, 1870. "Hon. G. S. Patterson and John S. Fowler, the United States Senators from Tennessee, were seated July 27, 1866, and were paid from the 4th day of March, 1865." (See official letters of Secretary Windom of late date certifying to these facts on file with the committee.) "The Representatives from Tennessee, Hon. W. B. Stokes and others, were seated July 28, 1866, and paid from March 4, 1865, on a report of the Hon. Henry L. Dawes, now Senator Dawes. Sergeant-at-Arms asked for instructions as to when their pay should commence. The House decided without division that their pay should begin with the term."

That has been the practice all along; and Mr. Stevens and Mr. Dawes said there could be no doubt of the fact that members' pay should commence with the term and was for the term. These were the men who had been here, and were experienced in the usage and law. The report of Mr TELLER states:

> Your committee find many precedents both in the Senate and House sustaining this fact.

Now, I have given a long list of cases paid in that manner.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Arkansas cite a specific case where the question is raised and a decision rendered as to the real point of controversy here?

Mr. TERRY. They are cited in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I had here the other day, where the resolution was passed to pay them. But it was all predicated on the ground that it was according to law to pay these men from the beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it predicated upon the idea that that was an equitable or a legal construction?

Mr. TERRY. I will read the resolution, Mr. Chairman, showing that they were legally paid. I read from the act approved July 12, 1862. I thought it was 1863:

> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases of vacancy, in either House of Congress, by death or otherwise, of any member elected or appointed thereto after the commencement of the Congress to which he shall have been elected, each person afterwards elected or appointed to fill such vacancy shall be compensated and paid from the time the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

Now, sir, that is the act which has been generally referred to in the matter of these payments. Of course, it is a little difficult of construction, but I presume they have come under the "otherwise." It was considered that there was a vacancy in those seats, not because those States had ever been out of the Union, but because certain regulations had to be complied with before those vacancies could be filled. That has been the idea upon which this thing had to proceed. There was a vacancy from the Fifth district of Louisiana on account of the fact that certain requisites had not been complied with. This man was elected to fill that, and under this resolution should be entitled to pay from the beginning of the term of the Congress to which he was elected.

Now, I want to call attention to another matter. It is a little remarkable to me, Mr. Chairman, that this old man, now tottering almost upon the verge of the grave, who has been knocking at the door of Congress for years for what is due him, has not been paid, when nearly everybody else has been paid, and that when his claim is presented a point of order is raised against it; that, too, upon a bill containing more than half a dozen provisions for the payment of $5,000 to the widows of different members of Congress, and yet the chairman of the committee reporting that bill stands here to-day and objects to the payment of the Congressman himself! I fail to see any consistency or anything else that savors of justice or fair play in such action as that.

This claim is, according to all precedents, a just claim. Under the act of July, 1862, as heretofore declared by Congress itself, it is a legal claim; and I think in a bill where we are paying the widows and executors of members of Congress, if there is any doubt at all on the proposition, it should be given in favor of the member of Congress himself who had been claiming for years what is due him from his Government.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to make one remark, and that is, there were quite a number of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress who were in exactly the same position as Mr. Blackburn, and all except three or four of them have been paid, according to the rule that the pay begins with the beginning of the term.

Mr. TERRY. If the Chair will permit me, I should like to read from the report of the Treasury Department in regard to this case:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
> Washington, D. C., February 18, 1892.
>
> SIR: In reply to your letter of 13th instant to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking for information in regard to the compensation of Hon. W. Jasper Blackburn, M. C., from Louisiana, referred to this office, it appears from the records of this Department that Mr. Blackburn received mileage for both terms of the Fortieth Congress, amounting to $1,865.60, and the salary for ten months and seventeen days, viz, from April 17, 1868, to March 3, 1869, inclusive, amounting to $4,402.77. For the full period of the Congress he would have been entitled, in addition to what he received as set forth above, to salary from March 4, 1867, to April 16, 1868, or thirteen months and thirteen days, amounting to $5,597.23.
> Respectfully, yours,
>
> GEO. P. FISHER, First Auditor.
> Hon. B. H. BUNN,
> Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

That is the report from the Treasury Department.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] upon its face does not provide for an appropriation for the payment of salary for any term. It simply allows five thousand five hundred and some odd dollars to pay a party who was at one time a member of Congress. Technically speaking, the amendment on its face is clearly out of order, and that is all the Chair can look to.

Mr. TERRY. The point I was speaking to was that this is provided for by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the amendment upon its face does not provide for the payment of salary.

Mr. TERRY. I ask to make that verbal correction.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman is permitted to do that——

Mr. TERRY. O, certainly I ought to be allowed to perfect the amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the ruling made on the sundry civil bill it was held that an amendment that was fatally defective could not be cured by an amendment to it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. While I have no fixed opinion as to whether this ought to be paid or not, is it not proper enough that if, in fact, this can be made in order by apt amendment, the Committee of the Whole should, in equity and justice, have the right to pass upon it?

Mr. SAYERS. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that this amendment has been sprung upon the committee. No attempt has been made to investigate into the merits of it, and while possibly it may have merit, my information is that the Committee on Claims have reported a bill in favor of the payment of the person interested, and when it comes up the facts can be investigated, and if it is in keeping with precedents already established, then the bill can be passed.

But I rest my objection upon the pure and naked question of law and upon the rules of the House that this amendment ought not to be put upon the general deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the whole question. The Chair will hold the amendment as covered by the act of March, 1867.

Mr. TERRY. I will state that in preparing the amendment I followed the language in the appropriation bill itself. That did not mention anything about the salary, and I spoke of him as a member of Congress, thought that was sufficient, and that it would be understood. There was no question as to what it was for.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question that under the act of 1863 a member elected to fill a vacancy is entitled to salary from the beginning of the vacancy of the term; but the question in this case is whether that statute is modified by the act of 1868, which admitted Representatives from Louisiana on certain conditions. The act of 1868 provided that Representatives from Louisiana and other States should be admitted from those States upon the acceptance of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, etc. The Chair is of the opinion that the act of 1863 is modified by the act of 1868.

That is, while the act of 1863 entitles, under ordinary circumstances, a Representative elected to draw the salary from the beginning of the vacancy, that that act is not applicable to this case. The question here is whether there was a vacancy prior to the election of Mr. Blackburn in 1868. The Chair does not desire to go outside of the act and to express an opinion upon the legality of the act, or anything of that kind. The Chair accepts the act as it finds it, and as construed by the Congress at that time. Under that construction the State was not entitled to representation until the proclamation was issued by the President in July, 1868; and on examining the record the Chair finds that this member was sworn in on the day of the proclamation by the President.

The Chair is inclined to think that the act of 1863 is modified so far as the State of Louisiana is concerned by the act of 1868, and that the term of the gentleman really began on the date this member was sworn in, and that, under the rules affecting amendments on appropriation bills, no law exists authorizing payment of salary prior to his admission. Further, there is no question but what this claim is an equitable claim to be presented to Congress. The question here as to whether, under the rules as affecting appropriation bills, there is any clear authority of law for the payment of the same, the Chair is of the opinion that that is a somewhat doubtful question; and at least the Chair gives the benefit of the doubt to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TERRY. With all due deference to the judgment of the Chair, inasmuch as this man is very old and may die before Congress acts in the case, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether or not, at the present stage of proceedings, an amendment would be allowed to that amendment, to pay another case of precisely the same character. If so I would like to offer it, and have it pending; and I ask unanimous consent to simply insert this amendment, because it is precisely similar to these other cases.

Mr. SAYERS. I object, because there are forty cases right here of the same kind. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that Mr. Blackburn, according to what the Chair stated, was admitted to his seat in Congress on the 24th day of July.

The CHAIRMAN. On the 18th day of July, the day of the President's proclamation.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. In the opinion of the Chair, his pay began from that date. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that as a matter of fact he was paid from the date of the election, on the 11th day of April, 1868, so that the Chair is evidently wrong in regard to that part of his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The pay by Congress was allowed from the date of his election. The Chair did not state that fact. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is that offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH].

The Clerk read as follows:

In page 51, after line 13, add?
"To Louis McKenzie $2,098."

Mr. MEREDITH. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me state the case.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will first state my point of order. If the amendment be admissible at all to this bill, it is not admissible at the point where it is offered by the gentleman from Virginia, for the reason that the heading of that paragraph is:

For allowance to the following contestants and contestees, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections, for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases.

Now, the law as I understand it to be is that no claim of this kind shall be paid until it shall have been first presented to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and audited by that committee. I do not think that this claim has ever been presented to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, audited by them, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MEREDITH. I do not contend, Mr. Chairman, that this claim has been audited; but if my friend from Texas will remember, this claim was presented to his committee while it was pending before the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims has passed upon this question and has recommended the passage of a bill refunding to Mr. McKenzie the sums of money which he expended in two contests, one when he was a member of the Forty-first Congress in a contest made against Mr. Whittlesey and another sum expended in another contest, the two aggregating the amount set forth in the amendment which I have offered.

Now, if this claim is admissible at all, I do not see why it should not come in at this point as well as at any other point in the bill. It is an entirely just claim, for the refunding of money absolutely expended by Mr. McKenzie in those two contests.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me read the law to the gentleman:

And before any sum whatever shall be paid to any contestant or contestee for expenses of election contest, he shall file with the clerk of the Committee on Elections a full and detailed account of his expenses, accompanied by the vouchers and receipts for each item, which account and vouchers shall be sworn to by the party presenting the same; and no charge for witness fees shall be allowed in said accounts unless made in strict conformity to section 128, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Now, I submit in connection with this provision of the statute that the gentleman himself has stated that no such account in this case has been filed with the Committee on Elections, and I am quite certain that no such account has ever been transmitted by the Committee on Elections to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MEREDITH. My friend is entirely mistaken. I went to see the very excellent chairman of the Committee on Appropriations about this matter and he referred me to his clerk and directed him to make a memorandum. I went there with the report of the Committee on Claims and asked whether that furnished all the information that was necessary, and the only objection urged then, and the only one that I have heard since, the only one ever urged so far as my knowledge goes, is that these are stale claims and that Mr. McKenzie has slept upon his rights for such a long period. He expended this money, every dollar of it; the Committee on Claims have so reported, and it has never been repaid. Mr. McKenzie, like the gentleman described by my friend from Arkansas, is now a very old man. This claim has been before the Committee on Claims through several Congresses, and if he has to wait until we can get a day and get a special bill passed I am afraid he will never receive this money. You pay other claims of this kind, now why not pay this old man and do equal justice to all?

Mr. COOMBS. Why has this claim lain dormant ever since the Fortieth Congress?

Mr. MEREDITH. Because the old man was in pretty good circumstances and did not ask for the money; but now he has become poor, like so many other Virginians, and he comes here and asks merely an act of justice, asks you to do only what you do for other people in every Congress. I think it is a great hardship that this claim should not be paid. It is a just claim, and Mr. McKenzie is entitled to every dollar of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has looked into this question somewhat since Saturday. The act to which the gentleman from Texas has called attention is wholly an act of restriction. It does not require Congress to pay a dollar in these cases, but simply says that no appropriation shall be made except under certain conditions and limitations. If there is any statute at all authorizing Congress to pay these claims the Chair is wholly unadvised as to where it can be found. The Chair, therefore, is clearly of opinion that this claim is not one authorized by any law. It does not even come within the restrictive statute. The statute which authorizes Congress to pay claims up to $2,000 is wholly restrictive.

Mr. MEREDITH. Is there not just as much reason for paying this as for paying any of these other claims?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the question before the Chair. The question is whether there is any law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. MEREDITH. My friend from Texas ought not to ask a technical ruling in a case of common justice.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question for the gentleman from Texas and not for the Chair.

Mr. MEREDITH [to Mr. SAYERS]. Withdraw your point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I can not withdraw it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between lines 9 and 10 on page 51 the following: "To pay to the executor of Nathaniel Boyden, late a member of the House of Representatives of the United States for the Fortieth Congress, the sum of $5,652.78, the remainder of salary due and unpaid said Nathaniel Boyden as a member of the House of Representatives for the Fortieth Congress."

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. After the ruling which the Chair has just made in the case of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] I know that the Chair will rule the same way in this case. I think it is a great hardship, however, that these gentlemen are not paid. Payment has been made in many cases of the same sort; quite a number of such claims were paid in the Fifty-first Congress, and I think these ought to be paid now. But in view of the ruling of the Chair I will not contend further for the amendment. I ask leave, however, to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the report of the Committee on Claims relating to the cases of Mr. Blackburn and Mr. Boyden.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4198) for the relief of W. Jasper Blackburn, report:

Your committee have carefully considered the same and find that W. Jasper Blackburn was a member of the Fortieth Congress and as such was entitled to the sum of $10,000 salary, and that he has only received the sum of $4,402.77 and is therefore entitled to the balance, to wit, the sum of $5,597.23. It also appears in evidence before the committee that Nathaniel Boyden was a member of the same Congress and was entitled to the same sum, and that he only received the sum of $4,347.22 and is entitled to the further sum of $5,652.78.

The said Nathaniel Boyden is dead.

Your committee found the law to be clearly in favor of the payment of these sums (see resolutions, July 12, 1862, 12 Statutes at Large, page 624) and so far as your committee have been able to ascertain these are the only cases since the passage of this resolution where the law has not been followed.

The instances where it has been followed are numerous, some of which we refer to as follows: CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 12, 1891, page 2537; February 28, 1891, page 3522; February 27, 1891, page 3472, and March 2, 1891, page 3919.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "four hundred and seventeen dollars," in line 6, inserting in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and ninety-seven dollars and twenty-three cents;" that the title of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following words: "and the legal representatives of Nathaniel Boyden," and after the word "dollars," in line 6, "and to the legal representatives of Nathaniel Boyden the sum of $5,652.78;" strike out "salary," in line 7, and insert "salaries;" strike out the word "him," in line 7, and insert "them;" and as so amended it do pass.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your letter of 13th instant to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking for information in regard to the compensation of Hon. W. Jasper Blackburn, M. C. from Louisiana, referred to this office, it appears, from the records of this Department, that Mr. Blackburn received mileage for both terms of the Fortieth Congress, amounting to $1,865.60, and salary for ten months and seventeen days, viz, from April 17, 1868, to March 3, 1869, inclusive, amounting to $4,402.77.

For the full period of the Congress he would have been entitled, in addition to what he received as set forth above, to salary from March 4, 1867, to April 16, 1868, or thirteen months and thirteen days, amounting to $5,597.23.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. P. FISHER,
First Auditor.

Hon. B. H. BUNN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 24, 1894.

Hon. JOHN S. HENDERSON, House of Representatives:

Nathaniel Boyden received pay from April 21, 1868, to March 4, 1869, amounting to—salary, $4,347.22; mileage, $295.20; total, $4,642.42.

J. F. MELINE,
Assistant Treasurer United States.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I have just received a communication from the chairman of the Committee on Elections in regard to the contested-election case of English vs. Hilborn. This letter transmits an account of $2,000 to be allowed to Mr. English. Mr. Hilborn's allowance is already in the bill. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 52, after line 4, insert:
"To W. B. English, $2,000."

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to amend in line 6 by striking out "twenty-two," and inserting "twenty-four," so as to make the total correct.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. In order to perfect the clause on page 61, under the head of "Judgments in Indian depredation claims," I desire to offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 61, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 62, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the defense of Indian depredation claims, which shall include the investigation and examination, under the direction of the Attorney-General, of judgments of the Court of Claims rendered under the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations,' which have not been appropriated for, $10,000, which sum shall continue available until expended, and the Attorney-General shall report to Congress at its next regular session all of said judgments concerning which, in his opinion, after such investigation and examination, there is no evidence, cumulative or otherwise, that any fraud, wrong, or injustice has been done to the United States."

Mr. HERMANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] offers a substitute, which the Clerk will read, for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from and including line 22, page 61, to and including line 4, on page 62, and insert the following:

"For payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims in the Indian depredation cases, $514,924.93, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay and discharge such judgments as have been rendered against the United States, as reported in Senate Executive Document, No. 82, Fifty-third Congress, second session, after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled, 'An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations,' shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and the proceedings hereinafter required."

Mr. PICKLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to reoffer an amendment which I offered on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] as a substitute is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, but would more properly come in as an independent proposition.

Mr. HERMANN. I do not quite understand what is the view of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's substitute is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HERMANN. The Chair will allow me to say that in my judgment my substitute is especially germane because it applies to the same subject-matter, the investigation already had; and, further, it applies particularly to the payment of those judgments which have been rendered upon investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not assert that the amendment is not a proper one, but simply that it is not germane as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not wish to take any advantage of these gentlemen, because it was clearly understood that they should have an opportunity to take the sense of the committee and of the House upon the direct proposition to pay these judgments without qualification.

Now, I suggest to the Chair and to the committee, that this amendment of mine be adopted, and then let the motion be made to strike out the clause as amended and insert in lieu thereof the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN]. That would bring the House to a direct vote upon the question.

Mr. HERMANN. In order to bring the matter squarely before the House, I will agree to that. With that view, let the Clerk eliminate so much of my substitute as appertains to striking out the lines included in the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, permitting the rest of my amendment to remain, which proposes to make a direct appropriation.

Mr. REED. Why not offer your amendment as a substitute for the original text?

Mr. HERMANN. I think we have arranged it satisfactorily now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it agreed that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] be considered as adopted?

Mr. PICKLER and others. Oh, no; not yet.

Mr. SAYERS. I merely offered that suggestion.

Mr. PICKLER. We want to hear the matter discussed.

Mr. SAYERS. Let my amendment be pending and the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon be considered as a substitute for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the substitute, if there be no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment to the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has offered an amendment, and the gentleman from Oregon has offered a substitute for it.

Mr. PICKLER. But I desire to amend the text. This is an amendment which I offered on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. All the amendments offered on Saturday were considered to be withdrawn, to be offered subsequently.

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly; but an amendment to the text is in order

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the text does not take priority of any other amendment to the section.

Mr. SAYERS. I would suggest that the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon and that proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota are the same.

Mr. HERMANN. Just the same substantially.

Mr. PICKLER. I differ with the gentleman in that regard. It is not just the same as that proposed by the gentleman from Oregon. The question was reserved, as the Chair will observe, on Saturday as to the right to offer these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from South Dakota understands that two amendments can not be pending at the same time. Either his amendment must be an amendment to the amendment, or an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. PICKLER. This is an amendment to the text. I understand the gentleman from Texas offers a substitute for the provisions of the bill. Now, I propose to amend the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be in order, of course.

Mr. HERMANN. The amendment I offer is a general proposition embracing all of these claims, and including that of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment to the original text, which is in order, and which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 4, page 62, as follows:

"For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases since June 30, 1891, as certified by the Attorney-General April 19, 1894, in response to the Senate resolution of April 14, 1894, and in amount in accordance with the act of March 3, 1891, amounting to a total of $514,924.93, as follows:"

Mr. PICKLER. And then follows the list of judgments that have been reported by the Attorney-General.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to hear from the gentleman from Texas as to his proposition; the one he sets forth, and the reasons the committee have for not making the appropriation for the claims as reported by the Attorney-General.

Mr. SAYERS. I would say this in response to the gentleman from South Dakota.

In the first place, the committee have evinced no disposition to object to the payment of these judgments as judgments per se; that is to say, simply because they are judgments obtained for losses sustained in consequence of Indian depredations. But we have been advised, Mr. Chairman, that these judgments have not been found to be entirely correct, that is, altogether just to the Government of the United States, by reason of the fact that certain questions important to be considered were not taken into consideration.

No question, we are informed, arose in the trial of these cases as to "whether the Indians, at the time of the committing of the depredations, were in amity with the United States." No question was had as to "whether the claimants were, at the time the depredations were committed, citizens of the United States."

Gentlemen will remember that the statute expressly provides that no other than citizens of the United States shall be permitted to invoke the aid of the statute for the recovery of such losses, either against the trust funds of the Indians or against the Government of the United States. Another question, "whether the claimants were mixed-blood Indians, or whether they were white men incorporated into the Indian tribes, drawing annuities and entitled to all the privileges of Indians," was not inquired into.

Since the rendition of some of the judgments it has been ascertained that white men have gone among the Indians and married wives, and become what are known as "squaw men," entitled to all of the rights of the Indians, and have recovered judgments against the Government and against the very tribes of which they were members and through which they were receiving annuities from the Government.

The committee believe, Mr. Chairman, that all of these questions should have been thoroughly and fully investigated, and that no one who does not bring himself strictly within the provisions of the law should be heard to enforce his claims in the court under this statute.

Again, there is a fourth question involved. Were these people who have instituted suits against the Government of the United States, "citizens of the United States at the time of bringing suit"? Gentleman familiar with the provisions of the act will remember as one of the provisions, that where claims have been allowed by the Interior Department such claims were to be transmitted to the Court of Claims and judgments rendered, without the necessity of further proof.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what your information is as to the number of these fraudulent claims, and whether you are going to discard all that have been properly presented and passed upon by the court in order to reach a few that seem to be doubtful?

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to my colleague that the proposition is simply this: We direct the Attorney-General to investigate these judgments, and ascertain whether or not any facts are to be had which, under the law, would authorize the Attorney-General to reopen these judgments. Under the general statute the Government may within two years reopen a case where fraud or injustice appears to have been done the Government.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me, right there?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Does your amendment contemplate the enlargement of that section which you quote—section 1088 of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all.

Mr. PICKLER. Do you mean to give him the same power to investigate these judgments that section 1088 of the Revised Statutes gives him?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; just the same.

Mr. PICKLER. No more?

Mr. SAYERS. No more; and we further propose to allow him enough money to do this work, so that he may be able to report to this Congress at its next session what judgments should, in the opinion of the Department of Justice, be paid.

Mr. COOMBS. Without further contest.

Mr. HERMANN. There are about 325 judgments certified to Congress, involving a sum equal to about $515,000?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman whether it is his purpose that the Department of Justice shall go behind each and all of these judgments, or only such particular judgments as to which it is thought there should be investigation?

Mr. SAYERS. I propose to throw upon the Department of Justice the responsibility of inquiring into these judgments, and reporting to Congress what judgments should be paid.

Mr. BRODERICK. Is the gentleman informed as to the number, as to the per cent, of these judgments that are probably fraudulent?

Mr. SAYERS. We have been informed as to only a few of them, because, as the Attorney-General has informed us, he has not been able to inquire into all of the judgments.

Mr. BRODERICK. There are only a small per cent of them that will be questioned, probably?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask whether you have any information at all as to the fraudulent acquisition of any of these judgments, except those reported by that committee?

Mr. SAYERS. None at all; but the Attorney-General——

Mr. COCKRELL. Then you propose to close out men who have had judgments, and who are entitled to be paid, on account of a few fraudulent ones. We have no squaw men in Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me tell my colleague that as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I do not look to see whether a claimant lives in Texas or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand all that, but you have selected out a few squaw men whom you claim have obtained fraudulent judgments and you propose to go behind all these judgments that have been rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction and to give the Attorney-General authority to go behind these judgments and shut out all these claimants, as to whom there is not a particle of proof to show any fraud, and there is no telling when this investigation will end.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me answer my colleague——

Mr. PICKLER. I suppose it will not be considered an interruption, if we get at this understanding?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. Let me answer my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL]. In the first place our committee have not been hunting out a few of these claims at all. They have been reported to us from the outside. A committee of the Senate have been investigating this matter. In the second place, we are only proposing to do in regard to these judgments what the Attorney-General has the authority to do under the general statutes; and also to give him enough money to prosecute his inquiries thoroughly and rapidly.

Mr. BAILEY. If my colleague will permit me just there, I think it is very probable that some of these judgments ought not to be paid. But I agree with the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL], that a man who has an honest claim, and has reduced it to a judgment, ought not to be delayed on account of the existence of some dishonest claim. I therefore suggest to my colleague [Mr. SAYERS], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that an easy way out of this would be to make an appropriation, not as large as all the judgments call for, for that probably would not be necessary, but sufficient to cover what are supposed to be the honest claims, and provide that no claim shall be paid except upon the certificate of the Assistant Attorney-General in charge of these claims.

Mr. SAYERS. This gives the Attorney-General the power to protect the Government from the payment of dishonest claims.

Mr. PICKLER. We all agree to that proposition.

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to say this to my friend from Texas, that I hold in my hand a recent letter from the Department of Justice, from the Assistant Attorney-General, who distinctly asserts that there is no evidence whatever on file in that Department tending to show that any one of these 325 judgments have been fraudulently obtained; and secondly, as to this investigation, to which reference has been made, and which was taken by one member of the other body in the States of Nebraska and South Dakota, that as to that entire investigation under which these judgments have been held up as objectionable, the only point, and the single point of that investigation was as to whether the party making a claim was a citizen of the United States.

Now, in order to present to the committee, and especially to the chairman of the committee, the character of that investigation which clouded a few fragments of the Department of Justice, I want to quote for the gentleman from the first page of the investigation, and let him see the character of the investigation which was carried on by that committee; and then I submit to him that if a subordinate officer had submitted such a stupid and unjust report as this, he would have been expelled from the public service.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman can submit that in his own remarks.

Mr. HERMANN. Now, as to this report in pursuance of the Senate resolution, here is an instance of the truth of what I say. I desire to submit it, so that gentlemen may see the character of the investigation upon which $515,000, involved in three hundred and twenty-five judgments, is to be held up and these claims virtually repudiated for the time being. Now, here is the instance——

Mr. SAYERS. You can read that in your own time.

Mr. HERMANN. I want to make that illustration, if the gentleman will permit me to finish my sentence.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly, I will permit you to finish your sentence.

Mr. HERMANN. Louis Bordeau has a claim against the Government of the United States for property destroyed belonging to him, by Indians belonging to the Sioux tribe. The claim amounted to $1,300. It was claimed by this committee that that individual was a "squaw man;" that he had abandoned his status as a citizen of the United States; that he had become incorporated in the Indian tribe and had lost his citizenship, and therefore he could not claim to be a citizen of the United States and obtain any indemnity from the Government.

Now, let us see, for here is the evidence how very indefinite, how careless, and how stupid has been that investigation. Here is the testimony.

Claimant's son, 45 years of age, was upon the witness stand, and he was asked:

What was your father's name?
A. James Bordeau.
Q. Where was he born?
A. At St. Charles, Mo.
Q. When did he die?
A. He died sixteen years ago.
Q. When did he first become a member of the tribe of Brule Sioux?
A. My father was 22 years old when he married my mother and came among the Indians.
Q. Was he adopted into the tribe?
A. No, sir; my father had his own place on the North Platte River and every winter went out and traded among the Indians.

He wss a native-born citizen of the United States; and he was not a member of an Indian tribe, but conducted his own affairs as a citizen of the United States, living at his own home, holding land in severalty, having the fee-simple title to it, and owning the property which was destroyed. And yet this man's claim is held up here to-day on the charge that he is not a citizen of the United States, but that he had lost his citizenship and had become incorporated with a tribe of Indians, and that there is no law in the United States under which he can be paid, and, therefore, he has no remedy.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman that there has never been in the history of the Court of Claims—the gentleman wishes to know the truth and the whole truth—a series of judgments so rapidly railroaded through that court as these judgments which the gentleman now desires to be paid. Bundles and bundles of ex parte testimony have been dragged from the files of the Indian Office, and under the operation of this statute, been made the predicate and basis of judgments against the Government.

Mr. PICKLER. The law authorized the taking of those papers for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. But, if these questions had been raised at the time some of these judgments probably would not have been rendered.

Mr. PICKLER. Where was the Government's attorney?

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to say right here that these questions were raised at the time.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all.

Mr. HERMANN. In every hearing before the Department of the Interior the question of citizenship was the first one that was raised, the first interrogatory that was put.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, let me tell the gentleman what I have heard as to one case alone. I have heard that after the present Assistant Attorney-General had been appointed but had not yet qualified, his predecessor, who was more than a thousand miles distant at the time, telegraphed an agreement.

Mr. PICKLER. That ought to be investigated.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course; and that is what we desire to do.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the gentleman willing to do now?

Mr. SAYERS. I for one am willing to accept the proposition of my colleague [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all we want.

Mr. SAYERS. No; you want all the judgments paid immediately.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; we want only what is just and right.

Mr. HERMANN. We do not go to the extent of asking that every dollar of these judgments be appropriated; but we do say that in justice to the honest claimants who are involved here the gentleman should permit the appropriation of a sufficient amount to cover their claims and should exclude a sufficient amount to cover the other claims which may be doubtful and which the Departments say are only about ten in number.

Mr. SAYERS. Speaking only for myself, and not undertaking to bind or to influence any member of the Committee on Appropriations, because I have no authority to do so, I am willing to make an appropriation of $100,000, coupled with a provision directing the Attorney-General to investigate and inquire into these judgments, and providing that no judgment shall be paid out of the $100,000 unless upon a certificate from the Attorney-

General to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has examined the same, and that there has been no fraud or injustice against the Government.

Mr. HERMANN. Then what will you do with the other four hundred and fourteen odd thousand dollars?

Mr. SAYERS. Let him investigate those cases in the meantime, and make a report at the next session.

Mr. HERMANN. Why does not the gentleman, on the same principle, proceed to go behind all the other judgments that are provided for in this bill? Why single out Indian depredation claims, which belong to the people of the West?

Mr. SAYERS. Which belong to the people of the West! The West has been about as well taken care of in these appropriations bills as any other part of the country.

Mr. HERMANN. It does not seem to be so at the present moment.

Mr. GROUT. I think that most of the people who are interested in these claims are in Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would suggest, in order to settle this matter fairly and in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], that, in my judgment, the Government would be fully protected against the payment of any fraudulent claims—and I am certain that none of us from the West desire any fraudulent Indian depredation claims paid—in my judgment the Government would be fully protected if half the amount included in these judgments, say $250,000, should be appropriated under the conditions stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that no money shall be paid out upon any judgment, except upon the certificate of the Attorney General or of the acting attorney, in the case that no fraud has been perpetrated.

Appropriate that amount and let it be applied either pro rata, or to satisfy in full these just judgments when they are shown to be so. That would at least give an assurance that these judgments would be paid, and it seems to me that it is about the fairest compromise.

Mr. HERMANN. That is not fair, but it is fairer than the proposition the gentleman from Texas has made.

Mr. PICKLER. What does the gentleman from Texas say to that?

Mr. SAYERS. The amount is too large.

Mr. KEM. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he thinks it at all probable that any considerable number of these claims are fraudulent?

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer the question frankly. We do not know whether that be true or not. We do not know whether they are fraudulent, nor do we know that they are just claims, but there is a suspicion, founded upon some facts which the Assistant Attorney-General has been able to gather, that some of these judgments have been improperly obtained.

Mr. PICKLER. At this point let me give the gentleman the Attorney-General's own language on that point. He says:

> I beg to state, in reply, that although upon taking charge of this office in 1893 and reorganizing the force within a month thereafter, opportunity was not afforded me under the rules of the court, with respect to work in the field and the causes on the trial calendar, to examine as closely the cases as under other circumstances I should have done; yet I have no reason to believe that any of the judgments obtained contained in the said Executive Document No. 7 are irregular except as hereinafter stated.
> Sometime in the month of February last information came to me to the effect that the following judgments in the list were of doubtful regularity because of the requisite condition of citizenship being wanting.

And then there are nine judgments set out. That is the language of the Attorney-General. Out of 325 judgments, these are all that he could say there was any irregularity about; and these only as to citizenship.

Mr. COOMBS. If the gentleman will read the remainder of the statement——

Mr. PICKLER. I think that every particle——

Mr. SAYERS. I believe that I have the floor. The last question, Mr. Chairman, which I propounded, with the answer, was as follows:

> Is it your opinion that appropriation should be suspended until you can lay your finger on those that ought to be paid and those which ought not to be paid?
> Mr. HOWRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. How do you expect Congress to get rid of judgments of the Court of Claims? Even if those judgments are wrong we can not reverse them or set them aside. If they are irregular the court itself can ascertain that fact; we can not.

Mr. HERMANN. That is just the position that we take.

Mr. SAYERS. We propose to provide for an investigation.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. If any judgment has been obtained by fraud, is not the remedy for the Attorney-General to apply to the court?

Mr. HERMANN. And he already has that remedy within his power.

Mr. SAYERS. That is what we direct him to do.

Mr. HERMANN. He does not require to be directed; the law already directs him.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I can say in a very few minutes all that I wish to say on this matter. There has been certified here in round numbers half a million dollars of these judgments known as Indian depredation judgments for the consideration of Congress. They were referred to the Committee on Appropriations. After consideration that committee was satisfied that a part of these judgments had not been properly defended—some of them that can be named and are named—with well-grounded suspicion against other judgments that the Attorney-General was not able to name, and we are not able to name.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations had no desire—I think I speak not only for the minority, but for the whole committee when I say they had no desire to recommend anything to this House except that which is right. I have an opinion about this matter, and I will state it; and then, so far as I am concerned, my connection with it is done.

Gentlemen are familiar with the law under which the Court of Claims took jurisdiction of these matters. What were known as Indian depredation claims had been kicked from pillar to post for many years; many cases were passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior; but the action taken upon them amounted to nothing, except that occasionally Congress might appropriate for a particular claim. So that a few years ago we passed an act referring these claims to the Court of Claims. Now, listen and see what that court under that act was to do. We conferred jurisdiction upon the court to inquire and finally adjudicate—

> First, all claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any band, tribe, or nation in amity with the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for.

Thus it was provided in the very first clause of the act that the claim must inure to a citizen of the United States; and it must be for property taken or destroyed by some tribe of Indians "in amity with the United States." Those two things must exist.

Then a third question arises: where a citizen of the United States whose property has been destroyed by Indians in amity or at peace with the United States, has ceased to be a citizen at the time he brings his suit, has he any status? The Court of Claims went on to hear these cases; and after inquiry from the Attorney-General, it appears—I will not take time to read but will state the substance of the communication—that of these three or four hundred cases, in no case where judgment was rendered was the question of citizenship raised before the court.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. It was conceded.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It was not raised, as I understand it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York rose.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will make my statement, and I think it will be satisfactory to my friend from New York.

Again in these cases, the inquiry as to what constituted a tribe at peace with the United States does not seem to have been passed upon.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In a moment. I think I can state this matter succinctly, and then I will answer questions.

Now, these judgments come to us; and the report is made that in a number of these cases the claimants were not citizens of the United States; that some were Canadians, some Mexicans, some "squaw men" who practically had been adopted into the tribe—not by legislation of the United States unless the treaty constitutes legislation, but adopted in point of fact—married into the tribes and drawing rations through their families from the Government.

Now, then, the court decided that citizenship is a matter that is jurisdictional. Now, it seems that in certain named cases of these judgments citizenship did not exist, that in some instances the tribe was not in amity with the United States; we said as to these cases there is no doubt that the United States ought not to make the appropriation unless we have had our day in court.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not now. In two or three minutes I will yield, first to the gentleman from New York for a question, and then to any other gentleman.

Then the question occurred to the committee, Has the United States had its day in court? Has the Attorney-General in charge of these cases been ignorant or careless; and if so, are we bound the same as any other party would be? Much can be said in favor of that position. As we began to inquire we turned to section 1088 of the Revised Statutes and found—and I ask the particular attention of gentlemen—this provision of the law:

The Court of Claims, at any time while any claim is pending before it, or on appeal from it, or within two years next after the final disposition of such claim, may, on motion on behalf of the United States, grant a new trial and stay the payment of any judgment therein, upon such evidence, cumulative or otherwise, as shall satisfy the court that any fraud, wrong, or injustice in the premises has been done to the United States.

Mr. HERMANN. Hence there is no necessity for this legislation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah! the gentleman says that there is no necessity for this legislation. There is the language of the Revised Statutes; that is the law, and there is not one of these judgments, if the cause exists, that can not be opened on motion for a fraud or wrong or for injustice in the premises done to the United States.

Mr. PICKLER. That is right.

Mr. HERMANN. They can do that now under the statute the gentleman has just read, without this legislation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, the gentleman is swift. He says we can do that now. When it has come to the knowledge of this House in the last ten days that there are a number of these judgments, which are named, that ought to be opened and can be opened, when a well-founded suspicion comes to this House that there are others that can not be named that can be opened and ought to be opened, then the question is whether you will appropriate this money before you ascertain which of these judgments are subject to a motion for a new trial under section 1088 of the Revised Statutes.

The Committee on Appropriations did not believe it to be good policy, and therefore we report an amendment to this bill that I think will commend itself to the judgment of this House; that is to say, we appropriate $10,000 to the Attorney-General, and it shall be his duty to vigorously inquire from this time until the first Monday of next December as to the facts in each case, and if there be a case among the mass that ought to be reopened or that in his judgment should not be paid until the well-grounded suspicion as to some of them is laid at rest, he is to so report to Congress; so that when it is paid we can say that money is due.

That is all there is of it. If gentlemen think under this state of facts that they want to rush in and pay anyhow on this statement, well and good; they will so vote. It is not intended to tie the matter up permanently. It is not intended to confer any new power on the Attorney-General or on the court, but under the rights of the United States under the law it is proposed to give the Attorney-General $10,000 in money and five months in time to investigate cases, make motions for new trials if cause exists, and report to Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. Under section 1088.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (continuing). And if there be any cases found under this statute, 1088, which ought not to be paid, which ought to be reopened and in which the United States should have a new hearing, under the law, those facts will be reported to Congress, and in all other cases where no defense exists the money will be paid.

Mr. PICKLER. That is all right; I agree to that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If there be just doubts as to the legality of any of these claims, if such a condition exists in regard to them we ought to know it, and in my opinion—and that is the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations—we should withhold the appropriation and pay none of the judgments until this investigation has been completed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Will my colleague yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. The gentleman from Illinois promised to yield to me. I want about five minutes. This has been a pretty general discussion.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My colleague from Indiana wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. The first judgment rendered is on the 11th of October, 1892, in these Indian depredation cases; so that under the law now, the two years will not expire until next October.

Mr. HERMANN. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly, the two years is not up yet.

Mr. HERMANN. Hence there is no necessity for this legislation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does my friend from New York wish to ask a question?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I want to ask a question, but I want several minutes' time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am talking in the time of the gentleman from Texas. I yield the floor back to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS], and the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE].

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to paying the Attorney-General a bonus of $10,000 for neglecting his duty. What is his duty? When an action is commenced against the Government it is his duty to appear in defense of the United States, and see that the court has jurisdiction. Now, if the plaintiff is not a citizen, or any other jurisdictional fact does not exist, he should set up a plea to the jurisdiction. When the case goes to judgment, the judgment establishes beyond question and beyond dispute all the facts that confer jurisdiction.

If on the pleadings it appears that the court had no jurisdiction, then the judgment is a nullity; but you can not go outside of the record and say now that a plaintiff is not a citizen, when the complaint alleges that he is, and the answer admits it. The remedy is with the court, and the duty is upon the Attorney-General, and he should not come here and ask us for $10,000 to compensate him for performing his duty. He can apply to the court to open every fraudulent judgment that he has permitted to be entered against the Government. Congress can not reverse the judgments. Congress can not set them aside. Congress, by any action, can not affect the question of jurisdiction. It all lies with the Attorney-General and with the court, and are we to give him $10,000 for performing his duty? Do we not pay him already for that? That is all I have to say.

Mr. SAYERS. He must send men out to these places to investigate. The money that the Department of Justice receives for this purpose is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. It was the duty of the Attorney-General to attend to it in the time of it.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. If the committee will bear with me patiently, I will attempt to make a brief statement of some facts involved in this controversy.

From October 11, 1892, to January 22, 1893, judgments were rendered by the Court of Claims under the Indian depredation act of March 3, 1891, which in the aggregate amounted to $452,000 in round numbers. There are, I think, 211 of these judgments. From November 13, 1893, to April 9, 1894, there were some 29 other judgments rendered, which in the aggregate amounted to $62,000 in round numbers.

It is believed that many of these judgments are fraudulent because they were allowed upon insufficient evidence.

On March 27, 1894, a special agent was sent out to the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Agencies in South Dakota with instructions to investigate ten judgments, aggregating in round numbers $10,000. It was discovered by this investigation that such judgment had been rendered for depredations of Sioux Indians, and that the claimants themselves were Sioux Indians, or were incorporated into the tribe as such, and were drawing annuities and supplies from the Government under treaties of the Sioux Indians.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. I am reading from a carefully prepared statement drawn from these official documents.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman is clear off on that.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. I think not. It is now contended by the Department of Justice that certain jurisdictional facts should be established and should affirmatively appear before the Court of Claims should render judgments in these depredation cases.

Mr. PICKLER. They did appear.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. It is contended by the Department of Justice that under the act of March 3, 1891, both citizenship and amity are jurisdictional, and should be affirmatively shown before any recovery can be had in this class of cases.

In a word, that it should be affirmatively shown, first, Whether the Indians committing the depredations were in amity with the United States; second, whether the claimants were, at the time the depredations were committed, citizens of the United States.

It has recently been decided by the Court of Claims that a person must show citizenship at the time of the depredations. This decision, I think, was rendered May 21, 1894. The decision of May 21, 1894, by the Court of Claims, was in favor of the contention of the defense that the same defenses could be made to an allowed case as to cases which had not gone to an allowance in the Interior Department. If that decision had been made when the allowed cases contained in Senate Executive Document No. 7, were presented, it is possible some of them could have been defended on the jurisdictional question of amity or citizenship, but how many, if any, can not be stated until the former judgments are examined. It is contended that such as have become Indians to all intents and purposes ought to be estopped from suing their own people and the Government for acts of the other members of their tribe, even though such persons had not lost their citizenship with the United States while acquiring tribal rights appertaining to treaty-making Indians.

It seems that the act of March 3, 1891, transferred to the Court of Claims the claims for depredations pending in the Interior Department which were allowed as well as those not allowed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PICKLER. After 1866.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. In the cases allowed by the Secretary of the Interior it does not appear that the jurisdictional question of citizenship was properly raised by the defense, and therefore there was no adjudication of citizenship, it would seem, in the allowed cases under said act in the Court of Claims.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Wait until I get through, please.

Mr. PICKLER. It relates to that point.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. I am making a plain statement of the facts involved in this proposition as I understand them.

Mr. PICKLER. It is a wrong statement

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. I am trying to make a correct statement.

In order to have warranted a recovery in these depredation cases the proof should have affirmatively shown whether the claimants were mixed-blood Indians or whether they were white men incorporated with the Indian tribes, drawing annuities and entitled to all the privileges of Indians.

The question is now before the Supreme Court—and will doubtless be settled soon—whether, a portion of the tribe being in open hostility, the tribe as a whole may be considered as sustaining amicable relations to the United States.

It has been twice held by the Court of Claims in recent decisions that a tribe of Indians which is partly friendly and partly hostile with the United States are not in amity with the United States. In other words, it is incumbent upon a tribe to preserve peace and to see that all of its people bear amicable relations with the United States.

A subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Depredations of the Senate has recently submitted a report concerning several of these judgments; and that committee, after taking evidence at considerable length, reports that "the judgments to which we call your attention ought not to be paid until they have been further examined into."

Mr. PICKLER. Who says that?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. That is the report made by the Senate subcommittee. Mr. Chairman, a very brief investigation of the information that has come to Congress concerning these depredation claims leads me to believe that the jurisdictional facts were not satisfactorily proven. It shows that many of these claims are fraudulent, and instead of the jurisdictional facts affirmatively appearing, there seems to have been no evidence introduced to warrant these judgments, and as my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] upon the committee has stated, the Government has two years in which to open up these judgments, and since the two years do not expire, even on the first judgment, until next October, it seems that it is unnecessary that Congress at this time should be called upon to make a large appriation for the purpose of paying these depredation judgments.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. The gentleman can speak in his own time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I have seen no suggestion of fraud except as to this jurisdictional fact on the question of citizenship. Now, it seems highly probable that in these cases the jurisdictional facts are proven, and it strikes me that a careful attorney of the United States, or any attorney, trying any case where the law itself lays down as a condition-precedent to recovery that citizenship shall be proven; that the record in every one of these cases must have disclosed the fact that citizenship was proven or else the record must fail to disclose that fact. Now, this investigation is asked, it seems to me, on a simple notice to Congress that in a few of these cases these necessary facts stand unproved, and it is demanded that the appropriation shall be postponed until an investigation of all those cases can be had.

I for one think it is not just, and I think that the least that can be done here is that half of this amount should be made available now, to be paid to just claimants, proportionately, where there is no showing in the record from one end to the other that there is even a suggestion of fraud. In some of these cases the two years have already gone, and there is not one suggestion made here that the Attorney-General could not take advantage of the law as it now exists. Take that old claim of Tully, of Tucson, Ariz. It is a claim that is known to many people in my district. They know that more than $25,000 worth of property was destroyed. The judgment in that case was rendered nearly two years ago, and there was no suggestion of fraud in the case.

The claimant is very old, and almost ready to die. The old man has met with reverses in his late years, and yet the payment of the judgment he has obtained is to be postponed because some man in South Dakota had married a squaw and had ceased to be a citizen of the United States. These judgments are to be postponed until the next Congress without even a partial payment to anyone of his or their just judgments.

I suggest, then, as was suggested by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY, and also by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. COCKRELL, that at least a portion of the judgments should be met, and at least $250,000 should be appropriated now; that $250,000 to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on the certification of the Attorney-General that in each particular case he sees no reason to question the judgment. Thus, before the next session of Congress many of these people who are now standing in need of the money on these judgments may be partially relieved.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. BRODERICK. I see by section 7 of the act that—

All judgments of said court shall be a final determination of the case, a decision of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned, unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted and the judgment reversed or modified or an appeal taken as hereinbefore provided.

Now, if no appeal has been taken, is it enough to pass these judgments on a mere suggestion of fraud? Ought not there to be some evidence?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am thankful to my friend for reading that particular section of the law. That law says that these judgments shall be paid, except where a new trial is granted or where an appeal is taken. There is no new trial asked for in any of these cases by the United States. There is no new trial granted in any one of these cases, and if an appeal was made, and if a new trial were granted to-morrow——

Mr. BRODERICK. And nothing but a bare suspicion of fraud.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And even if a new trial were granted, they could make their application and again postpone the payment of these judgments and leave unpaid all these other judgments that ought to be paid now.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman makes the point that this question of amity and citizenship ought to be investigated. Has it not been stipulated how that matter should be determined in the first place?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They are precluded now by the judgment, which can not be upset unless there is some proof of fraud; and what right has the United States now to raise that question on the jurisdictional fact as to whether the claimant was a citizen. Before the judgment was rendered it was necessary that that point should be proved.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. The suggestion I want to make is that the assistant attorney-general having the matter specially in charge states that in his judgment there should be evidence to show these jurisdictional facts affirmatively.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why did not he take it affirmatively then?

Mr. PICKLER. He stipulated in the record that these facts were so. He did that in every case.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Can the Government admit a jurisdictional fact in a court of limited and special jurisdiction?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is done every day.

Mr. PICKLER. You can stipulate facts, can not you? He did that in these cases, and that is the reason he says he can find but eight cases which are questionable.

Mr. COOMBS. Oh, he has not gone through the cases yet.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, he has.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I beg my friends not to interrupt me. I say that the judgment in each case is a presumption that these facts existed. I think no one will deny that. But I do not want, and I am not here to ask, that any claim where fraud is manifest, or where there is even a plausible suggestion of fraud, shall be paid until Congress has investigated it. I think it is the duty of Congress to see such cases investigated before the judgments are paid, because I think that rests in the power of the House before it makes an appropriation in any case, no matter what the law otherwise may be.

Let us have every one of these cases where there is even a suggestion of fraud investigated—for I do not think there is any gentleman on this floor who wants any fraudulent claims paid; but I do not want any constituent of mine, or of any other gentleman, any claimant whose record is plain and open, whose name is honored in the community in which he lives, to have his judgment against the United States hung up and payment postponed simply because some other gentleman somewhere else has perpetrated, or is charged with having perpetrated, some fraud against the Government.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Do you think that in a special proceeding such as obtaining a judgment in the Court of Claims for depredations——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What do you mean by a "special proceeding," please?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Well, it is provided by statute that certain jurisdictional facts shall be proven in establishing a depredation claim.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know any case that is not provided for somewhere.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. But do you think that the Attorney-General in such a proceeding has a right to admit those jurisdictional facts without demanding evidence to establish them, or that a judgment should be taken in the absence of such affirmative evidence?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Suppose it was taken, who can complain?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. An examination of the records in those cases would show whether such evidence was produced or not.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, confine your examination and your objection to those cases where there was no such evidence.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. The Assistant Attorney-General states that the business of the court is such that he has not had time to investigate these judgments.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. He has had time to have judgments rendered, and investigation should precede judgment. The Secretary of the Interior had time to take proofs of citizenship, for it never was alleged in the Department or anywhere else that any of these claims would be paid to persons who were not citizens.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. The Assistant Attorney-General states that in the cases coming from the Secretary of the Interior those questions of jurisdiction do not seem to have been passed upon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They may not have been raised in the Court of Claims; but does your Assistant Attorney-General dare to say that they were not raised before the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. In some cases it would appear that there was no question raised as to amity or citizenship. At least this would seem to be true from the information before us.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then, are you ready, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that wherever the record discloses that those facts were established the judgments shall be paid, and that wherever the record does not so show payment shall be postponed?

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Does not the act provide that the judgment of the court shall be final?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It provides that the judgment of the court shall be final except where an appeal is taken or a new trial is granted. In all other cases the judgment of the court is final and binding upon Congress. Now, we are not willing that on a mere suggestion of fraud emanating from the other end of this building, to the effect that seven or eight men who have obtained judgments had married squaws, thereby abandoning their allegiance as citizens of the United States and becoming members of an Indian tribe—we are not willing that on such a suggestion, whether it be well founded or not, the honest claims of citizens of Arizona, of Oregon, of Minnesota, of Texas, of New Mexico, shall be postponed for years.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] states that the Attorney-General of the United States did not specifically examine every one of these claims in order to ascertain whether the jurisdictional facts were presented and established or not. In answer to that I remind him that the law itself provides that the Attorney-General shall take the allowances of the Secretary of the Interior as prima facie correct, unless it be discovered that there has been fraud perpetrated.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My friend from Oregon will pardon me for insisting on proceeding, but I am in a hurry. Mr. Chairman, I am not blaming the Attorney-General; I am not here to say one word against him. I have no doubt that he has done all that he could do in view of the amount of official business on his hands.

I do not expect and nobody else expects the Attorney-General to go into an investigation of Indian depredation claims. That thing is left, as every similar question is left, to trusted men of the proper Department. It may be that it has been left to men who are incompetent; but I know it will not conduce to fairness or justice if every judgment with every fact proven shall be submitted now to a year's delay or two years' delay because in certain specified cases there is a suggestion of fraud.

I say the Committee of the Whole can certainly do no less than appropriate at least $250,000 or $300,000 (and I shall at the proper time offer such an amendment) to be immediately available, on the certificate of the Attorney-General, for the payment of judgments as to which there is no suggestion of fraud. Let other cases as to which fraud is suggested be investigated. But I hope Congress will do justice to these men who have had their money withheld from them for twenty years past. By such an amendment as I suggest, the Government is perfectly protected.

If these claims are examined it will be found that the amounts are cut below the actual loss. Articles are put in, not at prices as they existed twenty years ago, but at the prices prevailing when the claims were presented. I trust, then, that this Committee of the Whole, in recognition of the justice of most of these claims, will make an appropriation immediately available which shall cover at least 50 per cent of the amount of these claims.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, preliminary to the brief remarks I shall make on this question, I desire to read a letter, and I trust it will be listened to attentively. It is dated at Hanford, Cal., May 16, 1894, and is addressed to myself. The writer says:

I write this to you to ask your assistance in getting an appropriation made by the present Congress to pay an Indian depredation claim which I have had before Congress since the sessions of 1885 and 1886. Judgment was rendered in my favor February 27, 1893, for the sum of $3,212.90.

The original claim was for $31,353; but the Attorney-General wrote me a year ago that he had allowed me the sum of $3,212.90, and that an appropriation therefor would be made by Congress.

I would be grateful to you for any assistance you could give in having this appropriation made, as my circumstances are such that I need the money very much. My husband was murdered by the Southern Ute Indians, our home and everything we possessed burned by them, and I shot in the right shoulder——

Now, gentlemen, I would like you to give attention to this letter. It presents a live matter. It is not a recital of technical cobweb precedents. It is a recital of the facts of one of these Indian depredations:

This occurred at 11 o'clock at night, June 20, 1885, in La Plata County, Colo. We were living on a preëmption claim, and making of it a genuine, comfortable home; had never had any trouble, nor had anything to do with the Indians in any way. 'Twas an unprovoked, cold-blooded murder. I was left with four small children (the youngest, an infant of 10 months, afterwards died from the effects of exposure), naked and homeless, and I with my right arm hanging useless at my side. We made our escape, and I have struggled with poverty ever since, trying to rear my children intelligently. This winter and spring have been unusually hard for us, owing to the financial and labor troubles. As I am an old woman—will soon be 50 years of age—I don't feel as if it is right to deprive me of my money any longer, if I am to have any good of it.

This $3,212 does not pay me for what the flames destroyed, yet it would be a small portion of what my husband and I had labored faithfully for years to accumulate, and was so ruthlessly destroyed by the Government's wards, whom that Government is so careful to keep comfortably clothed and fed.

If you will kindly help me in this matter I and my children will be extremely grateful to you.

The letter is signed "Mrs. M. A. Genthner," of Hanford, Cal., which is in my Congressional district.

The claim was certified to the committee this year, and judgment has been rendered by the court and is due to this woman, whose husband as well as one of her children was murdered by the Government's pets and herself crippled. Now, I wish to read for the sake of comparison one little item in this bill, on page 6:

Payment to Sam Yuen: To pay Sam Yuen the value of certain opium destroyed by order of the Treasury Department in 1887, $2,400.

The Chinaman must be paid; but the woman whose husband was murdered and herself wounded by your pets must wait, because, forsooth, there is a general charge of fraud entered in regard to some of these judgments! I suppose there could be no charge of fraud entered where there is a Chinaman at one end of the business; because, if I understand the signs of the times, and if I read correctly the votes that are taken in this House, if there is one thing sacred with this Administration it is a Chinaman. He is more sacred than the white elephant of Siam to the Siamese.

Mr. Chairman, no man in the House, I think, has more sincere respect for the chairman of this committee than I have; but I can not help thinking that he and his committee have been very unfortunate in the excuse they have given for not doing their plain duty in this matter and not including in their bill an appropriation for the judgments certified to the House and Senate by the Attorney-General in the matter of Indian depredation claims. It seems to me, with all due respect to the committee, that the excuse presented by them for not doing their duty in this matter is the flimsiest ever offered by any committee to this House.

There is a general charge of fraud. What is the evidence? Of the three hundred and twenty-five claims which have been approved by the court it would appear from the statements of the committee that perhaps ten need some looking after. But charges of this kind, if they are to receive any consideration, should be so definite and precise that they can be connected with particular named claims; unless they take this shape they should not be regarded. A general charge against these claims is a charge against your courts and against your Attorney-General, who has certified the claims to Congress for payment. Are our courts so corrupt, is the Attorney-General so corrupt as this charge would imply? If they are why appropriate $10,000 more to enable the Attorney-General to investigate claims which he has already once certified? Will he be any more honest the second time than the first?

My friend, the chairman of the committee, in answering the gentleman from New York, referred to this $10,000 appropriated for the use of the Attorney-General for a second investigation of these judgments as a mere bagatelle. But the judgment rendered in the particular case to which I am asking attention—a judgment of $3,200 in payment of a just claim—is, in the opinion of the committee, to be assumed as a gigantic fraud.

Mr. Chairman, I believe every member of this House believes that the next House of Representatives will be Republican. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe that the refusal of the committee to do its plain duty in these cases is simply following in the line of the insufficient appropriations which have been made for other purposes, the object being to throw them over to that next House, which you acknowledge must be Republican, that you may charge it with extravagant appropriations.

Mr. HUDSON. I want to correct the gentleman. The next House will be Populist. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There will not be any Populists in the next House.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I hope the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HUDSON] will live until the House of Representatives is controlled by the Populists. There will be fewer Populists in the next House than in this. You may write that down. And I want to tell my friend that when that Republican House meets here I hope it will be large-minded enough and honest enough and courageous enough to do right and justice, even though it has to make an appropriation for a white woman or a white man instead of an appropriation for an Indian or an Indian agent.

I believe that it will be big enough and honest enough to do that. I believe it will be big enough and honest enough to pay the honest debts, and debts due to its poorest citizens, even if the great trusts and corporations of the country have to wait in the anteroom for a few minutes longer before coming in and taking their millions.

You talk about "fraud" in these 220 small claims, claims growing out of murder, robbery, pillage, and arson committed by your wards that you are supporting and caring for, and yet in a few days—and I want you to remember this—in a few days you propose to ratify by your votes the gift, not to say the steal, of $40,000,000 given to one of the biggest, most arrogant, and most shameless trusts that exists or ever existed in the United States! That is what you are going to do. But here you cry "fraud," "fraud," on these little honest claims! Oh, gentlemen, you strain at a gnat and swallow a camel—yes, you swallow two or a dozen of them at a meal. [Laughter.]

Now, I desire to call the attention of the committee also to page 39 of the bill and page 38:

For payment to the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, $68,000.

No fraud about that, I suppose. Oh, no; you could not raise the question about that. Now, let us look at another:

Judgments of Court of Claims:—

That is the same "corrupt Court of Claims," mind you, whose judgment in the Indian depredation cases was of no value. It is on a different subject here, however, and it is all right—

For the Pottowatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana, $104,000.

Mr. Chairman, that is only a bagatelle, of course, because it goes to the Indians. There is no fraud connected with that.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not wish, of course, to say anything that will probably interfere with the gentleman's remarks, but I desire to inform him that before we recommended that appropriation we inquired into all of the facts, and had before us the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. We went to the General Land Office and also went to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and did not put the provision into the bill until every one had earnestly recommended it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. But there was no "fraud" there. Now, I want to answer the gentleman. It has been suggested near me that there is not much commission in these Indian depredation cases anyway. But I wish to ask if the gentleman inquired so particularly in regard to the claims of the Indians, did you have any special interest in inquiring into this Indian depredation claim of Margaret Guenther? You did not look at that at all, did you?

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer the gentleman's question and make my remarks afterwards. The reason we inquired into that judgment of $104,000 was because it was a considerable amount, and we wanted to strike it from the bill if we could.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Oh, yes; I understand all that, but I suppose nobody charged fraud in that case. I suppose they did charge fraud though against this little claim that I have presented here?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know the particular claim to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BOWERS of California. You found three or four charges of fraud had been made, and because a few of them had been then you throw out all the judgments of the Court of Claims in these honest cases and make no investigation or examination of them, and I charge now that the committee took no pains to inquire into these 320 claims. You never investigated them. You do not know whether they are fraudulent or not.

Mr. COOMBS. We are asking the permission of Congress now to do that very thing.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Ah, but did you ask Congress to give you power to investigate these other claims that you put into the bill?

Mr. COOMBS. There was no charge of fraud in those cases.

Mr. BOWERS of California. No charge of fraud? Why, there is no evidence of fraud connected with these claims except what comes from the committee. I defy you to present a charge of fraud in any one of these three hundred and twenty cases which comes from anybody except from the committee. And yet you pass other claims, make no investigation of them, but in these cases, these Indian depredation claims, you are quick to find a flaw or to make one. You confess by your very silence that you have not investigated them.

Mr. COOMBS. But I will not if you put it on that ground. I deny that. I will answer the gentleman if he makes a charge of that kind.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Where were the charges of fraud?

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman from California must have been blind indeed if he has not seen the charges of fraud in the Senate investigation and in the reports generally on the subject.

Mr. BOWERS of California. No charges of that kind have been presented, and I defy you to make a charge of fraud in this case. Now, there may be in a few of these cases, but that does not apply to the other 320. But you knew that you might by this means avoid making an appropriation and send the claim over to another Congress, and then tell the people when the Republicans pay the just debts of the Government, "See how extravagant these fellows are!" Well, I tell you, they will be extravagant enough to do what is right. You are not appealing to the best sense of the people, but appealing to the worst, when you go before them with such a claim as this for economy and when you try to avoid doing your duty and paying the honest debts of the Government.

I repeat, you are not appealing to the good sense and the justice of the American people, and you are making a political mistake and a business mistake.

On page 57 we find another of these same specimens:

The "Old Settlers," or Western Cherokee Indians, $800,385.31.

Nearly a million dollars. Is there any fraud about that claim? How many claims are included in that lump sum? These Indian depredation cases are itemized, but here you bring in an appropriation for nearly a million dollars, all in a single item. You just bunch the whole thing. I think if you wanted to find some fraud, perhaps you could find it there, and you could save more than you can on this item of Indian depredations.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me state to the gentleman that we inquired into all that, and it has the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and if the gentleman thinks he can discover anything wrong with it, he is at liberty to try.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I will give the gentleman five minutes' time if he will tell me the particulars and items which are included in this amount of $800,000 to which I have referred.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not want the time. I would rather hear the gentleman talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERMANN. I should like to say a word.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] three minutes.

Mr. HERMANN. In confirmation of what the gentleman from California has stated, I will say no person has made any charges here except the Committee on Appropriations with regard to frauds pertaining to these claims, and that committee have not proved so far, nor can they prove, that anyone connected with the Department has submitted to this Congress or to the Committee on Appropriations any evidence whatever to substantiate the rumor as to fraud.

Upon that subject I hold in my hand a letter from the Department of Justice, dated June 25, which was yesterday, calling attention to the fact that the letter of the Assistant Attorney-General charged with the defense of the claims, dated April 20, 1894, in answer to an official request from the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations of date April 19, for an opinion as to whether all of the judgments reported to Congress for payment were regular and should be appropriated for, showed that—

Without the opportunity, on account of the current business and the state of the trial calendar, to give the judgment cases (meaning those judgments not subject to motion for new trial under the rules of the court) that attention which under other circumstances might be given, yet there was no reason to believe that any of said judgments were irregular, except the ten judgments against the Sioux then under investigation, and that as to these, alleged to be irregular because the requisite conditions of citizenship were wanting, the Department was unable to say whether they should be appropriated for for want of further information.

Mr. PICKLER. That is found on page 132 of the committee hearings.

Mr. HERMANN. So you see there is nothing on file in the Department affecting the integrity of any one of these claims.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, it is possible, it is highly probable that some of these claims may be tainted with fraud. It would be strange if, out of the whole three hundred and twenty-five different cases, there was not something of that kind. Now, wherever there is a reasonable belief or suspicion that any one of those claims is fraudulent, do not pay it. But make an appropriation to pay the others, and to pay this poor woman what is justly due her, with her little children to care for. You claim you can not make an appropriation to pay her, but you can pay a Chinaman upon a claim reported from the same court.

Although you can do that, you refuse to pay a claim which has been here since 1885 for money due to the wife of one of your own citizens, one of the old settlers on the frontier. I say it is a shame to the American Congress that it does not act in a businesslike manner, as men would do under any other circumstances. I claim that there is as much or more fraud in this lump sum of $800,000—more than in all these Indian depredation claims. But if you find one single claim here that is fraudulent, does it make the whole of them fraudulent? Is your whole bill a fraud on that account? According to your argument, your whole bill is a fraud if there is a single fraud in it. That is taking you upon your own grounds. Now, I appeal to this House to do right, to do justice. Tell your Secretary of the Treasury to pay those bills and those judgments found by your courts. Pay those judgments that have not been questioned, cases in which no appeal has been taken, and to the payment of which there ought to be no opposition. Is not that business? Is not that the sensible, manly way to do business? I do not know whether you can do it. I do not know that the present strait in which the Democratic party finds itself will permit it. But I tell you you are making a mistake, and a big mistake, when you deny justice to your poor people and shovel out millions to your trusts.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the clause and pending amendments be closed at 4 o'clock, and that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] may control the time——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I trust the chairman of the committee will take sufficient time to defend his own committee.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I wish the chairman would give me a little time to reply, if we are to have the multitude of words that we have had for an hour.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I do not know who has used any greater multitude of words than my friend in various matters. The gentleman may have gained some information. I would like to have an amendment presented and considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I can offer it, then, when this is disposed of.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen in favor of these claims may have forty minutes, and that those who are opposed to the claims may have twenty minutes.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to state that I wish twenty minutes of that time, and that possibly the gentleman from South Dakota requires twenty minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. I think I can get along with twenty minutes, and I want to carry out the understanding made with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I will act in good faith with the gentleman.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that this debate be closed in sixty-three minutes; that the gentlemen favoring these claims may have forty-three minutes, and those opposed may have twenty minutes of the time; twenty minutes to be given to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], twenty minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], and three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PICKLER. I want three minutes more for the gentleman from Kansas, making sixty-six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on the clause and pending amendments be closed in sixty-six minutes, forty-six minutes to be given to the gentlemen named by him, and twenty minutes to the members of the committee opposed to the proposition. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PICKLER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in the three minutes yielded to me I only desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question, if I can have his attention. Heretofore upon a general deficiency bill it has been customary to make appropriations to pay certain attorneys fees for services rendered and that have been ordered by the Attorney-General. In the act of March 3, 1893, an appropriation was made for legal services rendered to the United States. There is no other way in which they can pay for a certain kind of services, and it has been the custom to make appropriations in this manner for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman refer to claims of lawyers who have been appointed by the courts to defend prisoners who were too poor to employ counsel.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No; not at all. The law is against them. I refer to a case like that of an attorney in my State who was ordered to aproceed to Tacoma, a distance of 400 miles, and there defend the Puyallup Indians against the construction of a railroad across their reservations without authority of Congress.

The attorney was to be allowed $600, and he paid his traveling expenses. It has been certified to by the court, and Congress has provided in the deficiency act of March 3 for similar appropriations. Now, I was sick on Saturday, and for the first time since the 1st of January was absent from the House and not able to present this matter at the proper time. I would like to have the chairman of the committee look into it fully and completely; and that is all I desire to say.

Mr. SAYERS. I will look into it.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to give some of the facts that surround this case. I have no attack to make upon the Committee on Appropriations. I think they have been overcareful about making this appropriation. I think that these appropriations ought to be made, and they ought to be made now; but the Committee on Appropriations seem to think that there should be a further investigation. I desire to call attention to the history of this case, so far as the Sioux Indians are concerned, as they are largely interested in these claims, for these claims largely arise in the Sioux Indian country. I want to call the attention of the committee, in the first place, to the condition these people were in, and how these depredations came to be committed; and I read from the statement of Assistant Attorney-General Colby when before the Senate committee:

There was a drought in Nebraska, Wyoming, and Western Dakota. The white people lost all their crops. The Indians lost all they had, and they had raised considerable. Congress did not make the appropriation of about one-third which the treaty provided for. They not only were short of their crops, but they had to have supplies sent out to them to supply their wants, and they had their rations cut down. In some instances they were actually starving. Teachers had been among them and they had the idea of a Saviour and a Messiah in their minds, and they thought it was time for the Messiah to come and help them. There was a religious revival on that subject. It frightened the agents and contractors, those who had probably been making something out of their beef contract, and they thought they were getting hostile, and they got the soldiers in there, and by bad whisky and accident down on Wounded Knee a fight was precipitated and two or three hundred killed, and they struck for the Bad Lands, and Gen. Miles came in and by sensible work got the Indians quieted and got them back.

Now, these are some of the circumstances; and I want to refer also to the language of Agent Cooper.

Now, I want to call attention to the testimony of Agent Cooper. These gentlemen here are claiming that there was no amity among these Indians, that there was a state of war, and I want to call attention to the facts as testified to by Agent Cooper:

Senator CHANDLER. Describe what destruction of property there was and what loss of life.

Mr. COOPER. There was an Indian chief by the name of Big Foot, who, I believe, lived at the Cheyenne River Agency in South Dakota, who had the reputation of being rather a warrior. He surrendered to Maj. Whitside, of the Seventh Cavalry, on Sunday, December 28, 1890—I believe that is the date—within 12 or 14 miles of the Pine Ridge Agency. On Monday morning, December 29, 1890, they called the Indians from the tepees, as they are called out there, the tents, that is, the male portion of them, the men, for the purpose of disarming them, and during the process of disarming them one excited Indian opened fire on the troops, when it became almost an instantaneous fire on the part of everybody armed on the ground. Most of the Indian men were killed and quite a number of women and children. I never knew exactly how many were killed.

Senator CHANDLER. Can you give the statistics of mortality during that winter?

Mr. COOPER. Amongst the Indians?

Senator CHANDLER. Both sides.

Mr. COOPER. It would only be guesswork for me to do that.

Senator CHANDLER. Was there a state of war there, practically?

Mr. COOPER. No, sir; I could not say it was. It is a very delicate thing for a man to criticise.

Senator CHANDLER. I will ask you, then, to state who committed these depredations.

Mr. COOPER. They were supposed to have been committed by these Indians over the reservation, such as Big Foot's band, and a fellow by the name of Two Strikes, He Dog, Kicking Bear, and Short Bull. They seemed to be the principal leaders of the disaffected Indians.

Senator CHANDLER. Who did the mischief?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know; it was confined to 2,000 Indians under these different leaders.

Senator CHANDLER. From what tribes were they?

Mr. COOPER. A portion of the Sioux known as the Brule Sioux, and a disaffected part of the Ogalallas.

Senator CHANDLER. Had they before this outbreak been at peace and in amity with the Government?

Mr. COOPER. I think so.

Senator CHANDLER. Were they living on the reservation?

Mr. COOPER. They were living on their reservation at Rosebud, as I understand.

Senator CHANDLER. Did you understand that these depredating Indians all came from the Rosebud Agency?

Mr. COOPER. No, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. From various agencies?

Mr. COOPER. That is my understanding.

Senator CHANDLER. And had been living in amity with and in receipt of annuities from the Government?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. The complaint was that the outbreak took place because the Indians did not get their rations?

Mr. COOPER. That was the complaint of some; others claimed differently.

Senator CHANDLER. That was one of the complaints?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. You seem to think that if I ask you for a fact I expect you to give me an opinion. I do not.

Mr. COOPER. There was so much talk and such a variety of opinions.

Senator CHANDLER. What was your test by which you allowed a claim; did you undertake to ascertain who had done the mischief when you examined and allowed a claim?

Mr. COOPER. Only in a general way.

Senator CHANDLER. You did undertake to do that?

Mr. COOPER. These Indians swore that it was done by the Indians who were hostile to the Government.

Senator CHANDLER. Did you undertake to locate upon any particular band or tribe of Indians the responsibility for the damage for which the Government was going to pay?

Mr. COOPER. No, sir; I could not do that.

Senator CHANDLER. Are there any means of ascertaining which Indians ought to repay the Government this $100,000?

Mr. COOPER. It would be a very difficult matter to tell. These Indians would not give the others away.

Senator CHANDLER. What evidence did you take that the Indians had done the mischief?

Mr. COOPER. The circumstances surrounding the case. The friendly Indians left their property at their homes and came to the agency to camp. The others, the hostile Indians, roamed over the reservation.

Senator CHANDLER. The Indians went back home and found their property stolen or destroyed; they proved to your satisfaction that they had possessed the property and it was gone, and you inferred that the Indians had done it?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; because there were no white men right around there?

Senator CHANDLER. Did you record the testimony or transmit the testimony upon which you made your findings?

Mr. COOPER. I did.

Senator CHANDLER. There is to be found in the Interior Department the statement of the case of each one of these Indians?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; with the testimony attached to it.

Senator CHANDLER. The Indians presented their claims and with them certain affidavits of two others?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. Did you take additional testimony?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. In writing?

Mr. COOPER. I did in a great many cases.

Senator CHANDLER. In the shape of affidavits?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. And those you have put with the testimony?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator CHANDLER. So the whole basis of your allowance in each case would be found at the Interior Department?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; everything was sent here, and I suppose they made a thorough examination before they approved it.

During that disturbance out there, which was not an Indian war, but which arose from the accidental discharging of a gun of one Indian while they were being disarmed—during that disturbance those Indians who were friendly were persuaded to come into the agency. That is the testimony of Mr. Cooper. Also the white men who had married squaws and were living among the Indians, but were citizens of the United States, were invited to come in. They came in, and gave their advice in favor of friendship and amity, and sent out word to those who were hostile to come in and submit to the Government. Those men assisted Gen. Miles and the agent to restore peace, and while they were in camp their horses and their cattle were taken and their houses were burned.

It is for that property that they now ask compensation, and I want it understood that there are no juster claims anywhere than those that are put in here by these Sioux Indians in the State of South Dakota. What is the condition of this matter as it now stands? Let me call attention to the care that is taken in the investigation and trial of these cases. Gentlemen talk here as if these claims were "railroaded" through, but I beg to call attention to the care that is exercised in all these cases. Assistant Attorney-General Colby says:

There are stipulations of facts—not for a judgment—stipulations of facts which appear in the record. For instance, stipulations that the record shows that he was a citizen.

But I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE], who addressed the committee a while ago, to let us know how, after the Attorney-General of the United States, defending all of these claims, has stipulated that these parties were citizens of the United States and that this tribe was at amity with the whites—I want to know how the gentleman is going to get back of that stipulation and of the judgment of the court? The Assistant Attorney-General himself says that he can not go back of those stipulations. The gentleman from Indiana talks as if this question of citizenship had not been passed upon at the time the cases were tried.

That is a mistake. Here in the report of the committee you will find several petitions, and every one of them alleges, as one of the material allegations under the law, that the claimant was a citizen of the United States, and then they further allege that the tribe was at amity with the people of the United States. Those facts were in the case, those facts were stipulated by the Attorney-General, acting for the United States, and there is no way that I know of to go back of these stipulations and judgments.

Now, it is so easy to prejudice just claims, especially these Indian depredation claims, that I wish to join with the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Texas, the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in providing for further investigation to section 1088 of the Revised Statutes, but I protest against their making any new law for these cases now. If there is any irregularity in those judgments as rendered, although the greatest care is taken in the trial of cases, let such irregularities be corrected if they can be reached under existing law.

But, Mr. Chairman, even if these judgments could be upset upon the question of citizenship, I contend that it would be an outrage to seek to disturb them in reference to those white men who had Indian wives, men whom the officers of this Government persuaded to come into the agency to exert their influence with the Indians for peace, and whose houses were burned and cattle taken while they were trying to help out the Government officers. I contend that it would be an outrage to attempt to disturb the judgments in their cases, especially after the stipulations that were made on the part of the Government. I say it would be the worst kind of bad faith to overturn those judgments on the question of citizenship, even if you could do it. The fact is these claims have all been very thoroughly examined. Listen to what the Attorney-General says:

Senator FAULKNER. I understand from you that you base all this information, which is involved in the stipulation of agreement between counsel, upon the report of the Secretary of the Interior?

Assistant Attorney-General COLBY. Not all of it.

Senator FAULKNER. And not upon an examination of the original papers?

Assistant Attorney-General COLBY. No. In the first place, I will state this, that every case is carefully examined. The original papers and every paper are carefully examined and a report in writing—most of it is printed—showing these different points, is submitted to me, examined sometimes by myself, usually by the assistants and signed by them. Then from that a stipulation is made. If it appears that it is all right and that the examination of the Secretary of the Interior or the allowance corresponds with the evidence, then the stipulation is prepared. Very often that original record does not contain all. In the case of the death of the original claimant, in addition an examination must be shown of the letters of administration. If a subsequent deposition is taken in regard to heirship, that must appear. Then the power of the attorney to enter into the stipulation or the authority of the claimant to accept the amount must appear.

Senator CHANDLER. Before deciding whether the United States will elect to reopen the case you make a thorough examination of the facts wherever they may be found?

Assistant Attorney-General COLBY. Not a single case has gone to judgment without a thorough and complete examination of the whole business, sometimes twice. If there is any question the examiner will say he is in doubt. In all those cases I personally examine them myself. Sometimes I give them to another examiner, and then examine both reports together. In each case an examination is made upon the return of all the facts in the record.

After this careful examination and after stipulating that these claimants were citizens and that the tribe was at amity with the people of the United States, I want to ask any lawyer on this floor how we are going to get around these judgments?

Mr. BOWERS of California. By not making the appropriation.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, that is the only way. It will be seen that the Secretary of the Interior tries these cases first. He sends them to the Attorney-General, who also tries them. Then the cases go into the Court of Claims and the court tries them, so you have three separate considerations of these cases.

Now, it is not fair to these constituents of mine who have prosecuted these judgments at great expense, who lost their cattle and their houses while they were trying to promote peace in the interest of the Government, it is not fair to them, it is very poor comfort to those men, to tell them that although they have recovered judgment they can not get paid. What I desire to impress upon the committee is this. I want gentlemen to rid their minds of all prejudice. As Mr. Cooper, who went up there to examine these claims says, they are chiefly for stock that was lost. The cases have been tried, and the Government of the United States has contested all the claims, but judgments have been rendered, and those judgments ought to be paid in good faith.

I want to say in corroboration of what the gentleman from Oregon has said that there is not, as to any one of these judgments, one syllable from the Attorney-General or any law officer of the Government charging fraud. Let that fact be remembered. Not even the Committee on Appropriations makes such a charge. They merely say that there is some suspicion raised by the Department, and they want further examination to be made. I repeat that in all these examinations neither Mr. Howry, the Assistant Attorney-General, who has been so often before the Committee on Appropriations, nor any other law officer of the Government, has made any charge of fraud.

On the contrary, they have declared that they could find no irregularity in any of the cases except eight or nine in which the question of citizenship might arise. That is all they talk about; they do not assert fraud. It has never been claimed that there is fraud. If these cases were reeking with fraud, how did they get through the Interior Department—how did they pass the Secretary of the Interior? And how did they pass through the office of the Attorney-General? And when the law officers of the Government appeared in the Court of Claims defending the interests of the Government, why did they not discover before judgment was recovered that these cases were reeking with fraud? Gentlemen, fraud does not exist in these cases. But I am perfectly willing that every opportunity shall be offered for inquiry, so that all grounds of suspicion may be removed, if there are such grounds.

Let it be remembered that the time for the filing of these Indian depredation claims has expired. The act of March 3, 1891, allowed three years for the filing of such claims, and all claims not filed by March 3, 1894, are already barred. The amount of these claims, therefore, can not be very large; but the claimants who have availed themselves of their rights under the law are entitled to a fair hearing. These men have lost their property; they have submitted their claims to the different branches of the Government, and now they ought not to be charged with fraud.

I am willing to vote for this $10,000 for the examination of this matter if it is conceded, as I understand it is, that report shall be made by December next. I am willing to agree to this, although the law says that these judgments shall be final. Section 7 of the act would seem to dispose of this whole contention. Let me call attention to its language:

> That all judgments of said court shall be a final determination of the causes described and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned, unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said court or the judgment reversed or modified upon appeal as hereinafter provided.

That would seem to dispose of this debate. The language of the statute is that these judgments shall be final.

Before taking my seat, I wish to make one inquiry of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYERS]. I understand that the amendment which he has offered authorizes the opening up of these judgments, so far as it can be done, under section 1088 of the Revised Statutes. The amendment, I believe, uses the exact language of that statute.

Mr. SAYERS. The exact language.

Mr. PICKLER. And you mean to have the matter investigated under the terms of the act.

Mr. SAYERS. Under the terms of the law.

Mr. PICKLER. Which is the language of section 1088.

Mr. SAYERS. That is it.

Mr. PICKLER. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK].

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, some of the citizens of the State which I in part represent are interested in these claims and I desire to refer to one or two points in connection with them.

Section 3 of the act under which these claims are prosecuted provides what the petition shall state. I have had occasion to examine the pleadings in two cases filed in the Court of Claims, and each of the petitions states the jurisdictional facts, among them the fact of citizenship. This fact, like all the other facts, was denied. That was then one of the issues in the case. Whether evidence was offered on that particular issue or not I can not say, not having been present at the trial; but I presume there was such evidence in most of these cases.

Section 7 provides that the judgment when rendered shall be final unless appealed from or unless opened on account of fraud or mistake. If these judgments are not appealed from they are presumed to be conclusive, unless there is fraud. Of course it is conceded that if there is fraud or any well-grounded suspicion of fraud, payment should be deferred until that matter can be investigated. But I say that payment should not be passed over on mere suspicion of fraud; and according to the evidence in the case and the contention that has been made here, that is all that exists in a great majority of cases. In but a few cases there has been even a suggestion of fraud.

There has been a bare suspicion of fraud possibly in a few more cases. Then the committee asks to have all of the cases passed over this session and no appropriation made for the payment of any of them because of this mere suggestion of fraud as to some few and the bare suspicion of fraud as to a few others. Now, we say that is wrong. We claim that there ought to be at least a sufficient amount appropriated to pay the judgments the Attorney-General may certify as he goes along in the investigation, if he finds them to be correct. This question of fraud can not exist in many of the cases.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BRODERICK. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am perfectly willing, whether you appropriate fifty thousand, a hundred thousand, or five hundred thousand dollars to meet these claims, to pay that sum; but under all of the circumstances I say the money should not be paid—none of it should be paid—at this time; that a proviso should be enacted to the provision and the inquiry made by the Attorney-General, and payment withheld until that is completed, and the committee and Court of Claims have found that there is no ground for a new trial under section 1088.

Mr. BRODERICK. I say if there is well-grounded suspicion that ought to be done and the claim investigated; but if there is only a bare suspicion, it is wrong to withhold the money and force the honest claimants to wait until the suspected claims are examined. Now, one of the suggestions of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and others, I think, meets the case very clearly, that at least one-half of the money should be appropriated, and the claims found to be correct in all particulars should be certified and paid as the investigation proceeds. There is no reason why these parties should be kept waiting after their claims shall have been ascertained a second time to be correct.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the claim is fraudulent, why pay any part of it? If it is not fraudulent, why not pay all?

Mr. BRODERICK. That will be done finally when the investigation is made of all the cases. But what I am claiming now is that there ought to be one-half of the money appropriated to meet these claims; so that those that are found to be correct may be paid at once as the investigation progresses. That, I think, will be satisfactory to the claimants and to the representatives of the claimants upon this floor, and is only a matter of right and justice to the claims that are not fraudulent or suspected.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, on the 19th day of May, 1796, nearly one hundred years ago, the Congress of the United States enacted a law which provided, that citizens or other persons suffering loss of property by Indian depredation should have indemnification; but in the mean while they should refrain from seeking vengeance through their own hand, and that as a penalty if they should pursue the despoiler of their property and seek redress by force, in that event all compensation should be cut off by the General Government.

That was done in order to preserve harmony and peace between the earlier settlers and the Indians. For nearly seventy-five years that provision remained as the law of the United States; and for every dollar of property depredated upon by Indians, the Treasury of the United States paid without any recourse to Congress at all.

There was no question then raised, such as had been raised here in these latter days, as to quibbling and quarreling in regard to honest claimants, whether they should be paid their just dues after their claims had been adjudicated by the proper tribunal. That continued to be the law until 1859, when an amendment was enacted which provided that as to further payments from the Treasury of the United States, none should be made except from annuities due the Indians, and that continued to be the law until 1870, when the entire law was repealed except as to the guaranties of final indemnification by the Government of the United States to the claimant or loser of property, and that indemnification is still found at this time on the statute books of the United States.

In 1885, coming down to a later date, Congress provided that the Secretary of the Interior should make an examination as to all claims on file in his Department, and for the first time in the history of the Government an appropriation was made in order that he might carry out the spirit as well as the letter of the law. From that day, to March 3, 1891, the Interior Department has investigated these claims.

Now, upon the question as to the rigid examination that was made at that time, and in answer particularly to the gentleman from Illinois, who speaks with regard to these claims being "kicked from pillar to post" during the past years, let me say that under the practice of the Department and under the law these claims were, when filed, all submitted to the Indian agent of the Indians charged with the depredation. They were especially committed to the council of the Indians, and the Indian testimony was taken in the investigation, the Indians being asked if they had any special knowledge of any facts going to show whether the depredation was committed, or know of any facts connected with the depredation, and the value or amount of property as charged by the claimant.

The result of that investigation was returned to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Subsequently he submitted the case to a special agent, who was under a salary or a per diem, and that agent went to the community and ascertained as to the veracity of the claimant, as to his general standing in the community, as to the value of property of like character to that destroyed at that particular time and place. He went around among the community. He was more than anything else a detective on the part of the Government of the United States; and if he found a man who was more willing to testify adversely to the claimant than otherwise, that was the individual whom he preferred as against others more impartial. So that the result was that the claim as filed by the claimant was as a general thing cut down from 50 to 75 per cent below the amount claimed.

Then the Commissioner passed upon his report. Not only that, but the Secretary of the Interior revised or reviewed the findings and recommendations of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The late Secretary of the Interior, Gen. Noble, has told me that often he sat in his room until the hour of midnight examining questions involved and facts as to the value or amount of property in controversy in these Indian depredation claims; and often he too would cut down or reduce the allowance of the Commissioner.

Now, these allowances were all prepared, and under the act of March 3, 1885, they were sent to this Congress, year after year, by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Committee on Indian Depredation Claims was formed, and that committee, when it met, found confronting it over 4,000 Indian depredation claims, submitted to it by the Secretary of the Interior. That committee found that it was utterly impossible for any single committee during any one session, or during many sessions, to do justice to these claims; and the result was that the Secretary of the Interior, as well as the committee, recommended that Congress should adopt such a system for the final adjudication of these claims as would forever end this question.

In the Forty-ninth Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs submitted to the House a proposition involving the final settlement of these claims, which I think was a recommendation for the formation of a commission to sit and finally determine the amounts between the Indians, the Government, and the claimants. In the Fiftieth Congress the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims submitted another proposition. The chairman of the committee at that time was the late Senator from Tennessee, Gen. Whitthorne, a very careful gentleman, a man of the highest integrity, painstaking, able, and industrious. That committee came in with a unanimous report proposing the establishment of a court of Indian depredation claims.

Then the final culmination of this proceeding was in the Fifty-first Congress, that able, that patriotic, that Republican and public-spirited Congress, which had the courage of its convictions, which was ready to take issues as it found them, and to settle them regardless of the consequences—a Congress whose acts will be a monument for future ages with pleasure to gaze upon. By a vote of 133 to 24 a bill passed this House providing for a court of Indian depredation claims. It went to the other Chamber, and there it was amended so as to submit all these claims to the Court of Claims. In that other body the word "amity" was inserted against the protest of the House conferees. Property destroyed by Indians in amity or at war should be paid for.

A provision was inserted in the bill, which is now the law, that as to all those claims which had been so industriously adjudicated by the Department of the Interior, through the machinery which I have described, through the council of Indians, in consultation with the Indian agents, and all the way through to the elaborate examination given by the Secretary himself, that as to those findings they should be regarded as prima facie correct, and that unless either the claimant or the United States by its Attorney-General should elect to reopen such allowance, that that judgment based upon it should be final. And in order that these claims might not be shuttlecocked from Congress to the Departments, and from the Departments back again, as was usually the history of these claims, there was inserted in the law this provision:

SEC. 7. That all judgments of said court shall be a final determination of the causes decided and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned—as is being done so often with judgments from the Court of Claims—unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said court, or the judgment reversed or modified upon appeal as hereafter provided.

And furthermore, as an additional precaution, in order that these judgments should not come to Congress and undergo another series of delays, it was provided that they should be transmitted direct to the committee room and placed in the hands of the chairman of the committee, in order that they might have immediate consideration.

This was the clause in regard to that:

SEC. 8. That immediately after the beginning of each session of Congress the Attorney-General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress of the United States a list of all final judgments rendered in pursuance of this act in favor of claimants and against the United States, and not paid as hereinbefore provided, which shall thereupon be appropriated for in the proper appropriation bill.

Now, sir, all that was done, and it was hoped and believed by the expectant claimants that at last justice would be done them. Many of them have become octogenarians, bent over and gray-headed, and many more have passed beyond the vale, never to return. I say it was expected and they confidently believed that at last the Government would be honest toward these long-deferred claims, and that justice would be done after the elaborate machinery of the Government, such as I have described, had performed its functions and after the aggregate due from the Government on these claims had been reported.

Now, again, particularly in reply to the remarks of my genial friend, the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON of Illinois], as well as the present chairman of the committee, who referred to these claims as being "railroaded through," I desire to say this, with all due deference to each of those gentlemen and to their high standing in our esteem as men of discretion, and I challenge them to a denial, that none of them have ever examined the facts upon which the Secretary of the Interior finally reached his conclusion and which was the basis of the judgment of the Court of Claims.

You talk about these claims being "railroaded through." I say that that very assertion itself shows upon its face that the gentlemen who make that assertion do not know what they are talking about. Why,, sir it is provided by the act of March 3, as I said before, that these allowances of the Secretary of the Interior, so carefully considered, should be final unless the claimant or the Government of the United States should elect to reopen them. Now, sir, the claimants did not elect to reopen them; but the evidence is all there.

I want to say again, in reply to the main objection made by the gentleman, that these claims were founded on evidence that established the jurisdictional facts. I want to make this statement without fear of contradiction, because I say to you, my associates upon this floor, that that is the whole question upon which the Committee on Appropriations propose to reduce this appropriation $544,000—that only those persons were permitted to have allowances who were citizens of the United States. I want to say, gentlemen, being somewhat familiar with the details of these rigid investigations, that among the very first questions suggested on the part of the Government agents, by the special agent or the ordinary Indian agent, was: "Are you a citizen of the United States?"

If the party answered that he was a naturalized citizen, the proof of naturalization was required to be submitted. Then the next proposition was that these parties were required to prove that the Indians were not in "amity with the United States." One of the main questions submitted on the examination was as to whether the tribe was in treaty relations with the Government. "Treaty relations with the Indians" has been used as a synonymous term with "in amity," and that has been the case ever since 1796, or for nearly a hundred years, in Department practice upon this question.

Now, gentlemen, talk again about "fraud!" I desire to make a third assertion; and I wait for a reply if I am not correct in my statement, and that is this: That in no court of any State of this Union, not even in the Federal courts, are claims so minutely examined, I may say so unjustly examined for the claimants, as are the claims filed in the Court of Claims. If there is any gentleman who proposes to deny this, let him speak now, for I have the evidence here. Nothing speaks so strongly as the percentage of judgments rendered as compared with original claims sued for. Go into the records of jury trials, go into the records of any of the nisi prius courts of any State, and go into the records of judgments rendered by the United States courts, and you will not find in any of them a greater percentage of disallowances and reductions and judgments against the claimants than you will find in the records of the Court of Claims.

Why, in order to convince you gentlemen, take the records of the Interior Department, look at the figures, and then reflect a moment. Of the $4,832,861 of claims examined by the Interior Department do you know what have been allowed? Look at those figures, and then you will have the answer hereafter to any charges as to whether or not there was any indiscretion or any indifference on the part of the Interior Department. Four million eight hundred and thirty-two thousand eight hundred and sixty-one dollars of claims were reduced to $1,441,927. I can place myself on the witness stand and say that I know of my own knowledge of property destroyed by the Indians, and one case of property belonging to one of my neighbors, cut down to 50 per cent of its just and meritorious value; but in order that he might get something on his loss of property he was willing to take the beggarly sum the Secretary of the Interior allowed, and which the Court of Claims has passed to judgment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to state in that connection that I understand that a number of claims from Texas have been cut down in the same proportion without any proof being offered on the part of the Government to show that the claims as originally presented were not just.

Mr. HERMANN. I am familiar with some such cases myself.

Mr. TAWNEY. The same is true as to cases in Minnesota.

Mr. HERMANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, of the original sum claimed in 895 cases, involving $3,396,007, there was passed to judgment in favor of the claimants only $1,030,000. Is not that most striking evidence of the great care and discretion exercised in the examination of these claims when only 27.88 per cent of the claims presented are allowed?

I have referred heretofore to the cases allowed by the Secretary of the Interior and upon which judgments were rendered. The aggregate coming from the Secretary of the Interior was $1,514,000. Those were cut down by the Court of Claims to $914,000. They are called preferred claims; but as to the nonpreferred claims, which had not passed the scrutiny of the Department of the Interior, and of which the Court of Claims took original jurisdiction, and an examination of which was entered into by their special agents and by the Attorney-General on the one part and by the claimants on the other, what are the facts? Those cases presented a face value of $470,817.

Now look at the reductions which have been made on these nonpreferred claims. They were reduced to $97,749, or only 20.76 per cent of the face value of the claims presented. Do you want the court to cut these claims any lower than that? If you were disposed to be honest, generous, and just to the public creditors, you certainly would not demand that the court should give these claimants less than they have given them. We appropriated about half a million dollars two years ago on such judgments. Congress has paid over $1,315,000 by various special acts since 1860 and over $448,000 have been paid from annuities. A bill to pay all the allowances of the Interior Department passed this House in the Fiftieth Congress. The highest obligation exists to pay these claims. It is the duty of Government to protect the property of the citizen. The United States invited these claimants to go upon the frontier; it extinguished the Indian title; it sold to the settler the lands; it erected fortifications to protect him, but it failed; it withdrew the Indians into reservations, which were places of refuge for the savage. Then it undertook to guard the settler and to protect him. If any victim of the Indian's depredation had pursued him for the recovery of the stolen property or to punish him or to obtain indemnity, the law forbade pursuit within the reservation refuge. All remedy was cut off. His despoiler could laugh defiance at him. The Government did not come to his relief. The test now is: Will the Government, through us, the Representatives of the people, vindicate the law of indemnity to these claimants and compensate them? or, should we confirm the general belief that this law is a delusion and a fraud, and that it is on the statute books merely to deceive and to please and then to disappoint and betray? I enter my earnest protest here and now against such an outrage. Have we forgotten who are these people? They were the pioneers of this nation, the last of their race. The pioneer has performed his mission, and we shall only read of him hereafter in history. He blazed out the way for civilization and empire to follow. He it was who first planted the flag of his country in the remotest places. He subdued the forest and reclaimed the desert places. He overcame the hostile and resisting savage, and he introduced social order, peace, and mutual confidence. In his struggle with these fierce obstacles he often carried his life in his hands. Self-sacrifice, deprivation, and suffering were most often his lot. He was the advanced guard of his nation. Often in our history were we indebted to his stubborn occupancy, for the acquisition of rich and expansive territory which now forms great States and which contributes to the public Treasury enormous wealth. Especially is this credit due the pioneers of the Pacific coast, not only of California but especially of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. Under the treaty of joint occupancy the rapid emigration of American settlers there soon determined a question fraught with war, and which all over the nation inspired the patriotic cry of "Fifty-four-forty, or fight!" Now, you are asked to say whether these deserving people, whose very sacrifices led to your greatness and wealth as a nation, shall be ignored in their demands or whether our plighted faith and our repeated promises in the law shall be redeemed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERMANN asked and obtained unanimous consent to occupy three minutes more.

Mr. HERMANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, permit me, in conclusion, to say that there is too much disposition on the part of representatives of the people of this country when they reach this Hall to consider every claim that comes before Congress as dishonest. Sir, it is an unjust and a discreditable view to take. Look at the appropriations that we have been making! Look at the reductions that have been coming into this House. Everything has to be cut down for political effect in order that the chairman of the committee——

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I should not have given consent to extend the gentleman's time if I had understood that he would use it to make a statement of that kind. It is absolutely untrue that I or the Committee on Appropriations have cut down appropriations for purposes of political effect.

Mr. HERMANN. Permit me to say this, then that an outsider, looking at the justice of these claims and the critical care with which they have been examined and passed upon, would naturally conclude that there must be some motive for leaving them out of an appropriation bill, and it would look to an outsider as if you were all aiming and striving to get through a small appropriation bill with which to go before the country, leaving behind us and ignoring our just obligations to people to whom the Government is indebted.

Look at the river and harbor bill; $38,000,000 recommended by the Secretary of War as indispensably necessary for the water ways of this country, and the amount cut down to $9,500,000! Look at the Pension Office, where the Commissioner recommends an appropriation of $500,000 to expedite the examination of pension claims in order that those gray-headed veterans may receive something of what is due them before they sink to their final rest, and then look at the exhibit which this Appropriations Committee make before the country! You do not find this demagogic cheese-paring policy under a Republican Administration.

I say that we ought to rise above these considerations. We should seek to find what is due to the creditors of the Government and we should pay them, and if there is not money enough in the Treasury to pay them, this country is rich and able enough to find the money to pay its debts. As to these claimants, I fear that only a few of them will remain on earth long enough to receive the beggarly pittance which has been awarded them upon their claims. In the meantime let us rise, sir, to the dignity of real representatives of the people and look to justice and justice alone, and let policy take care of itself.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS].

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, the discussion here this afternoon has certainly disclosed the fact that the position of a member of the Committee on Appropriations of this House is no sinecure. According to the rules of the House, to that committee is assigned the duty of recommending the appropriations that are necessary for the support of the various Departments of the Government. It is a committee composed of gentlemen of both political parties; and I believe from my observation of the action of those gentlemen that they have not been controlled by politics, but that there has been an earnest attempt on their part to bring honest bills before this House; and this item is recommended by gentlemen of both parties on that committee, without a dissenting voice.

The gentleman from Oregon has said that it is the duty of the Attorney-General to certify to the Committee on Appropriations what appropriations should be made for these judgments rendered by the court. I say to him that in certifying these judgments the certification was accompanied with certain recommendations which excited the caution of the committee; and any gentleman who will read the hearings before the committee must come to the conclusion that this caution was justified. Let me read from Mr. Howry's testimony. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] puts to him this question:

Is it your opinion that the appropriation should be suspended until you can lay your finger on those which ought to be paid and those which ought not to be paid?

Mr. HOWRY. Yes, sir.

If gentlemen will read this statement through they will find that this gentleman stood in a very peculiar position, such as to indicate that the committee ought to be cautious. As a lawyer he could not speak against his brother lawyers; as an officer of the court, he could not point suspicion to the court. But he said enough to convince men of both sides on the committee that it was their duty to investigate these judgments to the full extent of the law before making appropriations for their payment.

The committee does not come before this House saying that these judgments are fraudulent. They say that the indications which have been made to them show it is necessary that they should have more light upon this subject before recommending to the House an appropriation. What they ask is that $10,000 be appropriated so that the investigation can be made.

And how much additional time is required for this investigation? Simply the interval between now and the next session of Congress. I do not believe that gentlemen who advocate overriding the Committee on Appropriations mean to go before the country and insist that this House should make an appropriation where there is a shadow of doubt as to its propriety.

In the action we propose we are only taking advantage of the two years given us by the statute. And I claim that the Attorney-General should be placed in such a position as will enable him to make a proper examination, so that all doubt may be removed when the question next comes before the Committee on Appropriations. It is not a pleasant thing for the committee to stand in their present position. They should be sustained, I submit, in the attitude of caution they have assumed. We know that there are attempted raids upon the Treasury in all directions; and this committee stands as a bulwark against such attacks and in defense of the public interests. We should be sustained.

Our motives should not be impugned. We should not be told that our action is intended for political effect. It would be easier politics for us to admit every claim coming before us. It would be easier for us personally to do so. But I ask gentlemen of the House to accept this amendment which our chairman offers, whereby $100,000 can be appropriated to meet such claims as may be found not to be tainted in any respect; and when this matter comes before Congress again at the next session, I hope it will be found that every one of these claims is correct, so that the money can be appropriated without violence to our duty as members of the committee or of the House.

Mr. SAYERS. I have prepared an amendment which I believe will be satisfactory to most of the members. I have spoken with gentlemen representing these claimants, and they express themselves as satisfied with it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment pending.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the amendment which I first offered, and move this as a substitute for the original clause.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit this amendment before submitting that of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of judgments of the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases in the order in which they are certified to Congress in Senate Executive Document No. 7 of this session, Parts I and II, $100,000, or so much as may be necessary to pay and discharge such judgments as have been rendered against the United States after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations" shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act; and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian service: Provided, That no one of said judgments shall be paid until the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has caused to be examined the evidence heretofore presented to the Court of Claims in support of said judgment and such other pertinent evidence as he shall be able to procure as to whether fraud, wrong, or injustice has been done to the United States, and finds upon such evidence no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a new trial of said case, or until there shall have been filed with said Secretary of the Interior a duly certified transcript of the proceedings of the Court of Claims denying the motion made by the Attorney-General for a new trial in any one of said judgments.

For the defense of Indian depredation claims, which shall include the investigation and examination under the direction of the Attorney-General, of judgments of the Court of Claims rendered under the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations" which have not been appropriated for, $10,000, which sum shall continue available until expended. And the Attorney-General shall report to Congress at its next regular session all of said judgments concerning which, in his opinion, after such investigation and examination there is no evidence, cumulative or otherwise, that any fraud, wrong, or injustice has been done to the United States.

Mr. SAYERS. I trust that this amendment may be accepted by the committee. It is fair to both sides. It protects the Government and at the same time it enables the Treasury Department to pay such of these judgments as may be found to have been obtained without fraud or injustice to the Government. It provides also that the judgments remaining unpaid shall be reported to the next session of this Congress.

My opposition to the payment of these judgments at this time does not arise from any hostility to the judgments themselves per se; but inasmuch as a good deal has been said, coming from reliable sources, to the effect that some of these judgments are tainted with fraud and injustice to the Government, the Committee on Appropriations unanimously concurred in reporting the clause which appears in the bill.

Now, I have offered the amendment as a compromise between those who claim the entire amount of the judgments and those who think no appropriation should be made at the present time or in the future until the judgments have been carefully examined and reported upon.

Mr. QUIGG. What is the entire amount involved?

Mr. SAYERS. Something over $500,000.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas whether fraud is alleged against the claim of Cyrus F. Goddard, one of the cases referred to in this report of the Attorney-General?

Mr. SAYERS. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say that I know nothing of any special cases. We have not had time to examine them in detail except in one or two instances.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. The Attorney-General certifies these claims for an appropriation. Now, we send them back to the same official. Suppose he certifies that they should not be paid, where would it leave us?

Mr. SAYERS. The Attorney-General only reported the judgments as having been rendered; he has expressed no opinion as to their validity.

Mr. McMILLIN. He has not examined them.

Mr. SAYERS. I presume not.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he goes over every case.

Mr. SAYERS. I am speaking of those who administer the affairs of the Department of Justice now.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman that it is the duty of the Attorney-General to certify these cases for payment under the law, as I understand, irrespective of what he himself may believe of them, or irrespective of what he may believe after the judgment has been rendered by the court.

Mr. SAYERS. That is correct.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Has not the Attorney-General a right under the law to file a bill in equity to purge them of fraud or set aside a judgment in cases where fraud is proved?

Mr. SAYERS. He can do so under the statute.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Has he taken such steps in these cases?

Mr. SAYERS. My information is that he has not.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Why?

Mr. SAYERS. He has not done it because he has had neither the time nor the money to ascertain the facts on which to authorize the Court of Claims to reopen the case.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think that is correct.

Mr. SAYERS. That is the reason we propose now to appropriate $10,000 to ascertain whether there are any facts which would justify the reopening of the cases.

Mr. PICKLER. Then you furnish him under this appropriation with sufficient force to make the investigation?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, as he himself estimates.

Mr. HERMANN. Has the gentleman provided that such claims as are certified back to the next Congress are to be certified in the order in which they are reviewed?

Mr. SAYERS. That certification applies to the payment of the $100,000——

Mr. HERMANN. I understand that; but in what order?

Mr. SAYERS. And, speaking for myself only, if the Attorney-General should certify the judgments back to Congress in the next session, saying that he has no fault to find with them, then I should be in favor of paying them at once.

Mr. HERMANN. But the gentleman does not catch my point. Suppose he certifies back two hundred thousand of these judgments and you appropriate only one hundred thousand to pay them. I submit it would be unfair to pick up here and there some favorite claimant and pay him, and let the others wait.

Mr. SAYERS. But he will certify all the judgments which he believes to be untainted.

Mr. HERMANN. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. And when they are certified the appropriation will be made.

Mr. HERMANN. But how will they be certified, in the order in which they are reviewed?

Mr. SAYERS. I presume so.

Mr. PICKLER. You offer this as a substitute for all the pending amendments?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; and I ask the committee to adopt it.

Mr. PICKLER. All right, let us have a vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before that, let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Is this examination to be made by the Attorney-General of the United States and his assistants?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Was it not the duty of the Attorney-General and his assistants to defend the United States before the Court of Claims in these judgments?

Mr. SAYERS. That was the case, but——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). Now, do you not provide for a certification of these judgments by the same officer whose duty it was to defend the United States in the rendition of the original judgments?

Mr. BAILEY. The same office, but different officers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But it is the same office.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; and after certain occurrences took place which cast a suspicion——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I should like to ask if these facts, upon which the information is based, developed since the judgments were rendered?

Mr. SAYERS. Since the judgments were rendered.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois such time as he wants.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should not have said anything if it had not been for the query of the gentleman from Tennessee. I want to say again, as I said before, that I am in harmony with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations upon this proposition, and the amendment now proposed, which appropriates $100,000—and I do not care whether it is $100,000 or whether it is $500,000—contains in it a provision that not a cent of money shall be paid until the Attorney-General, utilizing the $10,000 provided for that purpose, had made inquiry as to whether he can find facts that will warrant a motion for a new trial under section 1088 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In a minute. I do not know whether any of these judgments can be reopened on a motion for a new trial, but I do know that after an investigation made by a committee at the other end of this Capitol they report such facts and circumstances as cast suspicion on eight or ten of these judgments and suggest other facts as tending to cast suspicion upon some of the others, they do not know which, and I do not know which; and upon that bare statement, as a member of Congress, without casting blame upon any official of this Government, I say it brings me to suggest a halt, and I am ready to say there should be an investigation before the money goes out of the Treasury. This amendment does it. All else that has been said by way of allegation against the action of the Committee on Appropriations, all of declamation, all of accusation that is outside of this exact point, is mere leather and prunella.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this—I have no interest in this except to do right in the matter as nearly as I can. I want to know if it was not the duty of the Department of Justice to have done exactly what the gentleman now wants them to do before these cases went to judgment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, certainly; but Congress in its wisdom years ago, almost before the gentleman and I came into public life, enacted section 1088 of the Revised Statutes, knowing how frail human testimony is, how prone to fraud and mistake and injustice even the proceedings of the court are when based upon testimony where proper defense from any cause has not been made, and providing that at any time within two years the Court of Claims may grant a new trial where injustice or fraud or wrong operates, in that particular judgment, against the United States. Now, in an abundance of caution, this $10,000 enables the Attorney-General to investigate, touching each case, and to make his motion, if a motion will lie and the facts exist, to sustain it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman wish to offer a substitute?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just a substitute, and to have a vote on it. I do not wish to consume a moment's time. This substitute expresses my idea of what ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments have been offered so promiscuously that it is almost impossible for the Chair to keep the run of them. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota is the pending amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota that he withdraw his amendment. Mine covers the point.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will consider all amendments prior to the last one offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] as withdrawn. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1, on page 62, add the words:

"And $300,000 is hereby appropriated, to be applied in payment, as far as it may go, on the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, as set out in Senate Executive Document No. 82, as follows: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, if said sum be sufficient, all judgments of said court, in such cases, within six months after the passage of this act, unless before that time the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that certain judgments, naming them, are probably fraudulent, and that the same are under investigation by the Judiciary Department. If said sum be not sufficient to satisfy in full the judgments not so certified by the Attorney-General, the sum shall be applied pro rata on such judgments."

Mr. SAYERS. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. COFFEEN].

Mr. COFFEEN. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the proposition now offered in the amendment of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYERS] is not only well designed and calculated to do justice to all interests involved, but is eminently fair, and under the circumstances I shall support it.

Mr. SAYERS. You are referring to the amendment offered by me.

Mr. COFFEEN. I refer to the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYERS], and I shall support that amendment. I believe we must at all times have in view not only the interests of our constituents, but, above all, the interests of the Government. But notwithstanding the statement I have just made, I wish it understood—and have asked this brief time in order that it may be understood—that our people in Wyoming have a deep interest in this question, and can not yet come to the conclusion that there is such a large proportion of fraud as such a reduction of the appropriation from the entire amount would seem to indicate.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen, I know nothing about the character of these claims; I know nothing about the character of any of these claimants. I am told that some of these claims pertain to citizens of the State which I represent. I am also informed that in contested cases arising between citizens of the United States the matter has been referred to the Court of Claims, organized by the National Legislature for the purpose of determining controversies of that kind; that judgments have been rendered in favor of the claimants, and that the counsel for the defendant, the United States, has been the Attorney-General.

I never yet knew a lawyer who was worsted in a case who believed that he was rightly worsted; and I attach no importance whatever to the individual opinion of the attorney for the defense who comes before the committee, or before any other body, and says that the judgment in the case which he unsuccessfully defended was wrongfully rendered. I would now ask what tribunal we are going to constitute to revise the judgment of the tribunal we have already constituted? Is the Assistant Attorney-General, the attorney for the defendant, a proper court of appeals against a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in which he was the attorney for the defendant?

I say there is no right, no justice, in this kind of procedure, and there is no termination of such proceedings. There should be good faith, which is too often denied by the United States to claimants. It is against its justice and its liberality of judgment. I think that a claim once ripened into judgment should be promptly and honestly paid; and I am opposed to any of these amendments which propose anything whatever beyond a final and ultimate payment in full of every judgment by the Court of Claims, and with equal earnestness I shall stand and vote that they shall be paid as rendered in this case.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota, the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon, and the original amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be considered as withdrawn, and the question will be stated upon the amendment now proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLER. With a chance to vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will first be taken on that, as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw my amendment, then.

Mr. HERMANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERMANN. As the gentleman has withdrawn his point of order, is not the whole open for amendment, and would not my amendment first be in order to be voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Oregon was offered as a substitute for the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HERMANN. So far as my amendment is concerned, that being the construction of the Chair, I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. All amendments will be considered as withdrawn except the one offered by the gentleman from Texas, for which a substitute is offered by the gentleman from Arizona. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I believe the bill has been completed, and I am under promise to the gentleman from South Dakota that I will yield twenty minutes to him, and at the end of which time I will move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota shall be granted twenty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would like to say to the chairman of the committee, before that is put, that I do not wish to interfere with the arrangement, but I will say to the chairman of the committee that, in justice to my people, whom I am attempting to represent here, that sickness in my family kept me away from this House on Saturday, and I think my fellow-members will bear me out in the statement that I am usually here, but I was kept away by a very important matter, and I wish to ask, before the final passage of this bill, for unanimous consent to offer one amendment. For no other reason than that which I have given would I trespass upon the time of the committee or upon this House. I would rather that I should have an opportunity to do that now, before the gentleman proceeds.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may have an opportunity to offer an amendment. I will say to the gentleman that I recognize the position in which he is placed, and do not wish to prevent him from offering his amendment if I can have unanimous consent that he will offer his amendment and let the committee vote upon it. The Committee on Appropriations have carefully examined the matter and they have reported the clause about which he complains.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wish to say in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that I am perfectly willing. I only want the committee to know the facts. I ask that the debate be limited so far as I am concerned to four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all on page 37 after line 18, and insert:
"To pay to the Territory of Arizona for keep of Indian convicts sentenced to the Territorial penitentiary by the courts of that Territory under the acts of March 3, 1885, and March 3, 1889, $29,729."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, when I explain that amendment I am sure that no gentleman here will oppose it. By an appropriation bill passed in 1885, at the date of the first act mentioned in the amendment, it was provided—for so the Supreme Court held in construing it—that the Territories of the United States had to take cognizance in their own courts of offenses committed by Indians charged with crime, even though the crime were committed on the Indian reservations. That threw on the struggling people of the Territories the entire expense of dealing with these Indian offenders.

There was no law permitting the Government, there is no law now permitting the Government, to confine these offenders anywhere except in the Territorial prisons. Under the law we have tried various Indians for murder and for other crimes committed on the Indian reservations. Our sheriffs did the arresting; our counties paid for their incarceration and for their trial, although the offenses were purely Federal offenses, so that if they had been committed by white men the United States would have borne the expenses of the arrest, trial, and conviction of the offenders.

If I had killed a man on a reservation I would have been a Federal prisoner, and the United States would have had to pay the expense of my incarceration and trial; and by the appropriation bill last mentioned in the amendment it was provided that thereafter the expense of these trials should be audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury and paid out of the money for similar expenses in the trial of criminal cases in the courts of the United States which made it a direct claim against the Government. I am unable to approve these bills, as well as those which must periodically follow them, and to recommend their payment from the Treasury, in the absence of some provision in the statutes more clear and specific than any which has yet been pointed out to me.

I have asked this House time and time again to change the jurisdiction of these trials to the Federal courts. I have before me a statement certified by the courts of the actual expense of keeping all these Indian prisoners incarcerated in the Territorial prisons, which expense the citizens of the Territory are taxed to pay. The amount certified is the amount stated in the amendment, $29,729.

The reason that amount seems large is because it costs more to keep prisoners there than it does elsewhere. The amount certified is exactly the amount that we have paid out for the keep of those Indians, the amount that has been taken from our taxpayers and applied to that purpose.

Now, these offenses are matters over which we have no control. They are committed on the reservations of which the United States has entire control, over which we have no jurisdiction, where our officers are not allowed to go, but the offenders are brought and tried in our Territorial courts and sent to our Territorial prisons and kept there at our expense, and then we are told that the Federal Government can not refund the money that we have been taxed to pay year after year for this purpose. I am sure that no member of this committee, now that he knows the facts as I have stated them, can say, from any idea of economy or upon any other ground, that this money is not due and ought not to be paid in this appropriation bill. Without taking up more time, though still desiring to say a good deal more on this subject, I ask this committee to adopt this amendment, because the United States Government certainly owes the Territory this money.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, this matter was before the Committee on Appropriations. It did not come to us in the way of a certification from the Department of Justice or from the Treasury Department. It reached us only, I believe, through a bill introduced by the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These accounts were transmitted from the Attorney-General.

Mr. SAYERS. It reached us only through a bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Arizona, and referred to our committee. The committee thought that the charges made by the Territory of Arizona were very large and ought to be inquired into before Congress should make an appropriation to pay them, and therefore, instead of reporting an appropriation for the amount called for, the committee reported to the House the following provision:

Territory of Arizona: The Attorney-General is authorized and directed to ascertain and report to Congress at its next regular session what amount is equitably due to the Territory of Arizona for maintenance of Indian convicts sentenced to the penitentiary by the courts of that Territory under the acts of March 3, 1885, and of March 3, 1889.

Now, I will say to the gentleman from Arizona and to this committee that after the account is examined and reported to Congress by the Attorney-General an appropriation will be made upon the next general deficiency bill. I can say with absolute certainty that there will be no hesitancy on the part of the committee in reporting an appropriation for such an amount as may be found by the Attorney-General, after careful examination into the account, to be due to the Territory of Arizona, and it does seem to me that sound policy demands that such claims should be investigated before payment is made.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These claims are certified in the manner required by the law—in the same manner as any other account ever rendered to the Attorney-General of the United States for the keep of Federal prisoners. Every account is accompanied with the certification of the chief justice of the Territory. The only issue in the present case is this: If it happens that prisoners have to be kept at a higher price than ordinary, shall the Attorney-General of the United States dictate to this committee or to Congress what amount should equitably be paid when it is shown that not a prisoner can be kept for less than the amount charged, and when every safeguard has been adopted to protect the interests of the Government?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to go into the merits of this claim. I have no doubt that something ought to be paid to the Territory of Arizona by the Government of the United States——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What ought to be paid? I put this question to the gentleman from Texas as a lawyer and a fair-minded man: if the law forces us to keep these prisoners, and we can not help it, and the United States can not help it under the decision which the Supreme Court has put upon the appropriation bill—we do not want the prisoners and are trying to get rid of them, and the Government does not want us to keep them, because it is too expensive—in such a case what is a fair measure of remuneration to us? Is it not exactly what we have to pay for the maintenance of these prisoners?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then there is no question left for discussion.

Mr. SAYERS. There is not an account of a United States marshal, or of a district clerk, or of a commissioner but, before it is paid by Congress, must be sent to the proper officer of the Treasury Department, must be duly passed upon, and certified to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman is making a mistake.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not make a mistake in this statement.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I say this is a different matter. For keep of prisoners, the marshal does not certify.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not mention the keep of prisoners, but I will do so now. Before any appropriation is made by Congress for the maintenance of prisoners, the claimant must go to the Treasury Department or to the Attorney-General, I have forgotten which——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. To the Attorney-General.

Mr. SAYERS. And by the Department of Justice the amount required to be appropriated by Congress in order to meet the expenditure is certified. That is all I am asking in this case. Under the law the Department of Justice can take action in the matter. It has not taken action heretofore. But whenever the Department shall take action and certify this amount to be due to the Territory of Arizona, I think I can say for the Committee on Appropriations that they will not hesitate to recommend its payment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have here a letter from the Attorney-General, in which he says that he does not pay this account because of the extreme expense.

Mr. SAYERS. I will make to the gentleman what I consider a fair proposition. If he desires these accounts to be put in a condition to be paid promptly, I will agree to an amendment that the Attorney-General shall, out of the appropriations made for the maintenance of prisoners, pay such accounts as may be found equitably due to the Territory of Arizona. But I do not wish Congress to make a direct appropriation for a claim which comes to us in such a manner as this.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. This claim comes here squarely and regularly.

Mr. SAYERS. I am not reflecting on the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. This claim comes here as regularly certified as any claim for the keep of prisoners that was ever allowed.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will accept the amendment I have proposed, our difference can be quickly settled.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will accept an amendment providing that the Attorney-General pay whatever may be found equitably due.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will prepare the amendment.

The Clerk (after a pause) read the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Arizona as modified, as follows:

And that the Attorney-General shall pay out of the appropriation for the maintenance and keep of prisoners, such sums as may be found equitably due upon examination to the Territory of Arizona for maintenance of Indian convicts in the Territorial prison.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona as modified will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] now asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] be allowed to address the committee for twenty minutes. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stated last Friday, when he called up this bill, that—

On account of the troubles which have occurred in the Western and Northwestern States, where railroads have been seized and United States marshals have been compelled to interfere and restore possession of the trains, the appropriation for the Department of Justice has been greater than for previous years.

I have no desire to criticise the committee for reporting a bill appropriating a larger amount of money than for previous years for the support of the Department of Justice.

Neither do I care to offer an amendment.

I am fully persuaded that many of these extraordinary expenditures referred to by the chairman have been needlessly, not to say oppressively and wickedly, incurred; but they have nevertheless been incurred under the forms of law by coördinate branches of the Government, and I do not see as we of the legislative branch can do anything else than to foot the bills with the best grace assumable, however extravagant and oppressive they may seem.

I am unwilling, however, to go on record as voting for this extravagant appropriation without giving some explanation other and entirely different from that given by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

That explanation unexplained might leave the impression upon the country that the unlawful conduct of my constituents had caused the increased burdens of taxation which the Administration has imposed upon the taxpayers of the country.

I admit that some expenses have been necessarily and legitimately incurred along the line of the Northern Pacific in North Dakota in caring for Coxeyites from Montana and the Pacific coast while in transit over the State; but I have yet to hear of a citizen of North Dakota in those so-called "armies." The soil of North Dakota is not congenial, nor is the climate conducive to idleness—organized or unorganized.

We have no room for either loafers or drones of any kind who are always hunting for a place or a condition where they can get something for nothing. But to the laboring man who is willing to give a just equivalent, who is willing to practice temperance and self-denial, who is willing to earn his daily bread by the sweat of his brow, we offer an abundance of the best bread in the world.

When the Coxeyites from the Pacific coast, who lately refused work at $1.50 a day in North Dakota, reach Washington, let them pose as statesmen and philosophers out of a job, but not as laboring men seeking employment.

On this subject I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a clipping from the Herald-Advertiser, a newspaper published by Shelby Smith, at Hyattsville, Md.:

The Clerk read as follows:

FROM THE ROWDY WEST.

Here is the way they manage the commonwealers in the wild and wooly West, according to the Fargo (N. Dak.) Forum:

"When the Coxeyites here last week were ordered out, Sheriff Barnes went down among them. He talked like a father and expressed sympathy for men who could not get work. The men felt they had a friend in O. G. and coddled to him. After securing the attention of the weary wanderers the sheriff said to them—being assured they wanted work—that a number of brick blocks were going up in Fargo, and he believed he could get work for every man that wanted it, and he would return in the morning and see what could be done after he had seen the contractors. The men seemed pleased and he left them for the night.

"The next morning Mr. Barnes visited the camp and said he had work at $1.50 per day for every man that would work, and called upon the entire party to come with him. Whereupon they would not come. Some said they were under obligations to unite with their brother commonwealers in the East, and others said 'the wages were too low, and $3 was the least they would work for per day.' Whereupon the sheriff said, 'If you won't work you must git. I will give you until 6 o'clock to-night to get out of the State of North Dakota, and every mother's son I catch here after that will be arrested and put in the chain gang to work on the streets.' This was different from previous interviews, and startled the tramping warriors.

"At 5 o'clock the sheriff went down to the camp and no move had been made by the itinerants. Mr. Barnes stood up on a convenient stump and addressed the multitude to the effect that every man caught on this side of the river after 6 o'clock was destined for the chain gang.

"At 5:30 there was not a man in sight. Men who were offered work and would not have it are not the kind wanted, and the sheriff did right to make them move on. Willing to keep the needy, Fargo has no use for men who refuse work when tendered."

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. That is all I care to say on the general subject of the Coxeyites, or the expenses incurred along the Northern Pacific Railroad. But on account of the similarity of names and the nearness of geographical location there has been confusion in the public mind between the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Great Northern Railroad Company. These expenses incurred for marshals and deputies on the Northern Pacific Railroad were but a mere drop in the bucket as compared to the vast expense incurred on the railroad systems this spring in the Northwest.

The great bulk of the expense was not incurred, however, on account of the Coxeyites, had no connection whatever with them, and was on a road that had no trouble with them. The main expenses for marshals and Federal troops were incurred by the Government of the United States in aid of the Great Northern Railroad in endeavoring to compel the employés of that road to sign a wage scale to reduce their earnings below living wages, and it is to that subject that I desire particularly to address myself.

Like all other enterprises, the earnings of the railroads naturally felt the depression and hard times and fell off. So, last August they very considerably reduced the wage scale of their employés. The employés submitted to the reduction, notwithstanding the fact that the rates for passengers and freights were not reduced.

While a few of the best men had the same amount of employment as before, yet it is true there, as of railroading everywhere, that the trainmen on their trains are paid by the run—by the mile. The trains during this year have been just as long and as heavy and as full of freight as last year, but fewer trains were run and they were not usually started until there was enough for a load; so the earnings to the company for each train were as much as usual.

But the number of hours and the days of labor given to the employés were reduced at least one-half. Nevertheless they submitted to the reduction.

In April an order was issued for a further reduction of wages, and then the men struck. They did it manfully and successfully. It was one of the most remarkable strikes on record in this country, especially remarkable for the law-abiding character and conduct of the men engaged in it. They simply quit work because they could not afford to work at the wages offered. They offered no obstruction to any other laboring men desiring to take their places; and so fair and so honorable was their conduct, and so just their cause, that it appealed to the sense of justice of every business community through which the road passes for 3,000 miles, including loops.

Not only the business men in every town where they took action on the subject, but even the farmers showed their sympathy and their material assistance to these men. At Devils Lake, the storm center of the strike, one farmer brought in three fat beeves and gave them to the strikers. Another hauled 100 bushels of potatoes and gave them to the strikers to live upon until the strike was over.

To illustrate the inconvenience to which the business men were subjected in getting their mails for eighteen days, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a couple of messages, one from the Board of Trade of Michigan City and another from leading business men at Lakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

MICHIGAN CITY, N. DAK., April 18, 1894.

Hon. M. N. JOHNSON, Washington:

Please take some measure to compel Great Northern Railway to furnish mail service. No mail since 14th on account of strike. Employés understand no objections offered by strikers to running of mail trains. Request of Michigan City Board of Trade,

C. B. C. DOHERTY, Secretary.

LAKOTA, N. DAK., April 17, 1894.

Hon. M. N. JOHNSON,
Member Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Can't you take some steps to compel James J. Hill to comply with his Government contract for carrying mails? Have not had mail since last Saturday owing to strike. Although strikers offer to run mail car he refuses unless they will run full trains.

KENT METCALF.
COYLE HARTING.
STERETT BAIRD.
HAGLER KELLEY.
STEARNS JOHNSRUD.
E. T. HUTCHINSON,
Postmaster.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. In this condition of affairs, when laboring men on that road refused to work because they could not live at those wages, and men could not be found who were willing to take their places; when men could not be found who were willing to work at those wages; when men could not be found who were willing to unman themselve and do so disgraceful a thing as to assist the company in their struggle against these men, Mr. Cronin, the United States marshal of that district, swore in a lot of deputies, and went there to Devils Lake to perform the labor of section hands on the railroad, to lay tracks, to spike down rails, and to put in bridges and frogs.

In support of my statement on that point, I send to the Clerk's desk two messages sent by the United States marshal to the attorney for the railroad, reporting the condition of affairs that he found at Devils Lake, and reporting to the attorney for the railroad instead of to the court, stating the conditions of the frogs and the tools at the section house, and all that.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK., April 20, 1894.

W. E. DODGE,
Grand Forks:

Found one frog torn out and taken away, one flat car off tracks, four switches spiked, rods taken away, and 30-foot rail torn from under coach on Driscoll's train and taken away; the section house broken into and all tools taken away. Very few railway men showed up around depot since our arrival. Leave for the West at 9 a. m. Nearly all who have done acts of violence are known.

J. E. CRONAN,
United States Marshal.

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK., April 20, 1894.

W. E. DODGE,
Grand Forks, N. Dak.:

Regan will inform you of my wishes in regard to men coming out on next train. Try to have Hennessy in charge, with a full supply of injunctions.

Don't send less than ten men under any circumstances. Should be fifteen men, if they can be run.

CRONAN.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. On that same subject, showing that the marshals and deputy marshals went there to do the work of section hands, I ask the Clerk to read a clipping from the Minneapolis Tribune, which I send to the desk, the emphasis being on the last line.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN CHARGE OF MARSHALS—THE TRAIN BLOCKADE SUCCESSFULLY RAISED AT DEVILS LAKE.

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK., April 21.

The passengers who have been here since the 14th instant left to-day on the mail train in charge of United States Marshal Cronan and ten deputies. There was no excitement. With one engine pulling and another pushing, Cronan takes the train to the Montana State line. No other trains were moved. The tracks were opened and frogs replaced yesterday by the marshals.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. But this was not enough. The marshals were not sufficient to man the trains and do the work of the railway company, and so the Federal Army had to be sent there. On that subject I ask to have read a telegram from J. M. Schofield, the commander of the Army, to Col. P. T. Swaine, the commander of the Department of Dakota, in which he states that by direction of the President the entire troops at Fort Snelling are instructed to support Marshal Cronan.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Who pays these marshals?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We pay them, in this bill. That is the reason I am complaining. The railroad company ought to have paid them.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1894.

Col. P. T. SWAINE,
Commanding Department of Dakota, St. Paul, Minn.:

By direction of the President, you are hereby instructed to aid United States Marshal Cronan with such military force as may be necessary to enable him to execute process of United States courts now obstructed by forcible resistance beyond the power of United States marshal and deputies to overcome. Put yourself in communication with Marshal Cronan, who will be instructed by the Attorney-General to communicate to you.

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General Commanding.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I also ask the Clerk to read two telegrams from Col. Swaine to the General commanding the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

ST. PAUL, April 28, 1894.

Gen. SCHOFIELD, Washington, D. C.:

Your dispatch of this date directing that military aid be given United States Marshal Cronan is received. I am endeavoring to open communication with him. In the mean time troops at Fort Snelling are being held in readiness.

P. T. SWAINE, Commanding.

[Telegram.]

ST. PAUL, MINN., April 29, 1894.

Gen. SCHOFIELD, Washington, D. C.:

At 10 o'clock last night I received from Grand Forks, N. Dak., a request from United States Marshal Cronan for the district of North Dakota, for at least one hundred and fifty men to aid him, as directed by your instructions of yesterday, so I ordered four companies of the Third Infantry, under command of Maj. Patterson, from Fort Snelling to proceed to Grand Forks for the purpose indicated by your instructions. These troops left this city at 8 o'clock this morning in good shape.

P. T. SWAINE, Commanding.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 23, 1894.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I also ask the Clerk to read another telegram from Gen. Schofield.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1894.

Col. P. T. SWAINE,
Commanding Department of Dakota, St. Paul, Minn.:

From information received here it appears that the only process United States marshal has in his hands in connection with the strike on the Great Northern Railroad, consists of warrants of arrest against certain individuals charged with obstructing the carrying of the United States mails. The troops ought not to be employed merely as constables to help chase and arrest particular persons charged with crime, but only in the case of combinations too powerful to be overcome by a marshal's posse and engaged in resisting the mandates of United States courts.

Instruct your commanding officer to exercise the utmost discretion in this regard, so as not to employ the troops except in such an emergency as that contemplated in your original instructions. Direct the commanding officer of the troops to report frequently the condition of affairs and all action taken by him, which reports you will please forward without delay. It is especially desired that no action of the troops shall tend to aggravate the difficulty or prevent an amicable adjustment between the contending parties.

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General, Commanding.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 23, 1894.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the House to be allowed to have five minutes in which to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota, These dispatches from the War Department state the history of the hostile expedition sent against the people of North Dakota, until the troops arrived and went into camp, four companies of regulars, in the city of Grand Forks.

From that on there is no official report of their doings. I applied repeatedly to the War Department and asked for the report of Maj. Patterson, who commanded those troops, to show how long they stayed there, what they did, what conditions they found; but there is no such report on file, and none of Gen. Schofield's, the Commander of the Army.

But Mr. Cronan, the Democratic United States marshal, indicated his purpose, as you will see both by his official and unofficial report. I have not time to have both read, and so I ask unanimous consent to have the official report printed, without being read, and his unofficial report, as given in the Minneapolis Tribune, I will read myself.

The official report is as follows:

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to advise you that the strike on the Great Northern Railway has been ended and the employés will return to their posts at once.

This being the case, I am confident the marshal will not meet with any further difficulty or resistance in the service of process issued by the United States courts, as the men will be engaged in the performance of their duties, and the gathering of a mob to resist the marshal is practically impossible.

I desire to extend my earnest thanks to the War Department for their prompt action, and I sincerely believe that this action has been the means of saving bloodshed in the execution of the process of the courts.

Respectfully, J. E. CRONAN,
United States Marshal.

Maj. J. H. PATTERSON,
Commanding First Battalion, Third Regiment,
United States Army, Grand Forks, N. Dak.

Official copy respectfully furnished assistant adjutant-general Department of Dakota, for information of the department commander.

J. H. PATTERSON,
Major, Third Infantry, Commanding Battalion.

[Note in Adjutant-General's Office, June 25, 1894.]

There is no record in this office of any report made by Maj. J. H. Patterson, Third Infantry, of the part taken by his command at Grand Forks, N. Dak., in aiding United States Marshal Cronan. Neither is such a report found to be of record at Headquarters of the Army.

H. C. CORBIN.
Assistant Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 25, 1894.

"Devils Lake," said Marshal Cronan to the Minneapolis Tribune in an interview yesterday, "was the hotbed of the strike in North Dakota. It was the centering place for the disturbing elements from Minot east, and many of them from Grand Forks west. I sent twenty-five deputies there to make arrests. The strikers were armed and declared that no arrests could be made. They ended by running the deputies out of town. The next day I started for Devils Lake with—a determination to arrest the Cavanaugh boys. I walked into a mob of the strikers and announced that I was there for business, and that if they chose to make gun plays they could not do more than to tie me. This had the desired effect, and I arrested the boys without further trouble."

With what? Simply—

That is all the force that was necessary. He sent twenty-five deputies there the day before, and they ran away because, perhaps, they were afraid of the bad-sounding name of the lake; but he went there without any force and without protection, arrested the Cavanaugh boys, and they were brought to Grand Forks and put in jail, and were tried before the United States commissioner. He reported that he found no wrong in these men. I also ask, without reading, to print the account of the trial in the RECORD.

The account is as follows:

[Grand Forks Herald.]

COULDN'T PROVE IT—THE CASE OF JOHN CAVANAUGH, THE DEVILS LAKE STRIKER, HEARD YESTERDAY BY UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER CAROTHERS, WHO PROMPTLY DISMISSES IT—CASE AGAINST MIKE CAVANAUGH ALSO DISMISSED.

The hearing of the cases against John and Mike Cavanaugh, the Devils Lake strikers brought here by Marshal Cronan, attracted quite an audience at United States Commissioner Carothers's office yesterday. T. R. Bangs, although not yet qualified as United States attorney, took charge of the prosecution at the request of District Attorney Camp. Judge Cochrane appeared for the defendants. The case of John Cavanaugh came up for hearing first. The charge was hindering the carrying of United States mails by disconnecting a car at Devils Lake on April 23.

The first witness was Conductor Sands, who testified that the train was disconnected and that he saw the defendant stand with his hand on the coupling lever, but was unable to see whether he was the one who disconnected the train. Sheriff Barton, of Ramsey County, testified as to the arrest of the two men. When the evidence for the prosecution had been completed Judge Cochrane moved that the case be dismissed, and the commissioner promptly dismissed it. On motion of Mr. Bangs, the case against Mike Cavanaugh was also dismissed. The defendants received many congratulations on the outcome of their case. They return to Devils Lake this morning.

Now, I do not object to large expenditures per se. This is a large country, and it is necessary to have large expenditures; but I do object, without any explanation of the fact, when these expenditures for the Department of Justice are larger than ever, that they shall be laid at our doors, when as a matter of fact, whether it was intended for political effect or not, it had political effect. It is generally understood that James J. Hill, the president of the Great Northern Railroad, contributed $50,000 to the Democratic campaign fund, "at a time when calls were many and friends were few," as Mr. Whitney said, at the same time when Mr. J. J. Van Alen contributed his $50,000, which I think they had a perfect right to do.

Mr. Hill is a consistent, lifelong Democrat, and I honor him for giving $50,000. I do not think that it was corrupt or a bargain that he should get help whenever he needed it. But he did get help when he needed it. Now, we are called upon to appropriate $150,000 for pay of marshals and the expenses of sending troops there for the purpose of frightening and intimidating these men into signing a wage schedule below what they could live on. The whole matter in dispute was finally left to the arbitration of the boards of trade of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and they not only decided that the schedule proposed by the company in April should not be made, but that the wage scale of last August should be restored.

Mr. Hill, in accepting the decision of the arbitrators, admitted that he was wrong, and he was trying to perpetrate an outrage upon these laboring men, for their cause was just. Those deputies who ran away at Devils Lake did so because they knew that they were not engaged in a righteous pursuit, and as "The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a lion," so the strikers were bold because they were righteous, and these deputies fled when nobody pursued because they were engaged in a wicked cause. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.
